17. Public act No. 24, to punish acts of interference with foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

18. Public act No. 25, amending the Federal reserve act.

19. Public act No. 26, authorizing condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes.

20. Public act No. 29, appropriating $640,000,000 to increase temporarily the Signal Corps of the Army and to purchase, manufacture, maintain, repair, and operate airships.

21. Public act No. 31, authorizing the United States to take possession of a site for use for permanent aviation stations of the Army and Navy for school purposes.

22. Public act No. 37, appropriating $27,826,150 for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors.

23. Public acts Nos. 38 and 39, enlarging the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission and amending the act to regulate commerce, by authorizing priority shipments by any common carrier, etc.

24. Public act No. 40, appropriating $11,346,400 to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products.

25. Public act No. 41, appropriating $162,500,000 to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

26. Public act No. 43, to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes. This act makes an additional appropriation of $4,021,377,890.92 to extend credit in the United States for foreign governments by purchase of bonds of our allies and expenses incident to preparation of an issue of bonds and certificates; authorizes an additional issue of $4,000,000,000 of bonds to meet loans to foreign governments; authorizes an additional issue of one-year certificates of indebtedness amounting to $2,000,000,000 and an issue of five-year war-saving certificates amounting to $2,000,000,000.

27. Public act No. 45, authorizing the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department in Washington, D. C., at a total cost not exceeding $1,250,000.

28. Public act appropriating $5,356,666,016.93 to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1918 and prior years on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and authorizes contract obligations to be met by future Congresses amounting to $2,401,458,393.50. This is the largest appropriation act passed by this or any other country. This act makes further appropriations for the emergency shipping fund of $635,000,000 and raises the limit of cost to carry out the purposes of the shipping act to $1,734,000,000.

29. Public act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, and appropriates $450,000 to enforce the provisions thereof.

30. Public act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes. This measure provides approximately $2,500,000,000 of revenue with which to pay the expenses of the Government.

31. Public act to provide a military and naval family allowance, compensation, and insurance fund for the benefit of soldiers and sailors and their families, and makes an appropriation therefor of $176,250,000.

This record of achievement speaks for itself.

[2] The $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000, making in all $7,000,000,000, to meet loans to the allies, is reimbursable by the foreign Governments to whom the advances are made.

ADDRESS BY CAPT. R. P. HOBSON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here a copy of an address delivered December 10, 1916, in the auditorium of Columbus, Ohio, by a former Member of Congress. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH DELIVERED BY CAPT. R. P. HOBSON, FORMER MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM ALABAMA, DELIVERED AT THE AUDITORIUM, COLUMBUS, OHIO, DECEMBER 10, 1916.

DESTROYING THE GREAT DESTROYER.

Capt. Hobson spoke in part as follows:

"I wish to thank the chairman for his kind words that I know spring from the promptings of a generous heart, and to thank you, my fellow citizens, for your gracious greeting. I deem it a privilege to be able to confer with so many earnest citizens concerning the greatest moral struggle in history—a world-wide struggle brought to a head by the European war.

BECOME SOBER OR PERISH.

"Destiny seemed to be waiting upon this opportunity. The boom of the first hostile shot had scarcely signaled the presence of the foe without when the voice of modern science startled all the nations by pointing to a deadlier foe within, proclaiming in tones of full authority, 'Become sober or perish.' Instantly every nation worthy to be called civilized turned with grim determination to the task of becoming sober.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION IN RUSSIA.

"Russia promptly adopted and enforced the policy of national prohibition. This policy has now been in force over two years. The result has amazed the world.

"Insurance experts estimate that by being dry Russia is saving more lives than are being sacrificed in the great war.

"With millions of men taken away from productive pursuits, amounting in some localities to more than a third of the working force, nevertheless there is a larger area under cultivation than before the war and a larger yield per acre, a larger output of the industries and a better quality of product. The minister of finance has announced that the producing power of the nation has gone up fully 50 per cent in spite of the war; that instead of aggravating the problem of revenues for the vast expenditures, prohibition has really solved that problem. Certain it is the bank deposits have been growing steadily in spite of the huge drain upon them and savings institutions have flourished as never before, springing up among the peasantry, where they were formerly unknown. Family life, communal life, have been transformed with a new happiness. As the Czar goes through the Provinces the peasant women line the road and kneel as he passes to thank him for banishing drink. A new patriotism has given a forecast of military power and endurance never before realized and of future industrial and commercial prosperity and greatness that have not entered the dreams of the nation and its neighbors.

A COMPLETE VINDICATION.

"The experiences of Russia have been a full demonstration of the wisdom and effectiveness of national prohibition in practical operation.

ENGLAND, FRANCE, GERMANY.

"In England restrictive measures are now in force that are soon to be drastic, and a monster petition has been presented to Parliament, the biggest petition in the history of the Empire, to establish prohibition in the United Kingdom. The nationalization of the liquor trade is under consideration with this end in view.

"In France advance steps have been taken against distilled liquor, and the movement is in full swing for national prohibition.

"Advance measures have been taken in Germany, consumption of liquors have been reduced more than half, while the educational measures taken by the Government are the most advanced of all nations. The German Emperor was the first sovereign to adopt total abstinence for the royal household and to proclaim that the leadership of the future in war and peace alike will rest with the nation which first abolishes beverage alcohol.

"Here in America the prohibition battle front extends from ocean to ocean. The liquor foe has been driven into citadels of the great cities. There are fewer saloons left in 40 States combined than there are in the city of New York. Even these citadels are taking notice. Detroit, of more than three-quarters of a million population, and Kansas City, Mo., have practically voted dry. Now the city of Chicago, the second city of America, one of the great cities of the world, is under seige. We have the period of trench warfare and are fast passing into the last stage of the war.

THE LEADERSHIP.

"The direction and leadership of the operation have fallen upon the Anti-Saloon League of America, conceived and developed in the purpose of harmonizing and uniting all the forces opposed to the legalized saloon, irrespective of any other differences that may exist between them. It does not ask your faith or creed, whether you are Jew or Gentile, Protestant, Catholic, or Mormon; but simply are you against the saloon. It does not ask your politics, whether you are a Democrat or a Republican, a third party Prohibitionist, a Progressive, a Socialist, but simply are you against the saloon; it asks nothing else of you, but are you antisaloon, and if so, then join us in a united warfare for destruction of this common foe of all humanity.

THE ORGANIZED FORCES.

"Under this leadership our forces are now cooperating everywhere. The temperance and prohibition organizations are in harmony as never before. With the recent action of the Protestant Episcopal Church in its quadrennial convention at St. Louis, practically all the Protestant organizations are now in line with the large and rapidly-growing organization within the Roman Catholic Church. To the temperance and uplift forces is being joined the scientific world, the world for advancing the public health and public morals, the legal and judicial world, the transportation world, the world of industry, the labor world, the world for safety and efficiency, the business world, the governments in Army and Navy and civil service.

"When the Anti-Saloon League came upon the scene only two decades ago, less than one-quarter of our people lived in dry territory and only three States had State-wide prohibition. Our temperance organizations and leaders were discouraged.

LOOK AT THE MAP.

"The wet and dry map of January 1, 1893, looks black indeed. The map of January 1, 1908, shows the dawn of a new day of hope. To-day look at the map of December 1, 1916. It is almost white. In the last two years States with over 12,000,000 population have voted State-wide prohibition. In the election just passed State-wide fights were fought in 12 States. In 6 wet States and 6 dry States, for constitutional prohibition, we won 10 victories—Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, and South Dakota going dry; Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Colorado, and Arkansas remaining dry; all with unprecedented majorities. In the two States that failed to go dry, Missouri and California, we cut liquor's former majorities almost in half and shattered the lines, both States giving good majorities dry except for the cities of St. Louis and San Francisco.

"In four States—Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, and Florida—the fight was over the legislatures. We won all four.

THE WILL OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

"Out of our 48 Commonwealths, 23 are now in the dry column and 4 more will soon follow through legislative enactment. It can be said with general accuracy that of our 2,953 counties more than 2,400 have voted dry; that about two-thirds of our population and nearly nine-tenths of our territory have voted dry.

"It is futile as it is un-American to contend that this majority of two to one should not determine the national policy when two-thirds of our electors are on record and in reality a majority of more than five to one of all our adults. No intelligent observer can longer doubt that it is the imperious will of the American people that the legalized liquor traffic shall be abolished through national prohibition. I am convinced that a direct vote on national constitutional prohibition at this time would poll 80 per cent of the qualified votes for prohibition.

SANE AND PRACTICAL METHODS THROUGH ORGANIZATION.

"The Anti-Saloon League is thoroughly organized with more than 700 trained experienced men, 150 well-equipped officers, located in all the important cities of the Nation. Its methods are sane, practical, and effective. It does not affiliate with any political party as such nor promote the fortunes of any citizens, but it calls on all parties and all good citizens to cooperate to destroy the common enemy, the liquor traffic. It realizes that effects are the results of foundation upon the education of the individual citizen on the truth about alcohol, and builds on this foundation already laid by the great Woman's Christian Temperance Union and other organizations, by the public schools, Sunday schools, and pulpits.

"From its headquarters at Westerville, Ohio, it sends out tons of prohibition literature every day, the circulation of its periodicals exceeding 3,000,000 copies per month. It is preparing to print its temperance literature in 18 foreign languages, to reach those citizens in our midst who can not speak our tongue.

It keeps a score of speakers in the field, and is constantly increasing the number to reach every city, town, and hamlet with the spoken word. It maintains a legislative bureau in Washington, and is organizing every doubtful congressional district in the country.

ALL EMBRACING OPERATIONS.

"The Anti-Saloon League is federating all the moral forces, licking them into fighting organizations, and engaging the enemy on every front. In prohibition territory it is demanding respect for the law and enforcement by officers of the law, and is demanding men and money to help in the fight in wet territory. In Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Nevada, the only States where the citizens are not allowed to vote on this question, it is demanding, with the growing power of public opinion, the American right of self-government. When local option is limited to cities and townships, it is conducting fights in these units and demanding the enlargement of the unit. Where the county is the unit, it is fighting for counties and demanding State-wide prohibition through constitutional amendment when practicable.

"I am not here for the purpose of making an authoritative announcement, but I make a forecast.

THE DECISIVE BATTLE OF THE MIDDLE WEST.

"Inside of 12 months Ohio will be dry and Indiana and Illinois will follow in quick succession. This will mark the beginning of the end.

THE BATTLE OF THE WORLD.

"At the last national convention of the Anti-Saloon League in Indianapolis in June by unanimous vote of the convention the national executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League was instructed to bring about a world convention at the same time and place as the conference that will end the European war. At this world convention the temperance and moral forces of all lands will assemble, representing the brotherhood of man, and as the nations cease fighting each other they will be reconciled and brought into a new comradeship, turning against the common foe of all. Harmonious action will be taken in all lands bringing on the great battle of the world that is destined to emancipate humanity.

THE FIGHT FOR AMERICA.

"The primary object of this meeting is to confer with you, my fellow citizens, upon our national fight, and to enlist your cooperation, individual and collective.

POLICY AND GRAND STRATEGY.

"Our national fight is being conducted according to the principles of scientific warfare that insure victory.

"The objective toward which we are pressing from all sides is a prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States. We do not seek a prohibition statute passed by Congress for the good reason that this would result in a prolonged shifting policy. What one Congress does another can undo. Continual fighting and changing back and forth from wet to dry would not afford an opportunity for the young to grow up sober.

"The disease is deep, organic, and the remedy must be organic, with a stable policy permitting a growth process, the manner in which nature effects the cure of an organic disease. We therefore invoke the Constitution, the stable organic law. Evidently the generation that puts prohibition in the Constitution will stand on it and keep it there so the young generation will have a chance to grow up sober.

AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION.

"Control over the Constitution is lodged by that instrument itself in the hands of the sisterhood of States, an amendment requiring for its ratification the affirmative action of the legislatures of three-quarters of all the States, making 36. There are two methods provided by the Constitution for the submission of an amendment to the States, one by action of Congress through a two-thirds majority of both Houses, the other by the action of constitutional convention called by the affirmative action (a constitutional convention called) of the legislatures of two-thirds of all the States, making 32.

"Seventeen amendments have been made to the Constitution, in all of which the initiative was taken by Congress. Following these precedents, we are naturally first seeking action by Congress.

THE DUTY OF CONGRESS.

"When is it the duty of Congress to submit an amendment? When public opinion makes the demand. Has public opinion demanded this amendment?

THE GREATEST PETITION OF ALL HISTORY.

"More than 8,000,000 petitioners have petitioned Congress to submit this amendment, the biggest petition in the history of the world. More citizens have petitioned Congress for this measure than have petitioned Congress for all other measures combined since the foundation of the Government.

"A Member of Congress might oppose ratification by the States, but if he believes in the Constitution he has taken oath to uphold, if he believed in our American system, established by our forefathers, if he believes that we can trust that three-quarters of all the States would not ratify what is wrong or unwise, if he believes that the people of America are capable of self-government and have a right whether directly or through legislatures chosen by them to pass upon vital organic questions which they believe affect their welfare, then he can not justify voting in the face of this monster petition against submitting the Hobson amendment to the States for their action.

STATE RIGHTS.

"The most fundamental of all the rights of the States is the right to amend the Constitution of the United States. The States might reject or they might ratify this amendment, but they now have the right which all true Americans should respect, the right to pass upon it.

POLITICAL PATRIOTISM.

"Since we are not asking Congress to make America dry but only to accord to the American people their rights, and since this question is now at our door demanding to be settled in America as in all other lands, we call on all patriotic citizens to make this issue paramount in choosing Members of Congress and United States Senators, whether in primaries or in general elections. I mean really paramount over any other issue, or over all other issues. I was born and brought up a Democrat. Some of you may have been born and brought up in another party, but all legitimate political parties exist mainly for the purpose of promoting the highest welfare of the Nation. The best way to be a good Democrat and the best way to be a good Republican is to be a good American first. In this crisis let us have a new baptism of patriotism of politics; let us place country above party; let us place humanity above individual or party success.

THE HOBSON AMENDMENT IN THE SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

"The strength of our position before Congress in asking only for a referendum is shown in the result of the vote on the Hobson resolution in December, 1914, although the administration was antagonistic through and through, although the leaders of both parties in Congress were antagonistic, yet we never lost an encounter in the whole parliamentary battle, and in the final vote received 197 votes to 189 against the resolution, a majority of 8. The result electrified the country and sent fear to the heart of the enemy forces, but it was not the necessary two-thirds majority.

THE SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

"The Sixty-fourth Congress, now beginning its second session, will shortly be called on to vote. I do not claim that we shall receive two-thirds majority. My eight years' experience in Congress has taught me how hard it is to get a two-thirds majority on any question when there is an organized opposition. But I do claim that we are going to get a larger majority, and a very much larger majority and its equivalent in the Senate if the resolution reaches a vote in that body, and I do proclaim that with the rising tide of public opinion and the general realization that the question is simply one of referendum, the Members or Senators who violate their obligations to their country and its institutions by voting against the amended resolution will have a harder time in explaining and squaring themselves with their constituencies in this.

OUR FORCES ARE DETERMINED.

"If the Sixty-fourth Congress fails to submit the prohibition amendment, the Sixty-fifth Congress will be called on for an early vote, and if it fails we will make that question paramount in electing the Sixty-sixth Congress, and call for an early vote by that Congress. If the amendment has not been submitted by 1920 we will repeat the process for the Sixty-seventh Congress and will appeal to the national conventions for a special resolution setting forth on behalf of both major parties the duty of Congress to submit the amendment to the States. If the amendment has already been submitted when the convention convenes, but is still unratified, we will call for a resolution in both conventions urging upon the legislatures of the States speedy ratification. As a matter of fact, more than two-thirds of the voters in each of the great parties are in favor of national prohibition, and the control of the two conventions for this purpose is a foregone conclusion. A majority vote in the two conventions will instruct two-thirds majority in Congress.

THE FINAL OUTCOME IS A CERTAINTY.

"If submission by Congress is unduly delayed, we will have recourse to the alternative method by action of State legislatures in calling a constitutional convention. The vote on the Hobson amendment resolution, in the Sixty-third Congress, showed 30 States whose delegations gave us an even split or a majority.

"The 90 per cent of our territory that has voted dry is an index of the attitude of the States. There are 40 States in which we can win the legislatures for this purpose. Thirty-two can call and control the convention, and 36 can ratify its action, and if politicans do not wish to see a constitutional convention called they will do well to hasten the action of Congress. Political manipulation may delay us for a short time, but no power on earth can long prevent the Hobson amendment from becoming a part of the Constitution of the United States. With vigorous enforcement and wise and just reconstruction, America will not only inaugurate a new period in our history but will take the leadership for international action and open up a new era in the life history of the human race.

STRATEGY AND TACTICS.

"As our policy and grand strategy are wise, sound, and sure, so our strategy and tactics are scientific and irresistible.

THE WORDING AND EFFECT OF THE HOBSON AMENDMENT.

"The Hobson amendment does not prohibit a citizen from drinking liquor; it does not prohibit a citizen from possessing liquor for private purposes. No fight by law is made upon the user of liquor; no infringement is made upon a citizen's individual liberty; no invasion of the sanctity of the home. There is nothing sumptuary in this amendment; no attempts made to prescribe to citizens by law what they shall drink any more than what they shall eat or wear. The language of the amendment is plain and clear, the effect is manifest—it prohibits the sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, everything that relates to the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and for these purposes only, without interfering with wine for sacramental purposes, with alcohol used in arts, in therapy, etc. It should be added that alcohol can no longer be regarded in America as a legitimate medicine. The grand committee of the American Medical Association have excluded it and its compounds from the American Pharmacopœia. Many citizens may feel that they have an inherent right to drink if they wish to, but no intelligent citizen can cling to the idea that he has an inherent right to sell liquor. This question has been laid at rest by 12 decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that declare that 'No citizen has an inherent right to sell intoxicating liquor.' Upon reflection this must appear evident, for three hundred and ninety-nine out of four hundred citizens of the United States are not allowed to sell liquor to-day.

CUTS LIQUOR'S LINE OF COMMUNICATION.

"In opposing the Hobson amendment liquor can no longer pretend to be the protector of 'individual liberty,' the defender of the 'sanctity of the home.' His forces are cut off from all alliances with moral forces and must stand out from under cover in the open and fight out the battle alone on commercial and mercenary ground. The wording of the amendment gives us the choice of the battle ground and reduces the question at issue to its simplest form.

A SIMPLE QUESTION.

"All the complexity and confusion are stripped away and the issue stands out simply, Shall the liquor business, conducted solely for profit, be suppressed by usual process of law? Process of law has suppressed the lottery business, the business in dealing in impure foods, the white-slave traffic, on the simple principle that the business is harmful to society; manifestly it is against public policy to allow citizens to carry on business that injures the public. A few citizens should not be allowed to profit at the expense of society.

THE REAL ISSUE.

"If the liquor traffic does not harm society, we will join to protect it; if it does harm society, it is your duty as a patriotic citizen, competent and worthy of self-government, to join us to suppress it. The question becomes one solely of fact, not a question of judgment. The citizen is a juror for a finding of facts. Does the liquor traffic harm society or does it not? His verdict determines his duty.

HOBSON AMENDMENT WILL PROVE EFFECTIVE.

"Some friends of prohibition were in doubt at first as to whether this amendment, reduced to such simple form, would be effective. The enemy naturally sought to take advantage of this attitude of doubt and attempted turning these citizens against their own side. There has been a vein of humor in the enemy's pretending to desire a different kind of prohibition, one 'really effective.' It was laughable to see the leaders of the liquor forces so anxious to 'perfect' the Hobson amendment by striking out the words 'for sale' to make it 'real prohibition.'

NO COERCION.

"The Hobson amendment does not coerce the individual citizen; it does not attempt by law to make men good or even to change the habits of a lifetime; but it does bring to bear the natural scientific remedy for organic disease in the body, social by removing the cause of the renewal of the disease, its spreading to the young, and then providing nature with the chance to 'grow' cured, the method by which mother nature cures organic diseases in the body physical.

BOYS AND CHILD RACES.

"A very small per cent of drinkers begin drinking after they are grown. More than two-thirds of the drunkards have their habits contracted before they are 21, nearly one-third before they are 16, a considerable per cent before they are 12.

"What is the agency that causes boys to begin drinking? Not old drinkers, because they have no motive in doing so, but rather have a repugnance. The agency is the organized liquor traffic, operating through saloons and bars and through speak-easies, blind tigers, bootleggers, that get all their supplies from organized dealers, saloons, or wholesalers. These agencies create a veritable atmosphere in which the lives of the young are molded unconsciously. If Indians or other native child races were in the saloon atmosphere, of course, they would learn to drink. The boys and youths are in the same stage of development, similarly subject to the allurement and enslaving properties of this drug. It is estimated that in this way fully four out of five of all American boys learn to drink in some form before maturity.

"Deny the liquor traffic nationally the channels of trade, dry up all the sources of commercial supply, and this business or any other business similarly situated could no longer return profits, the object and only object of its existence. Under these adverse conditions the liquor traffic, like the lottery business, would disintegrate, and the underlying cause of the debauching of the young would end. Many drinkers, with this change of environment, removal of temptation, and support from public opinion, would stop drinking, but no doubt many old drinkers would continue to drink until they die. It is not reasonable to expect prohibition suddenly to stop all drinking.

THE CURE.

"But as the old drinkers die off there will be no recruits, no new drinkers to take their places. The young generation will grow up sober. This is nature's cure for the organic disease.

NO ABUSE—AN APPEAL TO GOOD MEN.

"My attitude on this great question has always been and it remains purely scientific. I have never permitted bitterness to invade my heart, but have maintained a judicial frame of mind toward the men who, in the regular course of events with the drink institution coming down upon us from the past, have become accustomed to drink, who have become engaged in the liquor business to make a living or who have invested in securities of distilleries, breweries, hotels, saloons, etc. No one has been able to take just offense at anything in any of my addresses. I assume that every man in the sound of my voice is a good man and a good citizen. I make my appeal to your own candor and honesty with yourself. You may be interested in the liquor business, you may be a drinking man yourself, but if you are a good man, you do not want your boy to grow up drinking, nor your neighbor's boy. You would love to see the young grow up sober. This is all we ask, to remove the real cause of the drinking by the young. To accomplish this just and wise result, we only ask due process of law, nor do we invoke any vague or visionary rule of law, but the principle underlying the attitude of all civilized government toward business for profit, if it harms society it ought to be denied the channels of trade and suppressed.

"In arriving at a finding of fact we do not ask you to draw upon your own knowledge of the operation of the liquor traffic from your own observation, nor do we present the scathing indictments of saloons found inside of the liquor trade in their own periodicals and literature. We do not ask you to take our opinion nor the opinion or judgment of any man or group of men—we simply present you the truth about alcohol, one of the hydrocarbon compounds as established in the laboratories of Paris, Berlin, Vienna, London, and New York without any relationship to the bearing upon prohibition. The conclusions of modern science about alcohol as about many of the other compounds of the same family and group are final, just as firmly established as the law of gravity or the shape of the earth.

THE TRUTH ABOUT ALCOHOL.

"Every intelligent person who keeps at all informed upon the world's progress should know the three simple findings of science as to what alcohol really is.

FIRST. ALCOHOL IS A PROTOPLASM POISON.

"Alcohol is one of the few substances that poison the elemental protoplasm out of which all living things are built—plants, animals, men. Upon coming in contact with protoplasm, alcohol sucks up its water and proceeds to harden and coagulate the proteins, comprising the major part of its substance. Pour alcohol on a raw egg and this coagulation will quickly set in as if in hard boiling. This hardening in the little living cells of the body interferes with their live processes of nutrition, breathing and excretion.

TOXICOLOGY OF ALCOHOL.

"Toxicology, the science of poison and poisoning, has assembled the fact as established about most of the poisons.

"Ethel alcohol is one of a family of fluid poisons, the second brother of the alcohol family, one of the series of hydrocarbon derivatives. The first brother is methyl alcohol, derived from the gas, methone, CH_4, a dangerous, poisonous gas known among miners as fire damp. Take away one atom of hydrogen and substitute hydroxide in its place gives CH_3OH. This is methyl alcohol, popularly called wood alcohol, whose poisonous properties are well known. The other members of the family are built up by adding the link CH_2 one atom of carbon, two atoms of hydrogen.

"The next brother, CH_3CH_2OH, is ethyl alcohol, the one used in liquor.

"Adding another link gives $CH_3CH_2CH_2OH$, which is propyl alcohol, adding a third link gives $CH_3CH_2CH_2CH_2OH$, which is butyl alcohol. Adding a fourth link gives $CH_3CH_2CH_2CH_2CH_2OH$, which is amyl alcohol, which, with its usual impurities, is called fusel oil whose poisonous properties are well known and so the whole family is built. All the members of this family are poisonous.

"The formula for ethyl alcohol may be written C_2H_5OH. The formula for carbolic acid is C_6H_5OH.

"To illustrate how closely akin ethyl alcohol is to other well-known poisons just extract a little water with sulphuric acid and the result is ether. One molecule of ether $—2(C_2H_5OH)H_2C_2H_5OC_2H_5$.

ALCOHOL KING OF THE POISON TRIBE.

"Just mix bleaching powder with alcohol, the result is chloroform, HC, CL_3.

"Instead of combining chlorine with hydrocarbons, combine nitrogen with a low hydrocarbon, HC; nitrogen produces HCN, hydrocyanic acid, known as Prussic acid; with high oxide derivations it produces $C_{17}H_{19}O_3N$ (morphine), and $C_{17}H_{21}O_4N$ (cocaine), and $C_{21}H_{22}O_2N_2$ (strychnine).

"The science of poisons has thus established a veritable tribe of poison, and ethyl alcohol is the kind of the poison tribe.

"In the light of this scientific knowledge it seems strange that any well-informed, educated, human being could look upon alcohol as good for drink.

ALCOHOL IN THE BLOOD A DEADLY POISON.

"The prime purpose of drink is to supply water to the tissues and the blood. Over three-quarters of the body and about 97 per cent of the blood are water. Can alcohol take the place of water in the blood, 97 per cent? A person with 1 per cent of alcohol in the blood would fall dead. Seven parts of alcohol in a thousand parts of blood is fatal. In fact, no creature has ever been known to survive six parts of alcohol in a thousand parts of blood. One-half of 1 per cent is sufficient to kill.

"The most robust of men drinking a short tumbler of alcohol, 5 ounces, would be dead inside of 10 hours. A man survived who took 8 ounces ether, another survived who took 22.5 ounces of chloroform.

POISONING THE NATION FOR PROFIT.

"The findings of science means that the brewers, distillers, wholesalers, and retailers of America are manufacturing and distributing 2,500,000,000 gallons of beverage that is poisonous. These citizens, for their own enrichment, are systematically poisoning 80,000,000 American citizens. It is bad enough to poison one individual for profit; think of poisoning the Nation for private gain. The thought is abhorrent. This finding of science calls for the verdict. The liquor traffic is poisoning society; therefore society should suppress it.

ALCOHOL IS AN INSIDIOUS HABIT-FORMING DRUG.

"Alcohol, like its double first cousin, ether, and its kinsman, chloroform, is an anæsthetic, making its severest attack upon the central nervous system, penetrating ever the sheathing that protects the nerve fibers. It numbs the nerves before the pain of the poisoning can set in, while the order of the anæsthesia prepares the way for deceiving the victim into thinking he has been stimulated.

"The quickest effect is felt in the upper brain, the latest in human evolution, and consequently the most complex, delicate, and sensitive. The power of inhibition or control residing in this part is quickly suspended before the effect reaches the lower brain, which man possesses in common with the brute, where the more elemental instincts and brutal feelings preside. These being quickly loosened from their usual control, the victim feels that he has been stimulated. He is more of a brute, it is true, but in reality that very feeling is a sign that his brain has been partially paralyzed. The higher faculties of judgment, proportion, and reason being quickly suspended, while the lower subconscious egotism is loosened, the drinker rapidly goes up in his own estimation, his self-assurance may become colossal, while he soon forgets his debts and drowns his sorrows, and feels relief from the cares and monotony of everyday life. This effect makes ethyl alcohol the most alluring of all the habit-forming drugs.

"When the tissues come out from under the anæsthetic they begin to feel the results of the poison's effect, especially in the top part of the head. They begin to crave relief, to call to be put back under the delightful anæsthetic. It now takes more of the drug to produce the same feeling. The reaction and depression are consequently greater, followed by a stronger craving. Thus the craving grows with the drinking.

CRAVING VERSUS SELF-CONTROL.

"As the protoplasm poison continues its attack upon the life cells of the body their vital processes of nutrition, oxidation, excretion are all impaired, lowering the vitality of the whole organism. The drop in strength and vitality is greatest in the nervous system, reaching its maximum in the upper brain, where the tender neurons and their delicate network of branches and fibers are gradually hardened and worn away. These brain centers generate the nerve energy for will power, manhood, self-control. It must be said that every dose of this poison weakens the power of these brain centers, and the drinker is just a little less of a man every time he takes a drink. Thus the will power and self-control rapidly decline with the drinking, while the craving of the tissues steadily grows. It can only be a question of time, if the drinking is persisted in, when the growing craving overmatches the declining manhood and enslaves the will. The drinker is in the grip of the habit. To him the world is no longer natural. With the wasting of the higher brain centers the world of reason and judgment, of man, of nature, of God steadily contracts; the very memory of high and noble things fades; the words love, duty, self-sacrifice have no meaning; the drinker no longer lives for his family, for his country; he is oblivious even to his own self-interest and deaf to the dictates of self-preservation. The central thought of his life, day and night, is to procure this drug.

"The liquor traffic has a monopoly of the supply. The victim is a slave and the liquor traffic owns him. That is why ethyl alcohol has been chosen through the generations rather than other poisons to enslave humanity.

THE BONDAGE OF HUMANITY—THE SERFDOM OF THE WORLD.

"Not all drinkers become full-fledged slaves. It is estimated that there are 5,000,000 heavy drinkers and drunkards in the United States who are full-fledged slaves, more abject than ever were black men. African slaves in America hardly counted half that number at any one time. It is estimated that there are temperate regular drinkers numbering in all 20,000,000. These can be graded into one-eighth slaves, one-fourth slaves, three-eighths slaves, one-half slaves, five-eighths slaves, three-fourths slaves, seven-eighths slaves, and so forth, where every kind of a drinker has a place. King alcohol holds humanity in bondage in the serfdom of the world.

LEVYING TRIBUTE.

"When pay day comes even the one-eighth slave thinks first of the saloon, afterwards of his family. Throughout their whole realm of liquor serfdom the first money goes to the king. No monarch since the world began ever levied even a considerable fraction of the tribute levied by king alcohol. In America the cash collections yearly exceed two and one-half billion dollars—two-thirds of all the money in circulation. It is not the producer, the farmer, miner, manufacturer, nor the distributor, the railroad, the merchant, the banker, nor yet the educator, the minister, nor even the Government, but it is the liquor traffic that skims the cream of the cash money of the Nation; nor does the burden stop with the cash taken. Every drinker parts with a part of his efficiency as a producer, part of his value to his employer, part of his value as a customer, as well as a part of his health, a part of his character, a part of his life, a part of his soul.

THE BIGGEST BUSINESS FOR BIG BUSINESS.

"The biggest business for big business is to swing the full power of its organization and its resources behind nation-wide and world-wide prohibition. The experience of Russia demonstrates in practice the conclusions of scientific research, that by ending the liquor traffic the producing power of a nation will rise by leaps and bounds. The purchasing power and consuming power will rise accordingly. Putting an end to the wholesale poisoning of humanity will practically double the business of the world. Herein lies the biggest field for big business. The business world would be the chief financial beneficiary of this enormous business expansion. The biggest, soundest business policy of modern times, of all history, would be the full financing by business men of the war upon drink, to reduce to a minimum the delay in bringing about a sober, total-abstaining world.

LIQUOR AND LABOR.

"It is sometimes advanced in extenuation that the capital invested in the liquor business gives employment to many men. The same capital invested in other channels would give employment to from five to ten times as many men. Why should any part of the capital and working force of society be diverted to harmful pursuits? As a matter of fact, liquor is the meanest employer of all, paying its employees the lowest wage of the wage scale. No part of society is so preyed upon by liquor as the labor world. Not only the efficiency and earning power of labor, and therefore its purchasing power and standard of living, are cut down and a large part of what it does earn is taken away, but in return for its substance liquor lowers the standards of intelligence, of self-reliance, of courage, of character, of labor, so it becomes an easy victim of avaricious employers, an easy victim of the demagogue and ward politician, of the agitator and anarchist. This degrading influence upon labor is illustrated in the slums of big cities, which not only menace the standard of wages for all labor, but menace the continuance of honest government, the perpetuity of free institutions.

LIQUOR AND TAXES.

"The liquor traffic is given to boasting about the revenues it pays to the Government. As a matter of fact, all these revenues would not pay the bill that citizens must meet by taxation for the public charges of crime, pauperism, and insanity produced by liquor, to say nothing of the immorality, the disease, and premature death.

"Liquor is prone to conjure up the specter of deficits in the Public Treasury, of grave problems of financing the Government if their revenues are withdrawn. The minister of finance of Russia reports that the problem of financing the war, the greatest problem in governmental financing ever confronting the Government, has been solved by the increase in wealth-producing power of the people resulting from national prohibition, bearing out what the late Mr. Gladstone replied to the deputation of brewers who presented the same argument to him, 'Give me a sober people who do not squander their substance on drink and I will find ready means of raising the revenue required by the Government.'

LIQUOR THE SLAVE DRIVER.

"There can be no justification for perpetuating a business conducted for private gain which lays such a staggering burden upon the shoulders of society.

"The very existence of such institution can only be accounted for by the fact that men have not known any better heretofore, that the purveyors of this subtle, habit-forming drug have been able to slip upon them as boys and gradually enslave them without their knowledge or realization. The folly, the tragedy, of this slavery is now coming home to men. To think, the millions of heavy drinkers and drunkards only live three years on the average; even the temperate, regular drinkers have their lives so seriously shortened that insurance companies are more and more refusing them insurance. The liquor traffic cashes in the lifeblood of its slaves. When a full realization of the lesser wrong of African slavery came home to our people, men rose and wiped it out in blood. We do not ask any violence now, but we do call on every patriot here to join us and take an honorable part in wiping out this most hideous form of slave driving in the history of humanity.

ALCOHOL THE SPECIFIC FOR DEGENERACY.

"Finding No. 2, that alcohol is a dangerous habit-forming drug, and the consequence of same, like finding No. 1, that alcohol is a protoplasm poison, call for the verdict of the citizen jurors that the liquor traffic harms society and therefore should be suppressed. But it remained for finding No. 3 to startle the world and cause the civilized nations to tremble with the realization that they must become sober or perish. The finding that alcohol causes degeneracy in all living things is in reality the specific for degeneracy, the process that entails extinction.

"All life is founded on the advancing or building principle, and upon compliance with this principle rests not only the normal prolongation of the individual life but its reproduction and renewal.

"Modern scientific research has made the startling discovery that whether in the vegetable kingdom, the kingdom of the animals, the kingdom of men, when ethyl alcohol is applied internally, whether to the single elemental life cell or to the complete organism, the evolutionary building process is arrested and finally reversed. This backward course of degeneracy, reversing the process of evolution, is the deadly sin in the eyes of nature. When degeneracy sets in, it is certain that a deadly blow has been struck at the fundamental processes of life, nutrition, oxidation, excretion, and at the germ or other source of reproduction, so the life itself will be shortened and the offspring blighted in proportion to the degree of the degeneracy.

MAN TO INHERIT THE EARTH MUST GROW IN THE GRACE OF HIS MAKER.

"The human species is not evolving in the physical but in the mental and spiritual, the part that distinguishes man from the brute, located in the upper brain, manifesting itself in self-control, in recognizing right and wrong in conscience, in consciousness of God, of duty, in love, in self-sacrifice. A man stops growing physically at about 21; he can continue to grow in grace all the days of his life. That is what you live for.

LIQUOR REVERSES THE PURPOSE OF CREATION.

"Did you ever ask yourself the searching question, 'What is it all for?' Nature gives the answer. That each human being who comes into the world may develop into the noblest character possible, and that each generation of humanity may rise on the average to a degree higher and nobler than the previous generation, developing mankind more and more in the image of God; the maximum advance of humanity in the line of its evolution. This is the purpose of creation, the will of God in the world.

"This supplies the final standard by which to measure values, the value of your conduct, the value of your life, the value of a policy, of a law, of an institution, of a civilization, namely, what does it actually contribute to the general good, to the real uplift of humanity?

"The liquor traffic distributes a commodity that exactly reverses this evolutionary uplift process of society, reverses the purpose of creation, the will of God. By every principle and precept of life it ought to be suppressed.

LIQUOR AND THE YOUNG MAN.

"I will amplify this finding, especially for the young. My young friend, you are one living organism of the universe and are subject to all the great laws of nature. Proceed to drink and you will begin to degenerate. You might possibly develop the brute in you some further, though even your physical strength will soon decline, but you can not possibly develop further in your higher, nobler nature, the line of your evolution. Nothing living could. Take the vegetable kingdom. If a young flower is evolving a wonderful new color and it is watered once a day with water united with alcohol, half and half, about the equivalent of a very temperate drinker, the new color will stop developing and gradually fade away. In the animal kingdom bring up a puppy as an alcoholic. When grown he will prowl around and howl like a wolf, from which his ancestors evolved. If Indians get liquor regularly they go on the warpath, degenerated back to savagery. Negroes become cannibals; a highly civilized young white man gradually becomes semicivilized, then semisavage, then savage, and may descend so far below the brute that he will kill his own wife, his own children. Go to Bellevue Hospital, in New York, to the ward for alcoholics, and watch the surgeons perform an autopsy on a victim of acute alcoholism. With a magnifying glass examine the upper brain as it is dissected. The most wonderful part of the delicate gray matter is gone, wiped out, and in its place you find white, inert, low-class scar tissue. The result of all the patient evolutionary processes of the ages is wiped out, what distinguished the man from a brute is gone, and men are getting rich in bringing this upon their fellow men.

THE CURSE OF NATURE.

"Proceed to drink, young man, and you will begin to degenerate. Begin to degenerate and nature's curse will descend upon you. Starting at the age of 20, if you never drink, the average of records of insurance companies shows you will live to be 61 years old. If you live as an average "temperate" drinker you will die at 51. Live as a heavy drinker and you will die at 35. These are the averages. Between the ages of 25 and 35 the mortality of total abstainers is only half that of the average. The average mortality for young men is twice what it ought to be. Twice as many young men die as ought to die. It is especially sad for a young man to die. Liquor cashes in the lives of half the young men who die. We can save these lives by destroying the liquor traffic.

"Between the ages of 35 and 45 the mortality for total abstainers is only one-third of the average. The average mortality for men in their prime is three times what it ought to be. Three times as many men die in their prime as ought to die. Few animals die in their prime. Liquor cashes in the lives of two out of three of all men who die in their prime. We can save these lives by destroying the liquor traffic.

THE HARVEST OF DEATH.

"There would be few premature deaths in a sober world. Liquor is the primary cause of most of the deaths by violence, manslaughter, and murder, of most of the deaths by accident in automobiles, in cars, in machine shops, factories, and mines. Records of French national hospitals show that over half the cases of consumption are due to drink, and the mortality of consumptive drinkers is twice that of total abstainers. The mortality in pneumonia is nearly trebled, and so on with other diseases of bacilli and germs. This is inevitable. The alcohol poison lowers the general vitality and incapacitates the phagocites, the soldiers of the blood, that kill off invading germs and microbes.

"The deaths in America are about 1,000 deaths per year for each 61,000 of population—the figures of the registrar general of England. This means about 1,700,000 deaths per year. If there were no liquor in the land so the mortality could drop to that of total abstainers, as found from the average of the records of insurance companies, there would be only about 1,000,000 deaths. The difference, 700,000 on the ghostly, bloody toll of precious human life taken by liquor, 2,000 premature deaths every day of the year, more than the average killed on all the battle fronts of Europe combined. Mr. Soabsby, one of the leading authorities of Europe, has recently announced that liquor is the cause of over 200,000 deaths yearly in England alone, more than are killed in the field in all the armies. In civilized lands, to think that some men get rich from this harvest of death of fellow men.

LIQUOR AND THE UNBORN.

"Degeneracy can not inherit the earth. Life must rise to be renewed down the generations. The carrier of heredity, the chromatin of the germ cell, is the most sensitive to degenerating agencies. This is inevitable, since nature provides to carry the lines of evolution strongest to the offspring, this line being the special object of attack by the specific for degeneracy. It is a dangerous thing for prospective parents to drink even occasionally. Investigation shows that drinking that may not appear to have produced visible injury to the drinkers will injure the offspring and in the third generation may lead to sterility.

DRINKING IN THE HOME.

"If both parents drink but once a day, at one meal, wine or beer, this temperate drinking will quadruple the chance of miscarriage of the mother, increasing proportionately the dangers and sufferings of maternity, helping to keep the burden on the motherhood of our species not laid by nature on any other species. This temperate drinking will increase manyfold the number of children born dead, this amounting where beer gardens prevail to as much as 300 born dead out of every 1,000 born. This temperate drinking will nearly double the number of children who die the first year.

SLAUGHTERING THE INNOCENTS.

"Including those born dead, about half the human race die before the age of 5. The young animals on the farms do not die off like this. Why should the big graveyards be so full of little graves? Because these Herod's agents swarm into our homes and with their poison shafts strike the little ones in their cradles, strike them in their mothers' wombs.

"If both parents are alcoholics, one child in five becomes insane, one child in seven is born deformed, one child in three is backward, with a likelihood of becoming epileptic or feebleminded; only one child in six will be normal, and even this one may transmit a taint to its offspring. Five out of six of the children are blighted in some form; the family breeds degenerates, to become a burden on society, and goes to extinction.

THE DOWNFALL OF NATIONS.

"A nation is composed of families. When liquor runs its course until a nation becomes generally dissipated and debauched, the nation breeds degenerates; great national policies, even if self-defense, become impossible; institutions and liberties are undermined; the nation must perish.

"The nations of history that are gone did not perish in war nor famine nor by fire, flood, volcano, or earthquake. No great nation ever even began to decline until it became dissipated, and no nation, however great, even to ruling the world, ever escaped destruction when it degenerated.

"Babylon, Nineveh, Tyre, Greece, Rome did not perish in the order of nature. They should be living and flourishing to-day.

MAKE MANKIND A THOROUGHBRED RACE.

"If both parents are total abstainers, without the taint of degeneracy, 9 out of 10 of their children are normal, and brought up in a moral atmosphere will tend to rise to one degree higher and nobler in character than the average of their parents. Their children will rise yet higher. So a sober family and a sober nation not only tends indefinitely to reproduce with natural increase but to rise rapidly and produce a thoroughbred race of men. We have produced thoroughbred corn, we have produced thoroughbred horses, thoroughbred dogs. Don't you think it is high time to begin to produce a thoroughbred race of men? This can not be done while men get rich through poisoning the human race with the specific for degeneracy. Flocks, herds, go on, reproduce, rise along their lines indefinitely, but a nation only rises to fall, is only born to die.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE UNIVERSE.

"The human species, the crowning part of God's creation, for which God created the earth and gave dominion over it, whose rising in the line of its evolution is the very purpose of creation—the human race is being kept under the curse of nature, groaning with disease, premature death, disintegration, the crumbling of individual character, of great families, of cities and empires, with the millstone of degeneracy hung about its neck. For what purpose? That private citizens may enrich themselves and ultimately perish with the rest. Universal suicide, the tragedy of creation.

THE GREAT ISSUE.

"I do not underestimate the importance of other issues. I appreciate the importance of preparedness. For 15 years, in Congress and out, I have pleaded for reasonable preparedness, without waiting for the question to become popular. But preparedness did not save Rome from destruction—the best-prepared nation of history. I appreciate the importance of education. For years in Congress I have striven to have the Federal Government cooperate with the States and counties to establish a high, uniform system of education everywhere and insure that every boy and girl born under the American flag shall have the equipment and training of a standard, scientific education. But education did not save Greece from destruction, the best educated nation of history.

"The great issue of our age—the greatest issue of all ages—is to cut the millstone of degeneracy from the neck of humanity. Upon this issue will hinge the destiny of the race. Throwing off the drag of degeneracy, nature will take its evolutionary course. The baser elemental passions of men will be subordinated rapidly to the higher, nobler faculties. The thoughts of men will be lifted from the base of the brain, where they are now held, while humanity is soused in liquor. With the plane of self-preservation largely dominating men, the feelings of distrust and the fear of others breeds injustice and cruelty between nations and men, and war and interdestruction between the nations. With the higher, nobler faculties left free to become dominant, justice would flourish, service would become the watchword between men, good will between nations, an ever-widening policy of cooperation for the common good spread over the earth, and embrace all races, all religions; a new heaven and a new earth would appear, a veritable new era in the life history of our race.

"On the other hand, leave the millstone of degeneracy about the neck of humanity, do nothing and let liquor run its course, then as surely as the laws of nature persist America and the great nations of to-day will go down as did the nations of the past, and our wonderful human race, with its spark of immortality, will become extinct upon the earth.

THE HOUR OF DESTINY IS STRIKING.

"The great war has brought men and nations into the presence of the realities of life and death and has opened their hearts and minds to the truth as perhaps these have never been opened in the world's history. Under Providence, modern science stood waiting with the truth about alcohol. Under the necessities of war the governments of the world have been able to take drastic measures against the liquor traffic and have been able to teach their people the truth about alcohol as no government would have dared in ordinary times, with the traffic so entrenched and so powerful in the business, social, and political life of the world. It is wonderful how God advances his great purposes, even out of the wrath of men. The war has advanced this great reform by decades, perhaps by generations, until it is now knocking at the doors of our generation. The hour of destiny is striking.

THE CALL TO DUTY.

"The call is sounding throughout the world, a call to duty such as men have never received since the morning stars sang together. I do not underestimate the other obligations that rest upon us individually, but the paramount duty that we owe to ourselves, to our children, to our country, to nature, and to nature's God is that each one of us, in his own sphere, shall do his legitimate part, an honorable part, a man's part, in this struggle on all fronts for State-wide, Nation-wide, world-wide prohibition. Each one should bring himself into the fight with all his talent and gifts, with his brain power and organizing power, with his resources and money power, with his spirituality and prayer power.

RALLY TO THE COLORS.

"I do not underestimate the enemy's strength in men and money. At the ballot box he controls millions of degenerates and human derelicts of his own creation and has hundreds of millions of blood money at his command. Politicians of all parties have been accustomed to tremble in its presence and bow the knee. Political parties do homage. I realize that through long generations the drink god has been rooted in the social and business institutions of the nations. But admitting that obstacles rise high in the path; that political and other dangers may appear, I ask you what are you going to do about this call to duty? I know your answer. You are going to do your duty regardless of consequences. The word "duty" transforms a man. I know you, the average good man, undegenerate; you are naturally brave and true. You would now hold up your head and with a smile proudly march down the path of duty, though you saw it leading into the valley of the shadow.

"The great battle is now raging around the world. Upon its outcome hinges the fate of the race. Here in America we are in the last stage, in the midst of the trench warfare, and are preparing for the great drive. We are calling men and women to the colors. More than a million have responded, signing our enlistment cards and contributing of their resources in the levy of the sinews of war. We want five million; we call on every earnest man and woman here to join our army. If you can not go with us into the trenches at the front, then manufacture ammunition in the rear.

"As one great State after another swings into the dry column, as America follows Russia with national prohibition and leads the whole world as it becomes sober, you will rejoice and thank God that the privilege came to you to join our hosts."

ARMY CHAPLAINS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (H. R. 5271) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army; and there being no objection, the request was complied with.

PORT OF ENTRY, NORTHGATE, N. DAK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2203) for the establishment of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota, as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the establishment of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CHAPLAINS IN THE ARMY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2527) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President may appoint for service during the present emergency not exceeding 20 chaplains at large for the United States Army representing religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now recognized by law: Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such appointment unless he be at the time of his appointment a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 6361. An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war, was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. OVERMAN, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on October 5, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 2813. An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.;

S. 2816. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across Red River; and

WAR WITH GERMANY AND LEGISLATION OF THE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, some people seem to have the impression that the revenue bill which we have just enacted is a victory for the conservative element in Congress, that the progressive or radical wing has been turned down, and that the old stand-pat element in both parties is in control. In other words, that a victory has been won by the great business interests at the expense of the people. This idea was generated by some of the speeches that have been made here recently, while the bill was before the Senate, and is so utterly unfair and shows such an utter incomprehension of the facts and of the whole national situation that I can not forbear saying a few words about it here on the floor of the Senate. It is not that I have been criticized myself or that criticisms which I have heard were hostile to the action taken by the Senate. They were not. The general impression seems to be that we have done well. But it is this idea that we are split into radical and conservative camps and are sparring for petty political advantages for this or that faction at this most critical time in the life of our Nation that surprises me. Some time ago I attended a gathering where there were many public men present. Some one took it upon himself to question a dozen or more of these men as to their reasons for our being in the war. There were nearly as many different replies as there were men questioned. That was several months ago. I believe that there is now a much more uniform sentiment about our reasons for fighting than there was then, but even yet I do not feel that the country at large, in spite of its fine response to the call to arms, has fully grasped the meaning of the great war.

We have been told that we are in this war to bring democracy to the world. We have not been sufficiently told that our own democracy is at stake and that it is not so much for the rest of the world as for our own selves that we are making the great sacrifices we are called upon to make. The President's address to the Congress, his reply to the Pope, were great world messages and their effect on the world at large has been far-reaching, but the mother who sees her son go across the sea to fight, perhaps never to return, wants a more immediate reason to justify his sacrifice than the insuring of democracy to the nations of Europe.

At the commencement of the great war we find a Germany thoroughly prepared, after more than 40 years of intensive military training, to put to a decisive test the results of her system of Government. The two great ideals of the Government were military and commercial supremacy. Individualism, except in so far as it aided the State, had no chance in Germany. The ideals of the State were established by the Government and everything was made subordinate to those ideals. The German military establishment, as has since been proved, was far and away more powerful and better organized than that of any other country in the world. Her commercial power was increasing by leaps and bounds. Had she not declared war it is not too much to say that within 10 or 20 years she would have controlled the business of the world. But along with this commercial ascendancy went an overweening confidence in her military supremacy and her power to accomplish by a short cut what years of waiting would inevitably bring about. Against this powerful material combination most of the nations of Europe found themselves pitted in the summer of 1914. For one reason or another England, France, Russia, Italy, Japan, and the other allies entered the war, not for conquest but for self-preservation, and finally we ourselves have been drawn in.

Much has been said about our fight for democracy. We are fighting for democracy because our Government is a democratic form of Government and because we are fighting for the right to live under that form of Government. The autocratic German Government is by far a more efficient form of government, if material ascendancy is all that is required, and if the rights of the individual are to be ignored, but I thank God that that is not the form of government which our forefathers established and which we are proud to live under in this free country. When it comes, however, to a commercial competition of the nations, the stronger and more efficient nation must win out, especially if backed by a military power that will disregard and override the rights of other people. This war is a combination of the freer governments of the world against the iron autocracy of Germany. It is an assertion by them of their rights to live under the form of government that they choose, whether democratic, monarchial, or semimonarchial, and a protest against being forced, in order to live, to adopt the same ideals, the same inhuman soul-killing efficiency, military and commercial, that Germany would force on the world. I say force on the world. As a matter of fact, nothing would please Germany more than to have the rest of the world not adopt these ideals, not adopt her system of militarism. The result would be her undisputed supremacy and the world would be at her mercy.

Some talk there has been of peace. Any peace that comes before the German military machine is shattered and brought to its knees will be simply a putting off of the evil day. As long as Germany or any other country in the world is allowed to dominate the world and to set a military criterion that other nations must live up to in order to exist, there can be no promise of continued peace in the world. It is our duty, now that we are in this war, to see it through to the end. To meet the armed depredator of the world we must arm ourselves. To cope with the amazing efficiency of an autocratic Government we must arm our Government for the period of the war with autocratic power. Already we are doing so. We are giving our President powers that in time of peace we would never dream of giving him, that a democratic Government never would and never should allow but for an extreme emergency. For the purpose of coping with the powerful autocratic German machine we are building up a powerful autocratic American machine. Do I like it? Do you like it? A thousand times, "No." And yet this is the sort of government we shall need, not alone during the war, but after the war, if Germany is allowed to come out of this war unbeaten. For unless she is brought to the most condign punishment for the wrongs she has committed, you may be sure that she will not give up the great military establishment that has enabled her, practically alone, to cope with and almost to triumph over the whole world in arms. Her need for territorial expansion, for colonies, will be as great as when the war began. Her military prestige will be such that no country will care or dare to enter into conflict with her unless with the backing of the rest of the world, which would mean another dreary world war; and rather than have this the rest of the world will give in to her more and more.

She must inevitably clash with us in South America and Mexico, and if such a clash comes she will not be content until she has overrun us as she has overrun Belgium and Poland and Serbia, and as she tried to overrun France. She will be a constant menace to us as she will be to her neighbors in Europe, and we and they will have to adopt her methods to withstand her. We can do it. Our natural resources are greater than hers. Our people can be made just as effective in war. But what, then, will become of our peaceful democracy? We shall be one great armed camp, just as she is, and the harsh measures that we have adopted for the period of the war will have to be adopted for good and all if we are to survive. So, while we are fitting ourselves for the rôle of savior of democracy, through methods the very reverse of democratic, Russia is taking just the opposite course. She, in this time of peril, swings away from the extreme autocracy under which she has so long suffered, and attempts an experiment in democracy. And the immediate effect is that her usefulness as an ally, great nation as she is, has become practically nil. Our sympathy is all with her. May she win out and enjoy in the end the blessings of a free Government as we do ourselves; but to do so she will have to lay aside, as we have had to lay aside for the period of the war, much of her democracy. And so I say that this is no time for the much-needed internal reforms which lead to the perfection of the democratic form of government which we all desire to live under. These matters can and should be laid aside until the soil in which they flourish shall have been prepared for the harvest, and that will be when we and our allies shall have won the war, and shall have established the right to govern ourselves as we see fit.

After the war, with a citizenship chastened and purified by the suffering and sacrifice which we must inevitably undergo, and inspired by the new spirit of patriotism which the war has awakened, these reforms will come of their own accord.

I was elected to the United States Senate as a Republican with progressive tendencies. There are many things for which in ordinary times I would stand, which I do not stand for now and shall not stand for during the continuance of the war. I am proud to say that during my short service in the Senate I have seen little sign of party politics. No man should continue to be a Member of this Senate who is not inspired by the wish to do what is best for our country. There can be no question in the mind of anyone but that the best thing we can now do for our country is to make her all-efficient in the carrying on of this war. Any man who in any way threatens this all-necessary efficiency in order to help his party or any wing of his party or himself or anything else other than his country, is not acting for the best interests of his country. And so I say, let the people of this country find fault if they will because we have not legislated wisely for the war; but let no one in the country find fault with any of us because we have not acted with this or that particular group or faction of legislators.

THE GERMAN-AMERICAN WAR CONGRESS AND ITS ACHIEVEMENTS—THE MEANING TO AMERICA AND THE WORLD OF THE DEVOTION OF AMERICAN PUBLIC SERVICE.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if any Senator desires to take the floor for any measure in which he is now interested, I would yield to him, as I am very desirous of not embarrassing any bill that some Senator might feel urgent. There are some things I arise to say this morning which occur to my mind as would be appropriate. These are not addressed to any particular bill which is now pending.

Before I enter upon it I wish to congratulate the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who has just closed his address, for having made a very clear exposition, and a very just one, as to the elements that really contributed to the construction of the revenue bill; I congratulate the junior Senator—though young in the service, clearly experienced in judgment, I delight to say that he has in a very fair manner and in a very just and discriminating analysis set forth before the country the necessities which enforced the passage of the war-revenue bill, for which the Senate extends him its appreciation.

The eminent ex-President of the United States, Col. Roosevelt, in a speech, as well as in an article from his fecund pen, presented to the Kansas City Star a very able editorial. He makes the statement that this country was without preparation for national war defense. Using the expression that was catchy, Col. Roosevelt said we had but a "broomstick preparation."

Sir, there may be something to be said in justification of the accusation and for the fact that we were not prepared for war to the extent that such a soldier and statesman as Col. Roosevelt felt we should have been.

Mr. President, however, I wish to take the expression of the eminent soldier and statesman, Col. Roosevelt, and apply it. Col. Roosevelt says we have but a broomstick preparation. I trust it was not his intention to leave the world to understand that the country was not now prepared. Such would be such encouragement to our opponents that that could never have been the intent of Col. Roosevelt. It would never have been his object to inform our opponents that we were in a state where we invited assault upon our soldiers and country, for that we are unprepared to meet it.

If there was preliminary to entering into this conflict what Col. Roosevelt would designate as a broomstick preparedness, I would like to say to my eminent friend and once my commander that we now can accept his designation, even for the present. Notwithstanding all we have done, the wondrous achievements in national defense we have accomplished, we still will apply the designation that we have now thoroughly a broomstick preparedness. Indeed, sir, both broomstick and broom—one, sir, that will sweep everything before it.

Mr. President, then, with this condition that confronted this Nation when we entered into the war, I now, sir, wish to pay what I feel a deserved tribute to my country. I call the attention of America, indeed, sir, from this forum, the world, to what America has done.

I am permitted, I may say directed, by the Senate to express from this Chamber the meaning of this hour in which this unparalleled, unrivaled, and immortal Congress adjourns. From a Nation dedicated and vowed to peace, with three exceptions in a century, we had with the fidelity of a religion clung to our standards of harmony within and peace without, and this to all worlds and all men. From this state of peace we were shocked into war by the cruelty of Imperial Prussia, by murdering of our children and the destroying of our property. In a flash of light we were transformed from a people of determined peace to a people of sworn vengeance. Let the world know with what quickness and with what unity America as a Nation responded to this call of her country and to this response to duty. Within three months this Nation equipped armies and put them in the field and launched navies upon the waters, both in efficiency equaling the results of warring nations in Europe attained in three years; we have levied taxes, put them forward for collection, put out securities to be realized upon—all in numbers and in power, in quantity and in quality equaling the accomplishment on similar purposes of any of the warring nations of Europe achieved in three years. The Congress, a united body, without partisanship, without personal pride, setting personal opinion behind them and putting personal welfare beyond them—Congress gave everything for country, took nothing for self. It is at this point I can not fail to call to my country's attention that in all this undertaking of prodigious achievement there has been no scandals in the conduct of the affairs of the Government, no charge of crime on the part of any official, no suggestion of disloyalty of service or desertion of trust by any officer named by the President or of one put into authority to execute the power to carry on the great conflict we were called to bear against the German imperial military power. Let it be recalled that while in other Governments engaged in this world war not three months elapsed without some change in cabinet, some charge of misfeasance, and some displacement of men upon charges of disloyal course or unpatriotic conduct, to America the certificate from the world must come that there has not been one removal of any officer once trusted to place in all the United States for any reason reflecting upon his capacity, his honesty, or his loyalty. There has been not a change in any member of the Cabinet, nor a substitution in any of the officers or places to which was intrusted the conduct of the war. With unity of purpose, nobility of nature, and patriotism of life, America and her sons have stood as one. With the salute to the Commander in Chief—their President—and hats off to their flag, they have placed their all at the service of their Nation and put the lives of their children to the sacrifice of the battlefield. Sir, business men—big business men of big business—with interests of millions upon millions of dollars and financial and commercial welfare that meant all they had, were all put at the service of the Nation. These business men, from the highest station of life, forsook their counting houses, their commercial rooms, their business places, their manufacturing establishments, and every interest which required their personal presence and placed these at the demand of the Government without shirk, without hesitation.

Then, too, sir, all riches placed their wealth at the demands of the Government without complaint and heard the call of their country and obeyed; felt the levy of its tax, and without murmur against the order of their Government, responded with freedom, gave with liberality, and contributed all with the patriotism that knew no limit or complaint.

There, too, came with these of wealth, the toilers—those who worked with their hands—from factory to shop, from shop to the earth. They came in legion, in phalanx they came to their country's call. There was no work, however menial, no task, however severe, no sacrifice, however great, that these laborers, these toilers, these workmen did not give. The farmer forsaking the profit of his fields and the opportunity of riches for the hour, reaped but to tender his reapings to his country and gave the blessing of the sun and the yield of the rain in the harvest of his land to his Nation.

The women—women who can not be justly described in only words—women dismissed any consideration of the difference of station, social or financial. In their millions they gathered together in organization—the rich society princess, the working girl of labor—all in assemblage joining each other as sister to a common cause—their country. These women gave their money, their time, their days and hours, administering to the needs in the camps, or to the sick in the hospitals, or in the sacred ministrations of the grave. These women, with one accord, as the womanhood of America, in all ranks, in all classes, presented themselves, the daughters of the flag, the mothers of their Nation.

These represent, sir, the women of America; they represent the spirit that makes the womanhood of this country; they are those who tender at night their prayers to God and in the day their blessings upon their countrymen. These women, sir, are ours. They, sir, are those for whom we men, who carrying within us the throbs and vitality of men—it is to such as these that we tender every sacrifice and give every fiber of existence to their good, to their elevation, and to their preservation as long as life shall endure in their sacred bosoms.

Children with their pennies and their dollars from their penny banks fluttered the flag with one hand and dropped their little contributions for the liberty bonds with the other, and in their skips of childhood joy, delighted that they were doing this for the soldiers and for father's country.

This legion of loyal Americans—men, women, children, and countrymen, of all color, of every sect, all creeds and all faiths—in one sublime united cause stand before the world a pledge of protection to the soldier and sailor and the security of our country. Thus our sons, our daughters—all—with their property, their lives, and their sacred honor prepare to beat back the invader from the shores of their home and beat down the enemy of American rights in foreign lands wherever such stands. They have banded together—one and all—to vanquish the assailant of the Republic of the United States wherever he strikes.

To these men, women, and children and to our country all, this Congress of the United States, presenting them before the world as meriting the applause of nations, greets them as the preservers of liberty, the security of freedom, and the glory of this Republic. With Virgil we announce:

Here stands a people whose realm fights for her sphere.

Sir, it was such as these—the official and citizen, with his face lighted with patriotism, lifts itself in joy to the stars, and receives the blessing of the sun as an honest man and a loyal official.

All men may not have agreed as to all the methods adopted to obtain the result. Men may have differed from these. Issue may have been taken as to details in which they have achieved their results or proceeded to their undertakings; but to this, our America, no man need offer apology; no man is called on to make excuses; none in all the world need to offer defense. Men may have differed, sir, with the views of Members of Congress in the utterances they have given, and taken issue—strong and virile, but before the world let is be noted that not in this Government has any one of these legislators had the charge laid to his door of venality, of crime of that which could taint the honor of the office.

Sir, may I be pardoned if I indulge in a comparison to disclose that in one of the governments of our friendly nations since it began the war, six cabinets have fallen. Three were dismembered; five of their military and naval officers were placed upon trial on charges and were dethroned from position. In another three cabinets have surrendered; three others have taken their places; two dismemberments in distractions and five of its officials brought to the bar of public opinion under accusation. In the last country of my reference, four organizations called cabinets have split asunder and gone their way before the world. The names of some of their members never to be again mentioned upon human lips unless with a hiss and a curse. In one of these lands reel the charge of the treasury being looted, the charge of dishonor laid, while against others treason branded them at their doorway.

Sir, as to those nations which are our enemies, we are forced to note every accusation which could demean a government, dishonor a people, and disgrace an official has been proven by proof or confession. For many of these the offenders died before the shot of the avenging firing squad.

Shall I be regarded in behalf of this body that honors me with this seat as vaunting of pride when I point to this, my country, inexperienced in these conflicts, but when called on, goes to our countrymen in a pure light, wearing unsullied robes, a noble career, and a blessed and approved life.

Mr. President, if there be those in the world who ever doubted that a democracy could be maintained in the hour of exigency, if there were those who taunted this Republic that it could not survive under the extremes of severe and trying hours, let them behold this which has just been our endurance and know and see how we return to our masters, the people, our sovereign lords, public opinion, giving account of our stewardship clear of offense. More than that, sir, before the world all stand clear of that by which any man on earth can lift his finger to a spot in all official America tainted with a personal or official dishonor. Sir, if there shall ever again, as there have oftentimes, come from the mouths of men the doubt whether we in America could rise to the full command of this supreme situation and equal these sublime contests, I summon them to view this record that I bring to you in my message and join with our whole Nation crying out to her stewards, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

Sir, these are America, and if there be those who ever had doubt as to what this, our America, represented in an hour that would test it, let them behold this panorama and regard this picture of greatness of soul and cry out "That is America!"

Mr. President, when we see, therefore, what this all means to us, we turn then to the last reflection—what, sir, does it mean to the others? There have been, sir, differences expressed on this floor; there have been differences expressed on the floor of the other House on the part of able and conscientious men preceding this war as to what course this country should take; but, sir, when there came the decree from the people decreeing the necessity of this conflict for the preservation of the institutions for which America had lived and for which her sons had died, there was but one voice, there is to-day but one movement, there is but one course between heaven and earth—it is toward their country, behind their flag.

Goethe, Mr. President, speaking for what he believed would be an ultimate united Germany, said: "My one prayer is that Germany shall know but one love, her country, and but one foe, the foreigner." Sir, America responds as against the Prussian princes in the words of the great philosopher and poet, Goethe, and we say: "This is America which personifies the prayer of the German poet. We stand before the world with but one love, our country, one foe, and we one against the foe, and that Prussia, and that which she brings to bear this day against America."

Sir, let these foes, wherever they are, behold us for what we stand and the thing which this day before the world we promise. Let them now see with awakened gaze this united land—the sacrifice of her men, the glory of her women, and the ardor of her people—and seeing this in all its strength and in all it threatens and in its unvanquished power, behold it advancing upon those who are our assailants; and, sir, trembling, as they shall see this great aroused America, from their soul filled with terror, exclaim before the earth, "Alas, against us we have aroused America!"

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 2858. An act to defray expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States;

S. 2916. An act to amend sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, relating to the jurisdiction of the district courts, so as to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State; and

S. 2937. An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate numbered 80 and 100 to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes; disagrees to the remainder of the amendments of the Senate to the bill; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the bill and amendments and had appointed Mr. SIMS, Mr. RAYBURN, and Mr. ESCH managers of the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2437. An act to provide for the acquisition of an air-station site for the United States Navy;

S. 2774. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Gilmer-Pittsburgh Coal Co. to construct a bridge across the Little Kanawha River;

S. 2883. An act making further provision for the allotment of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5082. An act providing for an amendment to section 2293 of the Revised Statutes, allowing homestead and other public land affidavits to be taken before the military commander of any person engaged in military or naval service of the United States;

H. R. 5949. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6310. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Trumbull Steel Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio; and

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of October salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session.

MEDICAL AND DENTAL SURGEONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4897) to amend section 10 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, to this House bill I have no objection whatever if it is to be passed in the form in which it came from the House or as amended slightly in Senate committee. I would not like to see it encumbered with anything else not yet considered by the Military Committee of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is reported with amendments, to strike out—

Section 10 of the act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1916, is hereby amended by adding the following proviso:
"Provided."

And by inserting the word "first" after the word "emergency," so that it reads:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing emergency first lieutenants in the Medical Corps of the Regular Army and of the National Guard shall be eligible to promotion as captain upon such examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WARREN. I agree perfectly with those amendments; I have no objection to the bill whatever in that form; but as I have said, if it is to be opened for other amendments, matters that have not been considered by the committee, I would object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know what might come up, of course.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I would not be quite fair to the Senate if I did not state that if the bill is brought up I shall expect to offer as an amendment thereto the amendment which was introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on the 28th of June, 1917, slightly modified. I present it for this reason——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Will the Senator from Ohio suspend for one moment? The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2854) to amend the naturalization laws.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this bill was discussed for a little while the other day and met with some opposition. I anticipated preparing an amendment to the bill that would enable it to pass the Senate without much delay, but after consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Naturalization of the House I find there is no chance of the bill passing at this session of Congress. For that reason I withdraw the bill from further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the bill will be returned to the calendar?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from New York will be granted. The bill will be withdrawn from further consideration and returned to the calendar. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. POMERENE. The bill as reported from the committee provides for certain relief for medical officers. I have no objection to that relief being granted. I think it ought to be granted. I think it is due to the medical profession.

The amendment offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts, which I shall present as an amendment to the bill, affects the dental officers of the Army. It has seemed to me since I have been in the Senate that there has been a disposition, in some quarters at least, to discriminate against the dental profession, but if there ever was a time in the history of this country when the dental profession should be cared for it is now, because of the method of trench warfare which is in vogue in Europe to-day. Many of the injuries sustained by soldiers are to the face and the mouth, and the work which is done by the dental profession has commended itself to the admiration of the world.

I do not like to look upon dental surgeons as if they were a separate and distinct profession. It seems to me they are specialists in one branch of surgery, and if we are going to do what is just to the medical profession—and I am glad the committee is seeking to do that—I shall ask at the same time that there be a modicum of justice extended to the dental profession. For that reason I shall offer this amendment if the Senate takes up the bill for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I may discuss the bill for a moment, reserving the privilege of objecting, I wish the Senator from Ohio would let that matter be considered separately and for the interest of the very matter, because with that amendment, if I am rightly informed, the bill can not become a law at this session, whereas without it it undoubtedly could become a law. The Lodge amendment, to which the Senator from Ohio refers, was not intended for this bill, but for the national-defense law already enacted. The bill now under consideration is for a particular purpose and refers particularly to certain volunteer services of medical officers who find themselves under the law which is applicable in peace times laboring under some embarrassment. It is for the one distinct item, while the purpose of the amendment proposed is to reorganize and change the whole dental service.

The Senator can not impute to me, and I presume he does not, any opposition to the Dental Corps, because its members were I think, recognized and made a part of the commissioned force of the Army Medical Department while I was chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I had pleasure in doing what I could for them. There are other matters that are still unsettled; the professions are entirely different. The bill deals with the old-established Medical Corps as to this one particular only. I ask the Senator to let the bill go through as it is, because the bill in that way can become a law, while I am satisfied, from information I have, that if this amendment prevails the bill will simply lie dead until we meet again. The medical service as to these captains who have volunteered their services is embarrassed now in gathering our troops and providing for their embarkation to foreign countries.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not question the statement of the Senator from Wyoming to the effect that he has been friendly to the dental profession, but it has happened often that bills come in here for the relief of the medical profession and no relief is provided for the Dental Corps. This is not a new matter. It has been before the departments and it has been before the committee. The dental profession is very, very much interested in it. I do not see why we may not take up the bill and add this amendment if in the wisdom of the Senate it should be added.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming objects to this amendment. If it is adopted it is only six weeks until we meet again. There is no reason why the bill should not be passed now with this amendment. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will not object. Why should not these two branches of the service be provided for at the same time?

I wish to say that I was on the committee when the Senator from Wyoming was the able chairman of the Military Committee, and he and I both did what we could for the recognition of the dentists of the country. It was through him and myself and others on the committee that we succeeded for the first time while he was chairman of that committee in having dentists recognized by the Government and giving them a status in the Army and Navy.

It is not very important that the bill should pass this week. Suppose the amendments of the Senate are not agreed to by the House at this session, we can put this amendment on, and then in six weeks it will go to conference and the bill will be passed. The bill has already passed the House, and it can pass this body with the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. I do not see the point the Senator from Wyoming makes. I do not see any reason why the amendment should not be adopted now.

Mr. WARREN. Regardless of the fact that the Senator may not see my point in what I have said, it is like this: In the first place, this was not an amendment offered to this bill in its introduction. It was to amend the national-defense act, which is a long act, as to rank and pay and everything else connected with the entire Medical Department. This amendment offered is really a new piece of legislation, whereas the bill to which it is proposed to offer it provides for one particular thing. It is to provide that these educated and experienced and able medical men volunteering their services during the war can have the rank of captain, regardless of the old law, which required five years' service as a first lieutenant before a captaincy could be attained. It provides that they may be captains earlier, provided they pass the examination prescribed by the Secretary of War. That is all there is to this bill. It consists of a very few lines, and I will read it:

That during the existing emergency first lieutenants in the Medical Corps of the Regular Army and of the National Guard shall be eligible to promotion as captain upon such examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it is necessary legislation; I am in favor of it; but the Senator will remember the efforts of the Senator from Ohio and other Senators. I remember the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] offered an amendment to the National Defense Council act providing for the Dental Corps. So they are provided for in that law. This amendment simply applies to that law.

Mr. WARREN. The proviso proposed by the Senator from Ohio starts in as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the Dental Corps of the Army shall consist of commissioned officers of the same grades and proportionally distributed among such grades as are now or may be hereafter provided by law for the Medical Corps, who shall have the rank, pay, promotion, and allowances of officers of corresponding grades in the Medical Corps, etc.

It goes on through, applying to the entire law. I say it ought not to go on here. It is a general law which I do not object to, but I do object to putting it on here when this bill simply provides for a few captains whose services are very necessary and will not be obtainable without it.

I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill, because I am very anxious to see it pass, but I hope the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will not be added, because I do not want to have the bill fail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 3, after the word "That," to strike out:

Section 10 of the act making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1916, is hereby amended by adding the following proviso:
Provided:

And in line 7, after the word "emergency," to insert the word "first," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing emergency first lieutenants in the Medical Corps of the Regular Army and of the National Guard shall be eligible to promotion as captain upon such examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a further committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lines 7 and 11 strike out the quotation marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk the following amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "War" and before the period, in line 11, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the Dental Corps of the Army shall consist of commissioned officers of the same grades and proportionally distributed among such grades as are now or may be hereafter provided by law for the Medical Corps, who shall have the rank, pay, promotion, and allowances of officers of corresponding grades in the Medical Corps, including the right to retirement as in the case of other officers, and there shall be one dental officer for every thousand of the total strength of the Regular Army authorized from time to time by law: Provided further, That dental examining and review boards shall consist of one officer of the Medical Corps and two officers of the Dental Corps: And provided further, That immediately following the approval of this act all dental surgeons then in active service shall be recommissioned in the Dental Corps in the grades herein authorized in the order of their seniority and without loss of pay or allowances or of relative rank in the Army.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment which I think the Senator from Ohio will accept. It is to add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no dental surgeon shall be recommissioned who has not been confirmed by the Senate.

I understand the Senator from Ohio will accept it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he eliminate from his amendment the opening words "Provided, That," because the amendment was evidently prepared to the bill as it came from the House, and now it is not in the shape of a proviso; it is really affirmative legislation.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Florida is well made, and I accept that suggestion.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will simply come in as a new paragraph, and then, of course, the title will have to be amended so as to cover both propositions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the first line of the amendment strike out the words "Provided, That" and change the letter beginning the word "hereafter" to upper case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio as amended is agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add to the amendment just agreed to the following:

All regulations concerning the enlistment of medical students in the Enlisted Reserve Corps and their continuance in their college course while subject to call to active service shall apply similarly to dental students.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The committee reported to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the promotion of first lieutenants in the Regular Army and National Guard to the grade of captain and respecting the Dental Corps of the Army and."

Mr. FLETCHER. That should be added.

On motion of Mr. POMERENE, the title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide for the promotion of first lieutenants in the Regular Army and National Guard to the grade of captain, and respecting the Dental Corps of the Army and medical and dental students," and for other purposes.

NEUTRAL SHIPS SUNK BY GERMANY.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the record of Germany since the beginning of the war in 1914 conclusively demonstrates that it has been her purpose to destroy the shipping of the world. In violation of international law she sowed deadly mines upon the high seas for the purpose of destroying commerce, and followed this with an indefensible policy of submarine warfare aimed not only against the ships of belligerents, but against the ships of neutral nations. It seems obvious that her purpose was, if she should be successful in the world contest, to take the few remaining ships of belligerent nations as prizes of war, and with the ships of the world destroyed she would be left the sole mistress of the carrying trade, limited though it might be, of the world. However that may be, Germany ruthlessly engaged in the wicked and wanton destruction of the vessels that bore the commerce of the world. Treaty obligations and the accepted principles of international law, as well as the claims of humanity, were violated and cynically denied. And in the destruction of the commerce and of the ships of the world engaged in peaceful missions Germany deliberately assassinated noncombatants—men, women, and children alike. When our Nation was at peace with Germany and the obligations of century-old treaties existed, she wantonly attacked American ships and the American flag and sent American citizens to watery graves.

I have here a list of neutral ships sunk by Germany from the beginning of the war up to April 26, 1917. I have made some investigation and believe that it does not include the names of all neutral ships that were destroyed, but I am confident that it is accurate as to the names given. I do not have the number nor the names of vessels of neutral nations destroyed by Germany since April 26, 1917; but every person familiar with the progress of the war knows that a large number of vessels have been destroyed by German submarines and German mines since that date. The ruthless campaign has been carried on by Germany with increased vigor as the weeks and months have gone by, and the number destroyed has been limited only by the ability of Germany to destroy. There has been no abatement of her efforts, but, upon the contrary, Germany has been more active and more aggressive and more determined to continue her ruthless warfare than ever before. She rests her purpose of winning the war upon the success of the submarine policy.

The helpless and weak nations, nations that have materially aided her in the war, have been alike the victims of her atrocities and indefensible warfare. The Scandinavian nations and Holland have been victims and have suffered more than more powerful nations. Norway appears to have been the special object of Germany's wrath and destructive policy. While I may not speak accurately, my recollection is that 19 Norwegian vessels were destroyed by Germany in the month of September. I should add, in passing, that many vessels have been reported as lost which doubtless have been destroyed by German submarines. It is known that German newspapers not only advocated the destruction of the ships of neutral nations but also suggested that all on board should be murdered, so that no trace of the crime would be left. In harmony with this inhuman, cowardly, criminal, and wicked policy the German minister in Argentina wired his Government to sink the ships of Argentina "without leaving a trace." The words "spurlos versenkt" have taken on a frightful meaning and show the depravity and cold-blooded inhumanity of German diplomatists, as well as Prussian militarists.

I desire to have printed in the RECORD the compilation referred to, and which was prepared, as I am informed, by Prof. Macnale Dixon, of Glasgow University, giving a list of neutral ships sunk by Germany between the dates before stated. This compilation gives the names, gross tonnage, and dates of destruction. I have stated that these vessels were either mined or torpedoed. I again repeat that, in my opinion, it does not include all neutral ships destroyed by German submarines. As the days go by, evidence will accumulate of other vessels destroyed and of wholesale murders and cowardly assassinations of sailors and noncombatants traveling in neutral ships and under neutral flags. This compilation shows that between the dates mentioned, 849 neutral vessels were sunk by Germany, and that the total tonnage was 1,653,654. Of these vessels, 20 were American. I regret that I do not have a list of the neutral ships destroyed by German submarines since April 26, 1917, and I also regret that I do not have the names and the number of American vessels that have been destroyed by Germany since this Nation entered this world conflict.

I ask unanimous consent that the pamphlet containing the compilation referred to, and which I send to the desk, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A LIST OF NEUTRAL SHIPS SUNK BY THE GERMANS FROM AUGUST 8, 1914, TO APRIL 26, 1917.

Germany's deliberate campaign against neutral shipping is here set forth in a passionless catalogue. The facts themselves are eloquent, and there seems to be no need for rhetorical embroidery. The magnitude of the injustice paralyzes the judgment. For these acts do not fall within any of the familiar formulæ by which we explain to ourselves the aberrations of human conduct. War is intelligible, but these are not, be it remembered, acts of war, as Germany defines war, but of peace. The ships and lives destroyed are the ships and lives of friends, of nations with whom she professes to have no quarrel, some of whom have assisted, and assisted valiantly, in alleviating her distress. Engaged in peaceful commerce, guilty of no belligerent act, protected by international law, they were none the less destroyed. Behind these melancholy official columns lie the tragedies. The imagination, and that only in dim and distant fashion, can paint the full picture of this modern slaughter of the innocents, the death and suffering and misery of which this colorless record is the merest index. A brief analysis reveals that the policy is calculated and varies in inverse proportion to the strength of the people attacked. America and Spain suffer least. Norway is treated with merciless severity. Countries from which Germany draws needful supplies receive some consideration. These are the limitations, dictated solely by self-interest, which Germany has observed. To reduce the world's shipping, to damage her opponents by weakening all neutrals, and to secure in case of defeat that the conclusion of hostilities may not find her alone impoverished—this seems to be the triple-edged design which humanity will find it difficult to forgive and history to forget.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 4 hours and 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS (S. REPT. NO. 172).

Mr. WALSH. The Committee on Privileges and Elections have had under consideration certain matters referred to it, and have authorized me to submit the following report to the Senate and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report is as follows:

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS,
UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., October 5, 1917.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections having had under consideration certain matters referred to it by the Senate on the 1st day of October, 1917, this day adopted the following resolution:

"Action having been requested by Senator STONE on certain communications in which he was assailed, it being charged therein that he has obstructed the enactment of measures for the prosecution of the war, the committee finds that they make mention of no facts warranting action by it. The record discloses that though Senator STONE opposed the declaration of war, he has since it was adopted voted for all such measures considered by the Senate on which a record vote was taken."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 2920. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass cannon, with carriage; and

S. 2947. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of El Paso, Tex., to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River within or near the city limits of El Paso, Tex., such construction to be made with the consent and cooperation of the Republic of Mexico.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116) for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within three years from the date of entry into the United States, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2203. An act for the establishment of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

S. 2938. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River, in Poinsett County, Ark., at or near the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 11 north, range 6 east;

H. R. 3932. An act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the sale, manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4232. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across Flint River, in the State of Georgia;

H. R. 5647. An act to provide for the reimbursement of officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States for property lost or destroyed in such service;

H. R. 6094. An act amending an act to increase the limit of the cost of certain public buildings, etc.;

H. R. 6175. An act giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska;

H. R. 6306. An act to provide for the payment of six months' gratuity to the widows, children, or other previously designated dependent relative of retired officers or enlisted men on active duty;

H. R. 6350. An act to authorize the issuance of Reserve Corps and National Army commissions in the lower grades of Staff Corps and to remove the fixed age limits requiring the discharge of Reserve Corps officers;

H. R. 6362. An act to promote the efficiency of the United States Navy;

H. R. 6363. An act to provide for the service of officers of auxiliary naval forces on naval courts; and

H. J. Res. 116. Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 15, 19, 25, 26, 33, 60, 92, 105, and 106.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 103, 104, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 118, and 119, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the first line of the amendment proposed by the Senate strike out "406" and insert the figure "3"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "cohabitation," at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senate, insert the following:

"Provided further, That for the purpose of the administration of Article II of this act marriage shall be conclusively presumed, in the absence of proof, that there is a legal spouse living, if the man and woman have lived together in the openly acknowledged relation of husband and wife during the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of war, or the date of enlistment or of entrance into or employment in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States if subsequent to such declaration."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Not later than five years after the date of the termination of the war as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States, the term insurance shall be converted, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by regulations and as the insured may request. Regulations shall provide for the right to convert into ordinary life, 20-payment life, endowment maturing at age 62, and into other usual forms of insurance and shall prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums thereon, but payments of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 24. That the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, so far as practicable, shall upon request furnish information to and act for persons in the military or naval service, with respect to any contracts of insurance, whether with the Government or otherwise, as may be prescribed by regulations. Said bureau may, upon request, procure from and keep a record of the amount and kind of insurance held by every commissioned and appointive officer and of every enlisted man in the military or naval service of the United States, including the name and principal place of business of the company, society, or organization in which such insurance is held, the date of the policy, amount of premium, name and relationship of the beneficiary, and such other data as may be deemed of service in protecting the interests of the insured and beneficiaries."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", and if such child, if born after December 31, 1917, shall have been born in the United States, or in its insular possessions"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
HOKE SMITH,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
T. W. SIMS,
SAM RAYBURN,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the statement accompanying the conference report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the conference report:

On amendment No. 1: Changes the reference to the number of the section.

On amendment No. 2: Limits the construction of section 9 as referring only to the Division of Marine and Seaman's Insurance.

On amendment No. 3: Limits the amount of compensation paid to claim agents and attorneys for services to 10 per cent.

On amendment No. 4: Strike out the words "so far as practicable," to which the House conferees agreed.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment makes the fees allowed and salaries to be the same as in other departments of the Government for similar services.

On amendment No. 6: The House conferees accepted the Senate amendment in its entirety, but also added in addition thereto the House text, which relates to proof of marriages for the purpose of the administration of article 2.

On amendment No. 7: Changes the word "approval" to "enactment."

On amendment No. 8: Changes the word "act" to "amendatory act."

On amendment No. 9: This amendment provides that the child must be legally adopted before enlistment.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment simply adds a comma after the word "only."

On amendment No. 11: This amendment proposes to insert "instrument in writing signed by."

On amendment No. 12: This amendment fixes the date of birth of child, and requires birth in the United States or in its insular possessions.

On amendment No. 13: The Senate conferees receded from this amendment, which defines the term of "wife divorced" as being wife divorced without her fault as the ground or cause of such divorce.

On amendment No. 14: This amendment is simply a correction.

On amendment No. 15: This amendment restores the House text which defines the age limit of a child.

On amendment No. 16: This amendment changes the language as to "disability."

On amendment No. 17: This amendment eliminates an Army clerk and a field clerk, Quartermaster Corps, from the definition of the term "commissioned officer."

On amendment No. 18: This amendment includes in the definition of the terms "man and enlisted man" members of training camps authorized by law.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment defines the term "dependent," and the Senate receded.

On amendment No. 20: Simply inserts the word "amendatory" before the word "act."

On amendment No. 21: The House recedes on amendment No. 21, striking out the words "a person mentally incompetent," because it is covered in amendment No. 22, disagreement to which the House also recedes.

On amendment No. 23: The House recedes on this amendment, as the language substituted by the Senate more clearly defines the party to whom payment shall be made.

On amendment No. 24: The Senate recedes from its amendment striking out section 24, and agrees thereto with an amendment inserting the words "on request" after the word "shall," in line 10, and also with amendment striking out the word "shall," in line 14 of the same section, and inserting the words "may on request."

On amendments Nos. 25 and 26: The Senate recedes from its amendments 25 and 26, which are only corrections.

On amendment No. 27: This amendment, which provides that allotment shall be made only to former wife divorced to whom alimony has been decreed; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 28: Adds the word "decree" after the court order.

On amendment No. 29: Inserts the word "written" before the word "agreement"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 30: This amendment defines what illegitimate child the father must contribute to, and further provides that where it has been judicially ordered that it shall not be beyond the amount decreed by the court; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 31: This amendment strikes out the words "his next of kin" and inserts in lieu thereof the words "the person or persons who would under the laws of the State of his residence be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 32: Strikes out the words "declaration of war" and inserts in lieu thereof "November 1, 1917"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 33: This amendment limits the payment of family allowances for members of Class A and to those dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 34: This amendment relates to alimony when decreed to the wife; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 35: This amendment inserts the word "decree"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 36: This amendment inserts the word "written" after the word "agreement"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 37: This amendment relates to an illegitimate child to whose support the father has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute, and the amount of the allotment shall not exceed the amount fixed in the order or decree; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 38: This amendment relates to the allotment under Class B; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 39: This amendment simply changes the word "amendment" to "amendatory act"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 40: This amendment proposes to strike out "a wife, including a former wife divorced, and the children not in her custody, and as between children," and inserts "the members of Class A and as between the members of Class B"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 41: This amendment simply changes the language relating to the regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the distribution of allotments, and clarifies the language; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 42: This amendment simply inserts the words "on the basis of"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 43: This amendment relates to certifications to the War and Navy Departments with reference to the amount of the allotment to be made by the man; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 44: This amendment strikes out the words "in the course of the service"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 45: This amendment provides that no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by the willful misconduct of the man; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 46: This amendment strikes out the words "from a marriage contracted before or within 10 years after the injury," and is covered in another section of the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment strikes out the word "substantially" before the word "dependent"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 48: This amendment strikes out the words "percentages of his pay," and inserts the word "amounts." This is necessary because the percentage provisions of the bill were stricken out in the House, and the word "amounts" inserted in lieu thereof; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 49 to 55, inclusive: These amendments all reduce the rates of compensation as passed by the House; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 56: This amendment strikes out the word "substantially" before the word "dependent"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 57, 58, and 59: These amendments relate to the payment of burial expenses and return of bodies to homes of men who died before discharge or resignation from the service. The House provision provided for the payment of $100 for burial expenses for men who died after discharge or resignation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 60: This amendment strikes out "18" and inserts "16"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 61: This amendment strikes out the words "mental or physical infirmity, of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation, then until the marriage or death or until such incapacity ceases," and inserts the words "insane, idiotic, or otherwise being permanently helpless, then during such incapacity"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No 62: This amendment simply defines the word "widow" as used in section 301; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 63: This amendment strikes out "so as to make it impracticable for the injured person to pursue any gainful occupation," for the reason that if the injury is total a person could not pursue a gainful occupation; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 64 to 71, inclusive: These amendments reduce the rates for disability resulting from injury and change the lettering of the paragraphs; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 72: This amendment simply changes the lettering of the paragraphs; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 73: This amendment strikes out the word "substantially" before the word "dependent"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 74: This amendment inserts the word "amounts," which is necessary; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 75: This amendment adds to the classification of those permanently disabled the words "those helplessly and permanently bedridden"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 76: This amendment provides that those helplessly and permanently bedridden must be from causes occurring "in the line of duty"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 77: This amendment inserts the word "governmental" before the word "medical"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 78: This amendment inserts the words "with such" before the word "supplies"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No 79: This amendment inserts a proviso that nothing in this act shall be construed to effect the necessary military control over any member of the Military or Naval Establishments before he shall have been discharged from the military or naval service, which is admitted to be necessary to avoid any conflict of authority; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 80: The House concurred in this amendment.

On amendments Nos. 81 and 82: This amendment simply renumbers the sections.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment strikes out section 307, which relates to the definition of the term "pay"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 84, 85, 86, and 87: These amendments simply renumbers the sections; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 88: The House recedes with an amendment changing the time for the occurrence of the disability to 5 years instead of 10 years, as inserted by the House, and the 2 years as inserted by the Senate.

On amendment No. 89: This amendment strikes out "in the course of," before the word "service," and inserts "during the"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 90 and 91: On these amendments the House recedes with an amendment changing the time for the occurrence of the disability to 5 years instead of 10 years, as inserted by the House, and 2 years, as inserted by the Senate.

On amendment No. 92: This amendment adds after the word "such," the words "minority or"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 93, 94, and 95: These amendments simply change the numbers of the sections; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 96: This amendment strikes out the words "existing pension laws and laws providing for gratuities or payment in the event of death in the service," and inserts the words "the laws providing for gratuities or payment in the event of death in the service and existing pension laws"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 97: This amendment inserts the words "or their widows, children, or their dependents"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 98: This amendment renumbers the section only.

On amendment No. 99: This amendment inserts the word "amendatory" before the word "act"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 100: The House concurred in the amendment.

On amendment 104: Insert the words "and permanent" before the word "disability." House recedes.

On amendment 105: Insert the word "dependent" before the word "both"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment 106: Insert the word "dependent" before the word "sister"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment 107: Insert the words "and permanent" before the word "disability."

On amendment 108: Strike out the words "and to such other person as may be provided for from time to time by regulations"; and the House recedes.

On amendment 109: Simply strike out the word "only"; and the House recedes.

On amendment 110: Insert before the word "installments" the words "two hundred and forty equal monthly," for the reason that it was desired that these payments should run for a period of 20 years; and the House recedes.

On amendment 111: Adds the words "dividends from gains and savings," as it is believed the beneficiaries should have the full value of the policy at the time of the death; and the House recedes.

On amendment 112: Makes the basis of calculation the American experience of mortality, with interest at 3½ per cent per annum, and provides further that no deduction shall be made from continuous installments during the life of the insured in case of total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. House recedes.

On amendment 113: Strike out the words "or as in the regulations." House recedes.

On amendment 114: Adds after the words "reserve value" the words "if any"; and the House recedes.

On amendment 115: Strikes out the word "policy" and inserts in lieu thereof the words "contracts of insurance"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 116: Inserts after the word "war" the words "and thereafter until converted."

On amendment No. 117: Provides that not later than five years after the close of this war that term insurance shall be converted into other lines of insurance without medical examination, which supersedes the House provision that it could be converted after the war. The House agrees to the Senate amendment with the following amendments: After the word "after" insert the words "the date of the termination of," and after the word "war" in the same line "as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States."

On amendment No. 118: This amendment simply strikes out the words "And provided further, That no," and inserts before the word "or" the word "no." House recedes.

On amendment No. 119: Strikes out the words "this act" and inserts the words "the provision of this section." House recedes.

On amendment No. 120: Adds a new section to the bill—section No. 3—which provides for the revival of the term "general" in the United States Army, and provides for the appointment of the commander of the United States forces now in France to this rank, and provides that the salary of the general shall be $10,000 and the lieutenant generals $9,000.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 5, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for our Republic, with its vast domain, its rich and varied resources, its sacred institutions and high ideals. Increase our patriotism, our intellectual, moral and spiritual life, that we may continue the exemplar in government of the people, by the people, for the people. Hasten the day when wars and rumors of wars shall cease to be, when all the world shall live together in peace and harmony, and we will ascribe all praise to Thee, our God and one Father.

O the sun and the rain, and the rain and the sun!
There'll be sunshine again when the tempest is done;
And the storm will beat back when the shining is past,
But in some happy harbor we'll anchor at last.

O the rain and the sun, and the sun and the rain!
When the tempest is done, the sunshine again!
And in rapture we'll ride through the stormiest gales,
For God's hand's on the helm, and His breath in the sails.

Then murmur no more in lull or in roar,
But smile and be brave till the voyage is o'er.

Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendment on the bill H. R. 5723, the war-risk insurance bill, and agree to the conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendment to the war-risk insurance bill and agree to the conference asked for. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Has that been printed?

Mr. ADAMSON. Not in the RECORD.

Mr. GILLETT. I understand there is an amendment which puts the Civil War veterans and the Spanish War veterans on the same footing as the present war.

Mr. ADAMSON. No; I can tell the gentleman the language. It is that the widows of the veterans of the Civil War and the widows of the veterans of the Spanish-American War be paid $25 a month, and that it be administered by the Pension Bureau.

Mr. GILLETT. Is there any objection on the part of the gentleman from Georgia to that amendment?

Mr. ADAMSON. Speaking personally, I do not want to convert the war-insurance bill into a pension bill.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to move to concur in that amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not do that. I am not announcing any opinion of the conferees.

Mr. GILLETT. Unless we have some assurance that that amendment will be agreed to or that the House will have an opportunity to vote upon it, I shall not consent.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will give the gentleman my own opinion, which is that we have two committees on pensions, and I would not like to invade the jurisdiction of those committees. What the conferees will do I do not know. I do not intend to be a conferee.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman says he does not want to invade the jurisdiction of the committees; this bill is virtually providing pensions.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is where the gentleman from Massachusetts and I differ. It is not a pension bill; it is an insurance bill. We have two committees on pensions and we do not want to invade their jurisdiction.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. GILLETT. We ought to have some assurance that it will be agreed to, or some assurance that the House will have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman ought not to require such an assurance; we ought to go to a full and free conference.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I make that motion.

Mr. ADAMSON. But I am asking for unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent but he does not seem to be getting it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman will not get unanimous consent without some assurance that the amendment will be agreed to or that the House will have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can not give any such assurance.

Mr. GILLETT. Then I will object unless some assurance is given, either that we have an opportunity to vote upon it or that it will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. SMOOT as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 6094. An act amending the act to increase the limit of the cost of certain public buildings, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2437) to provide for the acquisition of an air-station site for the United States Navy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2937. An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6362. An act to promote the efficiency of the United States Navy;

H. R. 4232. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across Flint River in the State of Georgia;

H. R. 5646. An act to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 5648. An act to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5918. An act to authorize the President to organize provisionally as Field Artillery or Infantry and to use as Field Artillery or Infantry during the existing emergency such regiments of Cavalry as he may designate;

H. R. 6175. An act giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska;

H. R. 6306. An act to provide for the payment of six months' gratuity to the widow, children, or other previously designated dependent relative of retired officers or enlisted men on active duty;

H. R. 6350. An act to authorize the issuance of Reserve Corps and National Army commissions in the lower grades of Staff Corps, and to remove the fixed age limits requiring the discharge of Reserve Corps officers;

H. R. 6363. An act to provide for the service of officers of auxiliary naval forces on naval courts; and

H. R. 5647. An act to provide for the reimbursement of officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States for property lost or destroyed in such service.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5949. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5082. An act providing for an amendment to section 2293 of the Revised Statutes, allowing homestead and other public-land affidavits to be taken before the military commander of any person engaged in military or naval service of the United States; and

H. R. 6310. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Trumbull Steel Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2883. An act making further provision for the allotment of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of October salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session; and

S. 2437. An act to provide for the acquisition of an air-station site for the United States Navy.

GREETINGS TO THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution 80.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House resolution 80, which the Clerk will report.

House resolution 80.

Whereas a message was transmitted on the 11th of April, 1917, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Republic of Cuba, through the legation of Cuba at Washington, D. C., to the effect that in declaring that a state of war existed between the Republic of Cuba and the German Empire, it was resolved by a rising vote to address a message of confraternity to the House of Representatives of the United States of America, expressing the pride felt by the people of Cuba in thus joining the flag of their Republic with that of the United States in the present war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives sends its greetings to the House of Representatives of the Republic of Cuba, and through the agency of that high body to the people of Cuba, expressing the deep satisfaction of the American people that the flags of the two nations again wave in brotherly union in defense of the common cause of liberty and justice; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution, duly engrossed and signed, be transmitted by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, through the legation of Cuba at Washington, D. C., to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Republic of Cuba.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I am in entire sympathy with the resolution, and I was more in sympathy with it when it was reported on May 28 of this year. It has been on the calendar four months. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether there was any reason why the action should be deferred until the closing days of Congress.

Mr. FLOOD. None whatever, except that on two or three occasions when I attempted to call it up it was urged that there was something else of pressing importance in connection with the war that should occupy the time of the House, and then it was overlooked, for which I apologize to our friends of the Cuban House of Representatives.

Mr. STAFFORD. It should have been considered shortly after it was introduced.

Mr. FLOOD. I agree with the gentleman and regret that it was not.

The promptness with which the heroic Republic of Cuba joined its fortunes with ours in the European war must be gratifying to every true American.

Fully realizing her obligation to this country for its decisive and unselfish intervention in behalf of the Cuban patriots in their struggle to cast off the yoke of Spain, our sister Republic did not hesitate to sustain the policy of the United States.

Without hesitation and without waiting to count the cost, Cuba came to the support of the United States and declared war upon the German Empire for its repeated and intolerable acts against civilization and against the rights and honor of the United States within one week after we declared a state of war to exist between this country and the Imperial German Government.

That young Republic made excellent use of the very first opportunity presented to it to demonstrate its gratitude for the splendid benefits it had received from this country. It was a fine exhibition of gratitude and patriotism. For its unselfish position, all honor to the Republic of Cuba.

The resolution is in response to the following communication, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

LEGACION DE CUBA,
Washington, D. C., April 9, 1917.

The House of Representatives of the Republic of Cuba, in declaring that a state of war exists between this nation and the German Empire, resolved—all members rising to their feet and amidst the greatest enthusiasm—to address a message of confraternity to that body announcing the pride felt by the people of Cuba in uniting their modest efforts to those of the great Nation contending for the triumph of right and respect for the liberty of small nationalities.

The house also resolved to express the special gratification of the Cuban people in uniting their flag side by side to that of the glorious Nation which, in days of undying memory, sacrificed the blood of her sons to help the people of Cuba to conquer their liberty and independence.

MIGUEL COYULA,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a digest of the various acts passed during this session affecting public lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing a digest of bills passed during this session affecting public lands. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2947. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of El Paso, Tex., to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River within or near the city limits of El Paso, Tex., such construction to be made with the consent and cooperation of the Republic of Mexico; and

S. 2493. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—BEAKES AGAINST BACON (H. REPT. NO. 194).

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Election Committee No. 3, I desire to make a report in the contested election case of Beakes against Bacon, second district of the State of Michigan. I send the report to the Clerk's desk and ask that it lie over and be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia presents the report in the contested election case of Beakes against Bacon, and asks that it lie over and be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I presume the gentleman does not propose to take action at this session.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Not at this session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REEXPORTATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 99, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within three years from the date of entry into the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To make inquiry about the resolution, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I ask the privilege of interrogating the gentleman from Illinois. Was this resolution before the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; this was before the Committee on Ways and Means, and was reported out unanimously. This affects liquor reaching the United States. On the 9th of September the food-control act went into effect. It passed the House on the tenth day of August, and by its terms shipments of distilled liquors from other countries into the United States are prohibited. After the 9th day of September a number of shipments were on their way when this bill was passed, notably a shipment of considerable size in the Eastgate, which left a French port during the month of June. The ship was rammed by a torpedo-boat destroyer, and she put into an English port for extensive repairs. She sailed again after repairs were made and was torpedoed by a submarine, and again put back into an English port, and is still there being repaired.

This shipment will reach the United States very soon, and this bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may retain control of liquors arriving in this country under these circumstances and permit exportation at any time within one year from their arrival to some other country. It does not interfere with the operations of the food bill at all. It is much needed legislation, and under the law the shipments must be returned to the country of origin, and we need the room in ships for other purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This does not waive any of the customs laws?

Mr. RAINEY. Not at all.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to the resolution of congratulation to the Republic of Cuba.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate joint resolution No. 99.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to permit the entry of distilled spirits shipped from any foreign country to the United States prior to September 1, 1917, into bonded warehouses in the United States, under bond to be given by the importer of such distilled spirits, conditioned for the export of such goods to some foreign country within the period of one year from and after the entry thereof into the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Is it contemplated that such distilled spirits described in the resolution shall go to a customs bonded warehouse or to some internal-revenue bonded warehouse?

Mr. RAINEY. I presume they will go to a customs bonded warehouse.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within one year from the date of entry into the United States."

RIGHTS AND REMEDIES UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the bill (S. 2916) to amend sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, relating to the jurisdiction of the district courts, so as to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State, and that the same be considered now.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the purpose of making an inquiry——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. While a bill is being read, can a gentleman interrupt the reading to ask a question?

Mr. MADDEN. The bill was not being read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think he can.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask that the bill be read into the RECORD, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I understood the bill was ordered only to be reported, not to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always orders these things reported by title, and sometimes it is so clear to some gentleman that he does not propose to have it considered that he objects on the ground of the information he obtains from the reading of the title. Sometimes he desires the whole bill read.

Mr. MADDEN. I know that the Chair ordered this bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman as soon as the bill is read.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not making any objection about not being recognized. I simply want to have the record clear as to what was done. It was ordered to be reported, not to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directed the Clerk to report the bill by title. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That clause 3 of section 24 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Third. Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, and to claimants the rights and remedies under the workman's compensation law of any State; of all seizures on land or waters not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; of all prizes brought into the United States; and of all proceedings for the condemnation of property taken as prize."

SEC. 2. That clause 3 of section 256 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Third. Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, and to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina in what respect this changes the law as it exists to-day?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that the bill as read sounds a little long, but the only new language added to the present law is this:

And to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State.

That is all the new language that is used as an amendment to the Judicial Code, and if the gentleman desires I will state the reason why we desire that amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like very much to have it stated.

Mr. WEBB. Under the compensation laws of New York and all the other States where they administer compensation laws, heretofore stevedores and longshoremen have received the benefits of the State compensation laws. Last fall, I believe it was, a man by the name of Jensen was killed while loading a ship in New York. The Southern Pacific Railroad, which owned the ship, after the compensation laws of New York had applied and allowed $5.87 weekly for his wife, appealed, and the highest court of New York held that the State compensation law applied to the case like other laborers in the harbor of New York, and the Southern Pacific Co. appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and Mr. Justice McReynolds decided—and I think as the law stands decided properly—that the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts applied to stevedores and longshoremen under the Judicial Code which gave jurisdiction to the admiralty court, and that is this language we now seek to amend. I read section 24 of the Judicial Code:

Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it.

Now, the Supreme Court said that the compensation law of New York was not a common-law remedy, but statutory, and, consequently, as the law was written these stevedores and longshoremen must finally be compelled to go into the admiralty courts where no compensation law applied. Now, all that we do is to put longshoremen and stevedores on a parity or equality with other laborers. I do not think anybody can object to it. I think it is absolutely fair and is very important to the labor of the country in view of the unrest that exists among a great many longshoremen and stevedores on account of the present discrimination against them in the application of State compensation laws.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1766. An act to authorize the President to appoint Col. L. Mervin Maus to the grade of brigadier general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list; and

S. 2918. An act providing that the forfeiture provisions of land laws shall not apply in the case of persons in the military or naval service during the present war.

EXPENSES OF FOREIGN OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill S. 2858.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina calls up the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2858) to defray expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman to make some explanation of this bill. I understand the purpose of it to be to pay foreign officers who have been invited to come to the United States to aid in the training of our troops such expenses as they may incur in the United States and to pay them such expenses as have already been incurred. I take it that means hotel expenses, traveling expenses, and so forth. It may be entirely proper and hospitable to do it, but there is no limitation as to the amount of expenses that shall be allowed, except that it shall be in the discretion of the Secretary of War. Have I stated it correctly?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. The gentleman has stated it correctly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman object to an amendment limiting the allowance of expenses for these foreign officers in the United States to such expenses as are allowed under like conditions to officers and enlisted men of the United States?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Speaker, that I would have absolutely no objection to it, except for this fact: This bill came to our committee from the War Department. I have a letter from the Secretary of War to Senator WADSWORTH stating the purpose, and if the gentleman will pardon me, I will read it to the House:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 7, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: For very necessary purposes of instruction in trench warfare, aviation, and other training for our Army, it has been deemed advisable to request from the French and English Governments that certain of their officers be sent to the United States to assist us in the latest methods found most practicable on the firing line.

Some of these foreign officers have already reported for duty in this connection and the arrival of others is anticipated.

Under existing legislation there is no provision for furnishing foreign officers with travel pay and expense allowance in the performance of their duties, and as their pay, less than that paid to our officers of the same grade, is inadequate to meet the high cost of living and travel in this country their present status here is an embarrassing one.

It is urgently requested that Congress provide legislation to meet this emergency substantially as follows:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations, and in such manner as he may prescribe, to employ such portion of the appropriations made for the transportation of the Army and its supplies, as in his judgment may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States during the present emergency, and that those officers and enlisted men, who may have been performing duties in this connection, be reimbursed from this appropriation for the expenditures they have already been obliged to make."

Respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary approves of this proposition?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Yes. If the gentleman will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, here is the situation as I understand it. The officers of foreign armies do not receive anything like as much compensation as our officers do. The private in the French Army receives only, I think, 4 cents a day. Our Government has requested those countries to send over their men to help train our troops, and you can readily see how impossible it would be for a man to live on 4 cents a day.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not hear the gentleman in view of the confusion in the House just now. Did I understand the gentleman to say the enlisted men of France now serving in the United States in our training camps are paid only 4 cents a day?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Four or 5 cents, I am not positive, but not more than that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four or 5 cents a day?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell us what the officers receive from their Government?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. My recollection is that a lieutenant in the French Army receives $60 a month, and the gentleman knows the difference, of course, between that pay and a first lieutenant in our Army. A first lieutenant in our Army, for instance, receives $2,000 a year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. These men are obliged to live at American hotels?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. The object of this bill is to put them on the same basis as ours.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that the main purpose?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. That is the main purpose of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it has the indorsement of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. The unanimous indorsement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it will embarrass the gentleman and the Military Affairs Committee I will not insist on an amendment.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I think the Secretary of War will look after that. It is in his discretion.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have heard that these officers and other foreign officers, civil and military, that have come over here have been charged by our Immigration Department with a head tax when they landed. Is this bill broad enough to cover that? I think it would under "expenses of travel," but I am not sure.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I think so.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I hope it will, because it is really a shame that it has been done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2858) to defray expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations and in such manner as he may prescribe, to employ such portion of the appropriations made for transportation of the Army and its supplies as in his judgment may be necessary to defray the expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States during the present emergency, and that those officers and enlisted men, who may have been performing duties in this connection, be reimbursed from this appropriation for the expenditures they have already been obliged to make.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A House bill, of similar tenor, was ordered laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives in compliance with its request the bill (H. R. 5271) authorizing the appointment of chaplains at large of the United States Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2203) for the establishment of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2527) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the joint resolution from the House of Representatives (H. J. Res. 116) for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy, do pass with the following amendment:

Page 4, lines 11 and 12, strike out "within the boundaries of the United States."

FEDERAL BUILDING AND SITE AT MOULTRIE, GA.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2852.

The SPEAKER. The bill does not have to have unanimous consent. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 2852, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2852) to increase the limit of cost of the Federal building and site therefor at Moultrie, Ga.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stats., p. 874), authorizing the purchase of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the use and accommodation of the United States post office, in the city of Moultrie, State of Georgia, at a limit of cost of $65,000 be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract for the construction of a building for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices at Moultrie, Ga., within the limit of cost of $70,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, is this on the Speaker's table a corresponding House bill having been reported?

The SPEAKER. That is the Speaker's understanding; yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman from Georgia think that is the fact? Is this identical with the bill that has been reported from the House committee?

Mr. PARK. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. It has to have unanimous consent.

Mr. GILLETT. I understood the Speaker said it did not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was so informed and so stated to the gentleman. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported.

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand there are a number of such bills pending before the House committee, and I would like the gentleman to state what exceptional reason there is for this bill to be passed.

Mr. PARK. This building is under the course of construction. The Secretary of the Treasury at first cut down about one-third of the appropriation, and they decided to build a one-story building. Afterwards a big packing house in Chicago brought a little packing house down there, and it increases it a third. They need 12 meat inspectors and they need a farm demonstrator, and the department asks that they be permitted to put on another story while they are building this. The bid asked for more money than they had on hand.

Mr. GILLETT. How large a place is it?

Mr. PARK. It has about 6,000 people. They want only $5,000, or such part of it as they may need.

Mr. GILLETT. Only $5,000 for a town of 6,000 people?

Mr. PARK. There is lots of business down there.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported this bill?

Mr. PARK. I saw the chairman. They did not have time to do it.

Mr. DENISON. Then there has been no favorable report from the House committee?

Mr. PARK. No; but they would do it if I could get it to them.

Mr. DENISON. I do not think the House ought to pass a bill of this kind without consideration first being given to it by the committee, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DENISON. I objected, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] objects.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER BETWEEN LITTLE ROCK AND ARGENTA.

Mr. JACOWAY and Mr. DENT arose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY] is recognized.

Mr. JACOWAY. I ask that the Speaker lay before the House the bill (S. 2937) authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta.

The SPEAKER. Is there a House bill of similar intent?

Mr. JACOWAY. There is.

The SPEAKER. On the calendar?

Mr. JACOWAY. Yes; and it has been unanimously reported.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of it?

Mr. JACOWAY. H. R. 6386.

The SPEAKER. Which one is it the gentleman wants?

Mr. JACOWAY. The one on the Speaker's table—S. 2937, which passed the Senate on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 2937. The Chair will state to all the Members that when they have bills to come up out of the regular order they ought to notify the Clerk, so that he will have a fair chance to get them. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the county of Pulaski, in the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River at the city of Little Rock on the site now occupied by the free highway bridge constructed by said county in the years 1896 and 1897, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk S. 2937 and have it laid before the Congress for its present consideration.

A similar bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is now on the House Calendar. This is a bill to authorize the tearing down and rebuilding of a bridge across the Arkansas River, uniting the cities of Little Rock and Argenta. It is made necessary by reason of the remarkable growth of these two cities, which lie on opposite sides of the Arkansas River. The present structure until recently was adequate for the traffic between the two places, but so rapid has been the development and growth from many standpoints of these two cities, and so great the increase in population that every means of transportation, housing, and accommodations of all kinds have been pressed to their utmost capacity. Since the establishment of the cantonment at Little Rock, known as Camp Pike, these facilities have utterly failed to meet the requirements.

The people of Pulaski County, and Little Rock and Argenta particularly, have most generously agreed to go into their pockets and reconstruct this bridge sufficiently to accommodate the increased traffic, largely made necessary by the preparations to train the National Army at that place. Our people have not only responded to every legal demand made upon them by the Government to furnish men and materials to protect the flag, but they have drawn upon their private means for nearly a half million of dollars to provide accommodations and facilities for this Government to use in training its armies, and they are willing to incur this additional expenditure of much more money to build this bridge across the Arkansas River for the express purpose of dedicating its use almost exclusively, or at least to whatever extent it may be necessary, to the Federal Government.

When our country went to war our people did not respond half-heartedly. They were in deadly earnest when they pledged their lives and their fortunes and their sacred honor to the preservation of our national liberty, and this is only one of the many evidences of their patriotic spirit. I hope no gentleman will object to its present consideration, because it is of vital importance not alone to the citizens of these two cities but to his Government as well. In almost every sense of the word this bill is a war measure, and I urge again that no gentleman on either side of the aisle object to the present consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, listening to the reading of the bill, I observe that this new bridge is to be constructed in place of a free-toll bridge.

Mr. JACOWAY. It is a free bridge now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says it is a free-toll bridge now. If this bill should become a law, would it permit the people privileged to construct this bridge to put up a toll bridge there?

Mr. JACOWAY. I think not. The county is building the bridge. This is for the purpose of reconstructing the old bridge that is now in use. They will have to reconstruct some of the piers. There is a favorable report from the War Department regarding this bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They might be in favor of constructing a better bridge than that which is there now, but the bridge now there is a free bridge, as I understand. The question of constructing a toll bridge is important. Is there any doubt about the possibility or legality of it?

Mr. JACOWAY. I think not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There ought not to be any question about it.

Mr. JACOWAY. The War Department has recommended the passage of this bill and there is a favorable report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House and a similar report from the Commerce Committee of the Senate. The idea of charging tolls on the new bridge never occurred to me and for one moment never entered the minds of the people interested in this measure. I feel sure it will be the same kind of a bridge as it has always been, in so far as tolls are concerned.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is quite important whether it is to be a toll bridge or not. What provision is there in your State regarding the regulation of tolls for transit over a bridge?

Mr. JACOWAY. The present bridge has been in use for some years, and it is desired to make the bridge larger and stronger, and they will have to enlarge the piers. The question of tolls is a new one to me. I think beyond question there is no idea to make it a toll bridge. The statutes of Arkansas fully safeguard the question of tolls.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is this a private company?

Mr. JACOWAY. No, sir. This is a bridge spanning the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta. Across the river from the city of Little Rock is located Camp Pike, where many thousands of United States soldiers are quartered, which cantonment has been constructed by the Government at a cost of many millions of dollars. At the present time there are not enough bridge facilities to adequately meet Government and other public needs.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman that, generally speaking, I have no objection to a bill of this kind; but I do not like to see, in a case where there is now a free bridge, permission given by Congress for the construction of a toll bridge. But I have no objection to this bill on the gentleman's assurance that it is his distinct understanding that this will not be a toll bridge.

Mr. JACOWAY. I think there is no intention to make a toll bridge of it, and I feel sure, and so state, that the fears of the gentleman from Wisconsin are groundless.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that House bill 6386 lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection a similar House bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman suspend for a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 27. An act to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes.

EXPENSES, FOREIGN OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. SHERLEY. The House just passed, through a misunderstanding, Senate bill 2858, to defray expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States. Almost the exact terms of that bill are carried in the urgent deficiency bill which was adopted by the House yesterday. There ought not to be duplication.

The SPEAKER. What was it about?

Mr. SHERLEY. Senate bill 2858 provides for the expenses of foreign officers and enlisted men detailed in this country. It was passed by the Senate and has just been passed by the House. We carried the details of that bill in the urgent deficiency bill. The Senate bill, therefore, should not be enacted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us what Senate amendment that was?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not remember the number of it, but there are two words there different in the phraseology; but they are not words of moment. It provides for defraying the "expenses of travel."

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the Senate bill was a little broader in scope than the provision in the emergency deficiency bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Senate bill says "To defray the expenses incurred by officers," whereas the urgent deficiency bill says "To defray the expenses of travel by officers."

Mr. STAFFORD. Still they are the expenses of travel. If the gentleman will permit, under the phraseology of the deficiency bill the Secretary of War was authorized to defray only traveling expenses.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no; "expenses of travel."

Mr. STAFFORD. He would not be authorized to pay expenses when the officer was located in any one place.

Mr. SHERLEY. "The expenses of travel" is broader than "traveling expenses." I ask, therefore, unanimous consent that the action of the House in just passing the bill S. 2858 be rescinded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the proceedings in passing the bill S. 2858 be vacated. That will leave the Senate bill on the Speaker's table, where it was before. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

House resolution 168 (H. Rept. No. 198).

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 5723) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," be, and hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, with the Senate amendments thereto, to the end that the said amendments be, and hereby are, disagreed to; and the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes on said amendments be, and hereby is, agreed to, and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is to agree to the conference requested by the Senate upon the so-called war-risk insurance bill. The Committee on Rules is informed that objection was made to that course being taken by unanimous consent, and hence reported this rule, which is in the usual form and provides for the Speaker immediately appointing the conferees.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman give me 10 minutes? I will probably not use it all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman for debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I objected to sending this bill to conference, and my reason was, as I stated at the time, that I thought the House should be given some assurance either that the Senate amendment No. 100 would be agreed to, which provided that the widows of previous wars should be put on the same footing as this bill provides for the widows in the present war; either that we should have assurance that that should be done, or assurance, as is often given in the House, that when the matter came back the House should be given the privilege of voting on that proposition. The gentleman who has charge of the bill, of course, as he had a perfect right to do, refused to give either one of those assurances. Consequently I objected.

Now, the proposition is that this bill shall be sent to conference under a rule. I think those of us who are in favor of this proposition, which is amendment No. 100, ought to oppose this rule, because it is very obvious that the conferees on the part of the House are not willing to give us that opportunity to vote upon this proposition. The conference report will come back upon the very last day of the session, and, however we may object to that report, however large might be the majority in this House which was dissatisfied with the report, it would hardly take the chance of voting down the report and thereby either postpone adjournment or kill the bill. So the conference report will have unusual strength regardless of its merits, and so now is the time for us to insist on the opportunity to vote on this amendment. For one, I should like that opportunity. I think a great many in the House wish it, but a vote for this rule is a vote that we shall not have any opportunity to vote upon amendment No. 100. Our only chance is to vote against this rule and concur in the Senate amendment. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this rule.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty accord with the desire expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. For to me the real question before us is not one of the mere technical meaning of words, a question as to whether the amendment is or is not the granting of pensions. In my judgment, the real question is, Shall the House seize the opportunity which now, at last, it has to do justice to the widows of the veterans of the Civil War and of the veterans of the Spanish-American War? In two or three previous recent Congresses the House has passed bills to help the widows of Spanish War veterans, but only to see each of these measures dropped after it reached the Senate. At last here is a provision, an amendment which originated in and has passed the Senate, that does approximate justice, whether or not you call it the granting of pensions, and the House ought now by its vote to make certain the retention of this provision in the law. This is my judgment on that proposition.

There is another Senate amendment, Mr. Speaker, about which I wish to say a word. I understand that the provision in the bill as it went from the House which would give $100 a month to a man who has had both eyes shot out has been so changed that he will receive a considerably less amount.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That provision is retained.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am glad to know that the amount is left at $100.

Should the bill go to conference, there is danger that the conferees may hold it until so late to-morrow—the day fixed for final adjournment—that gentlemen will say, "Well, we must take the bill in the form in which it is reported, or pass nothing at all." And therefore, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has forcibly said, the House, now that it has the opportunity, ought to insist upon the retention of this Senate amendment that will give to these deserving women the pensions to which they are justly entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has eight minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, first of all I want this amendment 100 read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read amendment 100.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 314. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or the Philippine Insurrection, now on the pension roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $25 per month; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the additional allowance provided by existing pension laws on account of a helpless child or child under 16 years of age: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be administered, executed, and enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this bill should take the ordinary course. The House should have an opportunity to vote to concur in this amendment. [Applause.] It is perfectly obvious that in the closing hours of the session, if there is an agreement made to leave out this amendment, of course that agreement will be ratified by the House. Now, we are all for the bill. We passed it by a unanimous vote in the House, and it comes with this amendment. There have been other wars before the present one—the Civil War for the preservation of the Union, the Spanish War, the war in the Philippines. I have been told that the estimate has been made—I can not speak for its accuracy—that this amendment would involve an additional expense of probably $3,500,000 a year. We are caring, and properly so, for the men who are to fight the battles of the Republic in this great contest as men never have been cared for by any nation before in the tide of time, and we are appropriating by fives and tens, and by fifteen billions of dollars. While we are doing that, let the House have the opportunity, if necessary on a yea-and-nay vote, here and now, to pass upon a motion to concur in this Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I have asked permission to address the House for a few minutes on the war-risk insurance bill before the conferees shall be appointed, that we may take the sober second thought on one matter involved in that great measure.

One of the features of the war-risk insurance bill, a great many Members of this House felt when the measure was before this body, would be the means of permitting tremendous wrong to be done the beneficiaries; but in the light of the consideration that was given to the question in the House we were not able to have the objectionable feature removed.

I refer to section 304 of the measure as the sections were numbered in the bill as it was pending on the House side. This section provides that the beneficiaries under the compensation provisions of the bill may commute, under certain regulations, a part or all of the amounts payable in monthly installments to the beneficiary. The section referred to reads as follows:

That if the injured person be deemed competent and not likely to become a public charge, upon his application and evidence satisfactory to the director that it will be for his best interests and for the best interests of his dependents, if any, future compensation payments for disability may be commuted in whole or in part for a lump sum equal to the present value of such payments or the proportion thereof to be commuted, and such lump sum paid to the injured person in lieu of all further compensation or of the proportion so commuted of all future payments of compensation.

Provided, however, That in case of partial disability rated at 30 per cent or more of total disability, or in case of total disability, not more than 50 per cent of the compensation payments as for a man without a wife or child shall be so commutable. The basis for determining present values of future payments of compensation shall be prescribed from time to time by regulation.

Under that section, suppose a beneficiary was entitled to $25 per month through life. He could commute this annuity and receive a lump sum, depending, of course, upon the age of the applicant; the younger the applicant the larger would be the lump sum. The lump sum, which would be the equivalent of the annuity, would doubtless be based upon the scientific value of annuities when converted into lump-sum payments as have been worked out by the large insurance companies of our country. Possibly the beneficiary would receive $2,000, $3,000, or $5,000 in cash in lieu of the annuity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we could know that the moneys received by the beneficiaries who would convert their annuities into lump-sum payments would never be diverted from the beneficial purpose for which intended, we would not need to consider this matter further. I take it that every Member of this Congress has only one interest in view in the consideration of this bill; that is, the interest of the soldier and the interest of the beneficiary, plus, of course, the interest that this Government of ours has in seeing that justice and equity shall be done to those who serve their country in time of crisis. For years, under our pension laws, we have protected jealously the compensation due the soldier and his dependents. The compensation has been free from attachment. It has been free from assignment. It has been held at all times as an amount for the immediate benefit and comfort of the beneficiary.

Under the commutation provision referred to, we reverse this policy, and as soon as the money shall be paid to the beneficiary it may at once become subject to all the fortunes that other property belonging to the beneficiary may be subject.

Now, let us see for just a few minutes what may be the results:

I have been told by Dr. L. A. Kerr, of Spokane, Wash., one of the best-posted insurance men in the Northwest, that among women who are beneficiaries under insurance policies, or are the recipients of large estates, 92 out of every 100 lose everything, or nearly everything, that they have received within a period of seven years.

Again this same gentleman has called my attention to the fact that in the surrogate court of New York, out of 27,000 men whose business careers have come under the observation of the court, only 1.3 per cent left an estate worth over $25,000; 3.5 per cent an estate between $10,000 and $25,000; and 3.5 per cent an estate between $1,000 and $10,000; or, in other words, approximately 92 per cent of the 27,000 men coming before that court died without sufficient funds to take care of their last expenses.

My correspondent again points out from the records of the American Banking Association that out of 100 young men starting at the age of 25 with nothing except their earning power and good health, at the age of 65, 1 will be rich; 4 will have incomes; 5 will still have a little earning power but not enough to support them; 54 will be entirely dependent; 36 will be dead; and only 5 out of the 100 will be self-supporting at the age of 65. More than that, the records show that 85 per cent of the 5 will be dependent before death.

In other words, the statistics that have been compiled by insurance companies and the facts that have been ascertained by the American Banking Association disclose conditions that in the language of my correspondent are "hardly believable." Yet it is proposed in section 304 that we permit the beneficiaries to cash in their annuities, to commute their annuities, and to receive therefrom a lump sum.

Now, let us see just what will occur if this shall be done: It is common observation that there is a type of men often called grafters, who make it their business to watch the columns of the papers for persons who inherit money, who are beneficiaries under insurance policies. The grafter immediately arranges a conference with the beneficiary and solicits the investment of money that will be profitable, not to the beneficiary, but to this sleek-tongued promoter. The beneficiary, if without experience, and even oftentimes if with considerable experience, but with an amount of money larger than he has been accustomed to handle, will find himself listening to the representations that are being made. The sleek-tongued individual will assure the beneficiary that he will permit him to come in on the ground floor of this investment and these ground-floor investments too many times never rise above the ground.

Can you not imagine a shark of this character making lists of beneficiaries and possible beneficiaries under this compensation law throughout the United States? Can you not imagine him going to one of the beneficiaries who is content with an annuity of, say, $30 per month, and saying, "What a fool you are to be content with $30 per month when you can cash that annuity in, receive $3,000 for it from the Government, and invest with me in a proposition that will make you independently rich before another six months shall have rolled around."

Gentlemen, it does not, it seems to me, require a prophet to foresee the condition that I have suggested. All that it requires is that men who have observed something of the operation of certain individuals in human society, will apply that observation to the pending bill.

Can we then feel that the beneficiary under this compensation law will be more fortunate than the average run of people throughout the country?

But what will be the next step? Suppose that what I have said and which I believe is based upon the scientific results of insurance and banking companies should prove to be exaggerated twofold; suppose, even more than that—still there would be an immense number of beneficiaries who, in a few years, would have lost all the Government had paid to them by way of commutation for the service and for the injury received by the soldier who is now making his sacrifice for our Government. What, then, would we do?

You know, and so do I, that whether or not you and I are in this House of Representatives, those who will be here will do just as you and I would do now—they will protect the soldier and the dependents of those who are fighting for our country to-day, and they will pass additional compensation or pension bills for their relief. I would do it, you would do it, and succeeding Congresses will do it, and I submit that in addition to the interest of the individual beneficiary in this measure is the interest as well of all our people.

When this bill was considered on the Senate side the other day, the very feature to which I have called attention appealed to the Members of that body and was stricken from the bill. I urge that no matter what we may do as regards other features of this bill that we concur in the action of the Senate in striking out the provision for commutation of any part of the annuity due the beneficiary under this measure. Gentlemen, our boys are fighting to make this world of ours safe for democracy. As a small token of appreciation of this country of their service, we propose in this compensation bill to make secure and safe the old age of men who are now obeying their country's call; we propose to make safe the future of the dependents of these men, and let us not in the drafting of this measure do something that may be the means, unless relieved by the country, of taking from the very ones we seek to help the compensation they have so richly earned. That which is in the heart of every Member of this Congress is to do that which will be best for our soldier boys, best for the beneficiaries under this compensation bill, who are the dependents upon our soldier boys.

This compensation law, in my judgment, is one of the wisest measures that has been brought before the Congress for consideration. I am anxious that it shall pass, but I am anxious that if it shall pass, it shall be modified so as to remove this one feature that will lead to so much injustice and wrong as the days shall go by. [Applause,]

I desire to insert as part of my remarks a part of a letter that I have received from Dr. L. A. Kerr, in which this section of the bill is discussed:

COLVILLE, WASH., September 21, 1917.

Hon. BURTON L. FRENCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: Your letter of the 14th of this month reached me at Colville, and while it is rather difficult to cover the question of annuity, or lump-sum settlement in regard to insurance in a letter, I will endeavor to make myself as plain and brief as possible.

I believe that there is absolutely no question as to the difference regarding the two settlements. As I understand the matter, the purpose of the bill is to replace with modern insurance methods the rather clumsy pension bill that has been in use for a number of years. In other words, I suppose the object is to get away from the old style of pension, and, of course, if this is the case, it is very important that a beneficiary be protected by the Government for a number of years; and judging from the experience tables that all insurance men have at their command, it would seem that the most awkward thing, perhaps, that the Government could do would be to allow a lump-sum settlement to the beneficiary, inasmuch as statistics show that 92 out of every 100 women that are left large estates lose everything or nearly so within a period of seven years.

There are also many other striking examples of the loss of fortunes by even our most careful and shrewdest business men, and consequently we can hardly expect inexperienced women or children, as the case may be, to be able to invest any material amount of money without taking extremely long chances of losing the entire amount within a short period of years at least.

The statistics that have been compiled by insurance companies over a long period of years, and also the facts that have been obtained by the American Banking Association regarding the remarkable loss of capital through the regular channels of what we term "legitimate business," are hardly believable. For instance, in the surrogate court of New York the records show that out of 27,000 men whose business careers have come under the observation of this court that there are only 1.3 per cent that left an estate of over $25,000, and 3.5 per cent left an estate between $10,000 and $25,000, and also 3.5 per cent left an estate of between $1,000 and $10,000, which leaves an average of approximately 92 per cent that died without sufficient funds to take care of their last expenses.

From the records of the American Banking Association we find that out of 100 young men starting at the age of 25 with nothing except their earning power and good health, that at the age of 65, 1 will be rich, 4 will have incomes, 5 will still have a little earning power but not enough to support them, however; 54 will be entirely dependent, and 36 dead, leaving only 5 out of the 100 that are self-supporting at the age of 65, and 85 chances out of the 100 that 4 out of these 5 will be dependent before death. With all of these facts as a guide, it hardly seems possible that any sane man could recommend the settlement of a soldier's insurance which is intended as a pension to be settled in one lump sum.

We all know that in case a soldier is killed, leaving a dependent wife and children, and his insurance is paid in a lump sum, that these dependents, who are probably not experienced in business, it would be safe to estimate that 95 per cent of those in this condition would lose all within a very short time; and also that we as patriotic citizens would not permit them to suffer thereafter; therefore it would be necessary for the Government to make provision for them, and the insurance which was intended for their protection would probably go to the benefit of some unscrupulous grafter. It seems to me that one if not the most important part of the bill is the safeguarding of this fund so that it will accrue to their benefit over a long period of years.

I heartily join with you in your contention that the lump-sum settlement is a dangerous one to have embodied in the bill, and I trust that you will be able to bring such pressure to bear that this feature can be stricken out and thereby give to the American soldiers and dependents protection which it would be hard for them to secure in any other way, and at the same time deal a deadly blow to the common grafter, who is always watching for an opportunity to prey upon the innocent.

Yours, very truly, L. A. KERR.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this one minute to propound a parliamentary inquiry of the Speaker. In case the rule is adopted, will a motion to instruct the conferees be in order before the appointment of the conferees by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I beg the Speaker's pardon, but it will not. The rule provides for the immediate appointment of conferees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not read the rule, and the gentleman from Tennessee is right.

Mr. GILLETT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GILLETT. It is in order for me to move that this resolution be referred back to the Committee on Rules with instructions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I did not yield to the gentleman to make that motion; I only yielded for a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

Mr. GILLETT. I move to recommit the resolution with instructions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But I have moved the previous question.

Mr. GILLETT. And I have moved to recommit.

Mr. CANNON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. When will it be in order to move to recommit this rule to the Committee on Rules with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question. Now, the gentleman from Illinois wants to know when it will be proper, if at all, to move to recommit the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You can not recommit a rule. The unbroken precedents are that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rules themselves provide for that, but he can not put his hand upon it at this minute.

Mr. GILLETT. Rule XVII provides that—

It shall be in order pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit with or without instructions.

I am reading from page 349 of the Manual.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That relates to a bill and not to a report from the Committee on Rules. But let me read the language the gentleman has just read. It is on page 341 of the Manual, which I hold in my hand:

It shall be in order pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit.

That means prior to the time the motion for the previous question has been made. It does not mean after the motion for the previous question has been made, which is the situation that now confronts the House.

Mr. GILLETT. But the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; the previous question has not been ordered. But that refers to a bill and not to a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GILLETT. Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 5572, says:

The motion to commit after the previous question is ordered applies to resolution, the word bill in the rule being a generic term applying to all legislative propositions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That would apply probably to joint resolutions and concurrent resolutions, but it certainly would apply to a bill. This is not a legislative proposition, it is a proposition of procedure.

Mr. GILLETT. Any proposition which this House passes is a legislative proposition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think there is a very clear distinction, if the gentleman will pardon me, between a legislative proposition and a proposition of procedure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not very clear about it, but he thinks that the rule provides that a resolution from the Committee on Rules can not be recommitted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no question about the fact that that has been the uniform practice.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman makes the statement but does not cite the authority.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I had no thought of this matter being called up, and therefore have not examined it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I can give the Chair the authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the rule applicable in this instance. The last paragraph of Rule XI says:

It shall be in order to call up for consideration a report from the Committee on Rules, and, pending the consideration thereof, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result is announced it shall not entertain any other dilatory motion until the said report shall have been fully disposed of.

I suppose that is the rule which the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from New York had in mind. It says that the Speaker shall not entertain any other dilatory motion. It further says:

The Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall provide that business under paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV shall be set aside by a vote of less than two-thirds of the Members present.

That refers to Calendar Wednesday.

Nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XIV.

Now, that last clause specifically refers to the rule authorizing the motion to recommit under Rule XVI.

Paragraph 4 of Rule XVI provides as follows:

When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motion shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or to amend, or postpone indefinitely.

The SPEAKER. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am directing the Speaker's attention to the fact that the last clause of Rule XI limits the authority of the Committee on Rules.

Nor shall it—

Referring to the Committee on Rules—

report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

I am proceeding now to direct the attention of the Speaker to paragraph 4 of Rule XVI, and I was reading that when the Speaker asked me the question.

4. When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend, or postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question. After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution, one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution.

Although I am in hearty sympathy with the amendment as contained in the war insurance bill, nevertheless I think the reading of the rule just read would compel the Speaker to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to present his motion for the previous question, because under Rule XI the authority of the Committee on Rules is specifically limited. The last paragraph reads—

nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

That paragraph relates to a motion to recommit on bills and joint resolutions, but the Chair will notice that the foregoing portion of that paragraph 4 of Rule XVI said that this shall be the order in which motions shall be entertained, namely, to adjourn, to lay on the table, for the previous question—the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has moved the previous question—to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to amend, or postpone indefinitely. To refer is the purpose of the motion to recommit, and as this rule specifically says—which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order.

Therefore the motion for the previous question takes precedence of the motion to recommit, and, as the gentleman has stated, I question whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has the prior right to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have a decision directly in point, made by Mr. Speaker JOSEPH G. CANNON on February 2, 1904. I read from section 5601, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents:

On February 2, 1904, Mr. John Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a resolution relating to the status of the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and demanded thereon the previous question.

Pending this motion for the previous question, Mr. JOHN S. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, proposed a motion to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Rules with certain instructions.

Mr. Dalzell made the point of order that the motion was not in order.

After debate and a citation of precedents, the Speaker said:

"The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] moves to recommit the bill with instructions, pending a motion for the previous question. Rule XVII provides:

"Section 4 of Rule XIV, as to resolutions, conflicts with this rule. The Chair has been called upon already at this session of Congress to rule upon a motion to recommit a resolution, and held, somewhat reluctantly, that it was in order to make the motion as to a resolution the same as to a bill, and the Chair stated at the time that the rules might well have been construed together and one applied to a resolution and another to a bill.

"But owing to the precedents, which were quite numerous and which the Chair carefully examined, the Chair held that Rule XVII applied to resolutions as well as to bills, and that it was in order to move to recommit a resolution pending the motion for the previous question. Now, the gentleman moves to recommit pending a motion for the previous question. Ordinarily this motion would be in order, but as to reports from the Committee on Rules it is well settled by a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Crisp and by three rulings following that of Mr. Speaker Crisp, made by Mr. Speaker Henderson (the last one being appealed from, and the House by a decided majority sustaining the ruling), that reports from the Committee on Rules are exceptional and that the same rule does not apply to those reports as applies to reports from other committees.

"Some gentlemen may say that this ruling is not logical. Examining it, however, in the light of Rule XI, which has been read, the Chair is inclined to hold that it is logical. But let that be as it may, the rules are what the House construes them to be; and this rule of construction having been given first by Mr. Speaker Crisp in a matter of very considerable importance, and followed in three different rulings of Mr. Speaker Henderson, and affirmed by the House on a yea-and-nay vote by a decided majority, the Chair feels that it is his duty to follow the precedents, and therefore holds that the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi is not in order."

The SPEAKER. The Chair indorses the opinion of Mr. Speaker CANNON. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is for the previous question. Then, of course, this motion would not be in order after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not in order at any time; a motion to recommit a resolution of the Committee on Rules is never in order.

Mr. CANNON. Then the only way to beat this rule is to vote down the previous question. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 83.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-one gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. This vote is on the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 144, answered "present" 2, not voting 174, as follows:

YEAS—112.

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. MCFADDEN.

Mr. WELLING with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay," on account of a general pair with Mr. CALDWELL.

The name of Mr. SNELL was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield me a minute?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I presume that this vote indicates the disposition of the House. I suggest, if it is in order, that we vacate all proceedings about the rule and allow the gentleman to make his motion to concur.

Mr. GILLETT. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks to vacate all proceedings touching this rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 100.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House concur in Senate amendment No. 100.

Mr. GILLETT. Which I think the Clerk had better read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think probably this whole matter could be cleared up if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will yield to me a moment. The Members of the two Houses who I understand will be the conferees on this bill have had up this very matter and have agreed to adopt a substitute for the Smoot amendment, to which Senator SMOOT himself agreed.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman submit it?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes; I will. I will have it sent up, and ask unanimous consent to have it read.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, first I am disposed to have my proposition reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 100.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 314. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or the Philippine Insurrection, now on the pension roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $25 per month; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the additional allowance provided by existing pension laws on account of a helpless child or child under 16 years of age: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be administered, executed, and enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] a motion that is in order?

Mr. RAYBURN. No. I was simply offering to the House a suggestion here.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.
Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I was recognized.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] moves the previous question.
Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. RAYBURN. I rose, and the Speaker asked me if I had any suggestion or motion to make, and before I had a chance the gentleman from Massachusetts, I think without recognition, moved the previous question.
Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, did I not have the right to move the previous question?
The SPEAKER. When the vote on the previous question was taken the control of this matter passed to the gentleman from Massachusetts.
Mr. ADAMSON. I ask the gentleman from Masachusetts to yield to hear it read. He will probably be pleased with it.
Mr. GILLETT. I think we had better vote on the proposition now before the House.
Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?
Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Massachusetts, when the gentleman from Texas offered to have his resolution read, asked that his be read first, leaving everybody with the impression that the other was also to be read; and I think in fairness to the House it ought to be read.
Mr. RAYBURN. I did not hear the Speaker recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts. He recognized me, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] interjected the previous question.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts had the floor after he moved the previous question.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, was the amendment or paragraph just read by the Clerk the one that passed the Senate?
The SPEAKER. Yes.
Mr. RAYBURN. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes in which to make a statement.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for three minutes in which to make a statement.
Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I object.
Mr. RAYBURN. Has the gentleman from Massachusetts time? Would he yield me some time?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] moves the previous question.
Mr. RAYBURN. Would he not withhold the motion?
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that we were liberal in giving time on the rule. It looks to me that the gentleman from Texas ought to be permitted to make this statement.
Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question long enough to allow the gentleman from Texas three minutes.
Mr. RAYBURN. Three minutes of time is all I want. I ask to have this read in my time.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks to have the paper sent to the Clerk's desk read in his time. The Clerk will report it.
The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or the Philippine Insurrection, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll because of the death of the husband as the result of wound or injury received or disease contracted in the service and line of duty shall hereafter receive $25 per month.

Mr. RAYBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, that amendment if it is agreed to, will place the widows of these wars exactly upon the footing that we are going to place the widows of this war upon.
In this measure we do not give compensation, or pension, or whatever you please to call it, to anybody unless the man was killed in the war or from causes that resulted from injuries received in that war, and it does seem to me when we place the widows of other wars exactly on the same basis as we place the widows of this war that ought to be satisfactory to the gentleman.
Mr. LITTLE. How does it happen that you did not think of that until this occasion? [Applause.]
Mr. RAYBURN. I am against the whole thing. [Applause.] I do not think that the question of pensions for widows of other wars should come into this bill, and I said so in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and also in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], that I expected to increase the pensions of widows of other wars up to the rate of widows of this war next year, and that I expected it ought to pass, but I do not think it has a proper place in this bill. Senator SMOOT has agreed, or will agree, to this amendment if this conference report is adopted, and it seems to me it ought not to be objected to. [Applause.]
Mr. LANGLEY. I thought the gentleman was opposed to the whole proposition, and I am opposed to his compromised proposition, which would reestablish a distinction between war widows that Congress abolished years ago.
Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion for the previous question.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the previous question is voted down, it will then be in order to instruct the conferees to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, will it not?
The SPEAKER. It would be.
Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. RUBEY. If the previous question is voted for, it will settle the whole question, will it not? [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. The Chair is not certain that that will happen. The House has to vote on the amendment itself.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for a minute without losing his place?
Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. CANNON. Make it two minutes.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes.
Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, clearly the will of this House is to concur in this amendment.
Now, beware of the "Greeks bearing gifts." [Applause.] The gentleman proposes to amend this Senate amendment when it goes into conference, and God knows how it is to come out of conference. The Senate by a majority agreed to this amendment. In God's chancery it is right. Let us buckle it now. [Applause.]
The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.
The previous question was ordered.
The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in Senate amendment No. 100.
Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of James M. Fink, Sixty-fourth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.
Mr. RAYBURN rose.
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?
Mr. RAYBURN. To ask unanimous consent to withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays. Is there objection?
Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. LANGLEY. I object, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to concur will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 78, answered "present" 3, not voting 174, as follows:

So the motion to concur in Senate amendment No. 100 was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. RUSSELL (for) with Mr. LEE of Georgia (against).

Mr. AYRES (for) with Mr. MARTIN of Louisiana (against).

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas (for) with Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana (against).

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY (for) with Mr. HARRISON of Louisiana (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. HASTINGS with Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma.

Mr. POLK with Mr. WASON.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. PAIGE.

Mr. POU with Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan.

Mr. SHERLEY with Mr. MILLER of Minnesota.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE with Mr. KAHN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to the remaining Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to disagree to the remaining Senate amendments and to agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 80, which strikes out the provision for commutation of a part, or in some instances all, of the compensation to be paid to those injured in the service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has made a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman can trust the conferees with something.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the House is of the opinion that this amendment should be concurred in.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have not polled the conferees, but they are fair and reasonable men who are going to be named. I am not one of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the House wants or what it does not want. The gentleman from Georgia submits a request for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he allow the bill to go to conference, and then before the conferees are appointed he can move to instruct them, if he wants to do that.

Mr. GILLETT. It is an easier proposition for the gentleman to move to concur, which will settle it.

Mr. ADAMSON. All right. I am willing that that be done.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I move to concur in Senate amendment 80.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia withhold his request?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho will make his motion.

Mr. FRENCH. I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 80.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FRENCH moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 80, on page 23, to strike out all of section 304, which is as follows:

"SEC. 304. That if the injured person be deemed competent and not likely to become a public charge, upon his application and evidence satisfactory to the director that it will be for his best interests and for the best interests of his dependents, if any, future compensation payments for disability may be commuted in whole or in part for a lump sum equal to the present value of such payments or the proportion thereof to be commutated, and such lump sum paid to the injured person in lieu of all further compensation or of the proportion so commuted of all future payments of compensation: Provided, however, That in case of partial disability rated at 30 per cent or more of total disability, or in case of total disability, not more than 50 per cent of the compensation payments as for a man without a wife or child shall be so commutable. The basis for determining present values of future payments of compensation shall be prescribed from time to time by regulations."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to concur.

Mr. FRENCH. I would like some time.

Mr. ADAMSON. I was trying to make the agreement with the gentleman in order to expedite action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves the previous question, and that is not debatable.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ADAMSON) there were—ayes 79, noes 55.

Accordingly the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if there is no other gentleman who desires to concur in anything or to instruct on anything, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the remaining Senate amendments and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to disagree to the rest of these Senate amendments and agree to the conference. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the right to object, in order to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. Ask me outside. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I would prefer to confer with my amiable friend from Georgia privately, but on such an important public question I think I ought to ask the question here. I want to know if he believes it to be certain that the conferees will report at this session, so that we can have this legislation right away?

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope so.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SIMS, Mr. RAYBURN, and Mr. ESCH.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRASS CANNON TO NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2920) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass cannon, with carriage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass or bronze cannon, with carriage, and suitable outfit of cannon balls, condemned or not needed for present service, to be placed at the foot of the monument now being erected at Carthage, N. C., in honor of James R. McConnell, an American aviator, who was killed while flying in France.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IDA COTTRELL HODGSON.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired, is hereby allowed an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Frederick Grady Hodgson was receiving at the date of his death.

SEC. 2. That said Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired, as aforesaid, be paid out of the Treasury of the United States a sum of money or an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, was receiving at the date of his death.

SEC. 3. That the payment of the amount of money hereby allowed and authorized to be paid to said Ida Cottrell Hodgson is authorized to be made from the appropriations for beneficiaries of officers who die while on the active list of the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Under the insurance bill now in conference the beneficiary of every officer or enlisted man who has died since the beginning of hostilities will be entitled to a maximum amount of insurance of $10,000 carried in that bill. The gentleman from Georgia, who introduced this private bill for the relief of Mrs. Hodgson, shakes his head, as much as to say "no"; and I would like to inquire, Why not?

Mr. BRAND. I will state my position. The facts are briefly set forth in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman understand my question?

Mr. BRAND. I do; but I think it is necessary for the House to have a statement of the facts in order to understand my answer.

Frederick G. Hodgson entered the United States Military Academy September 1, 1877; was appointed second lieutenant June 11, 1881, and served continuously on the active list of the Army until October 23, 1913, when he was retired from active service on account of disability contracted in line of duty.

By paragraph 37, S. O. 76, War Department, dated April 3, 1917, Col. Hodgson was assigned to active duty as assistant to the Quartermaster General of the Army, and in the operation of this assignment was detailed by the Quartermaster General to duty with the supplies committee of the Council of National Defense.

Col. Hodgson died suddenly in Washington, D. C., on Sunday, August 5, 1917, at which time he was entitled to the full pay and allowances of his grade under the provision contained in section 24 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, which reads:

"That in time of war retired officers of the Army may be employed on active duty, in the discretion of the President, and when so employed they shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grade."

The act of May 11, 1908, as amended by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat., 108–735), makes provision for the payment of an amount equal to six months' pay to the duly designated beneficiary or widow of an officer who dies while on the active list of the Army from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct. This law has been construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury (15 Comp., 230) as being without application in the case of a retired officer who dies while on active duty, the comptroller taking the ground that an assignment to active duty does not place the officer on the active list within the meaning of the law.

Col. Hodgson died in time of war while on active duty, and it is most apparent that his widow should not be deprived of the gratuity of six months' pay simply because he was not, at the time of his death, on "the active list of the Army."

It is earnestly recommended that the bill be given favorable consideration.

This is an excerpt from the report of the Secretary of War.

Col. Hodgson left a widow, who is the only beneficiary, and she is about 60 years of age. She is left without any estate or income, and if it had not been for the strained construction—untenable, in my judgment—of the Comptroller of the Treasury, she would have gotten the money provided for by my bill within 48 hours after her husband died.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRAND. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman may not be altogether advised if he questions the basis on which the comptroller made the decision. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill, but there is a great distinction between the military officer being on active duty and being on the active list, and the gentleman's case rests on that very point. The decision of the comptroller is within not only the spirit of the law but the letter of the law, because a retired officer when put on active duty is not restored to his former status on the active list. He is taken for temporary service, and on the completion of that service he returns to his settled status as a retired officer. There is a great distinction between the two, and the comptroller was bound to observe it.

Mr. BRAND. If that interpretation had not been put upon the act, the gratuity would have been paid to this widow long ago; but we are bound by it, and before she can get it it is necessary to have this private bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I agree with the gentleman, but I did not want the idea to go without contradiction that the comptroller was in error in his decision.

Mr. BRAND. To show that the Naval Committee is acting on the same theory, a bill was reported out of that committee by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] the other day and passed this House, providing for six months' pay to the widow and children, or other dependent relatives, of a retired officer on active duty. It provided for just such a case as this bill provides for as relating to the Navy and Marine Corps. If the war-insurance bill does not take care of the widows of the sailors in the Navy and the Marine Corps, how does it take care of the widows of soldiers in the Army? Why should you without objection provide for this class of beneficiaries and for the wives of husbands who may be killed in the present war, and not provide for the widow who is here in her sorrow and in her want, waiting for what should have been given her two months ago?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will not be foreclosed before he has time to answer the question I have propounded.

The SPEAKER. What is the question?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says that he understands it.

Mr. BRAND. When this House passed the war insurance bill it provided in case of death without receiving any monthly installment that the whole allotment of 240 payments of $25 per month should be paid to the widow. The Senate amended this section by providing that this monthly allowance of $25 a month should be paid to the wife during her widowhood. It makes no provision for this six months' pay. The bill as it passed the House did, but as amended by the Senate it does not, and this bill is necessary to put her on the same footing as all other widows. Under the Senate amendment if this lady died within a month from now all she would receive would be $25 or $50. Or, for instance, if she should marry next year, which is not at all likely, she would get only a few hundred dollars, when under the law she is entitled to six months' pay at the rate Col. Hodgson was receiving when he died, just as the widows of all soldiers, privates and officers, white folks and negroes, alike have uniformly gotten, and this is all my bill asks for.

I do not disagree with the gentleman from Wisconsin in the interpretation he put upon the bill in reference to this six months' allowance as it passed the House, but as amended by the Senate she is not taken care of in this regard, and there is no provision whatever for this six months' allowance, but only a monthly payment of $25 per month during her widowhood.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, so as to make my position clear, the way I construe the insurance bill now in conference is that this widow, if the insurance bill should become a law, would be entitled to the amount of the compensation and insurance provided in the act, because section 401 provides:

Any person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, who, while in such service and before the expiration of 120 days from and after such publication, becomes or has become totally disabled or dies, or has died, without having applied for insurance, shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance, payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each. If he shall die either before he shall have received any of such monthly installments or before he shall have received 240 of such monthly installments, then $25 per month shall be paid to his wife, child, or widowed mother if and while they survive him: Provided, however, That not more than 240 of such monthly installments, including those received by such person during his total disability, shall be so paid; and in that event the amount of the monthly installments shall be apportioned between them as may be provided by regulations.

I took the position when this matter was first reported by the committee that I had no objection to the widow receiving six months' pay, provided she would not be the recipient of insurance or gratuities under the insurance bill, and that action should be deferred until we knew exactly what privileges and benefits she would receive under the insurance bill. That I stated to the widow herself, and I do not think that it is an unreasonable request.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I read very carefully the letter of Secretary Baker in this case, and the only question that rose in my mind was as to whether there would be a duplication of payments here.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the doubt in my mind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seems to me that if the facts are as set forth this bill might readily be passed except for the possibility that there would be a duplication of payments.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Section 312 of the insurance bill provides that compensation shall not be paid while the person is in receipt of service or retirement pay, and the Senate amendment adds that the laws providing for gratuities or payments in the event of death in the service and existing pension law shall not be applicable after the enactment of this amendment to persons now in or hereafter entering the military or naval service, or their widows, children, or their dependents, except in so far as rights under any such law shall have heretofore accrued.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, this bill is not yet a law.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, may I state a fact?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. Her rights accrued before the bill not only became a law, but before it was introduced into the Congress.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Her rights would not accrue until the bill becomes a law.

Mr. BRAND. They accrued at his death.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is not an unreasonable request which I make, in view of the fact that this woman will be entitled under the insurance bill to benefits. I ask that we defer the consideration of this bill for the time being until we know what the law will really be and what benefits she will receive. For my part, I want this widow, as I have told her, to receive the same benefits as any widow of a Regular Army officer who was in the active service, and if the widow of a Regular Army officer is entitled to compensation under this law, then I do not believe this widow is entitled to double compensation simply because she happens to occupy this singular position.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. As I understand it, the sole purpose of this bill is to permit this widow to receive six months' pay, which the widow of every man upon the active list is entitled to receive. Col. Hodgson served for a number of years and was retired, and then was restored to active duty. Because he had once been retired this bill is necessary. If he had not been retired, the widow would have been entitled to six months' pay without any action whatever on the part of Congress. The sole purpose of this bill is to give the widow what she would have been entitled to if her husband had not been retired. He was retired, but when his country needed him he was restored to active duty and died in the harness, but his name was upon the retired list.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is a reasonable request to ask that this matter be held in abeyance until the insurance law is decided on. I have been frank, and I hope I have been fair to the gentleman in this matter. I do not wish to do any injustice, as I said, to the widow, and after the insurance law is passed and we know the situation, if she is to be deprived of any right, then I will be very glad to have this measure go through with my support.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object for the time being.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the deficiency bill which passed the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG RIVER.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 2663.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out by the House amendment insert the following: "which bridge is hereby declared to have been constructed in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906"; and the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM C. ADAMSON,
THETUS W. SIMS,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
JOHN K. SHIELDS,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF MINE FIRES, ETC.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution 14, and if I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak for about one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say this is a matter which has been up here once before—that is, to enroll in the bill the words which were stricken out in conference, and that is to provide for the investigation of mine fires and accidents of that kind up to the time of the war. I say this, that I have talked with the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN]——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman give the number of the House bill so we may follow it?

Mr. FOSTER. H. R. 3932. I will state I have talked with the lady from Montana, who is probably as much directly interested in this matter as any Member of the House in desiring to find the facts as to these accidents. There are only three of those which could be affected by this legislation. The explosion at the Mare Island Navy Yard, the other would be the Eddystone explosion, and the one in the Butte mine, in which 170 miners lost their lives.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FOSTER. I do.
Mr. NORTON. The purpose of this is to permit an investigation of explosions that occurred before the passage of this resolution, as I understand it.
Mr. FOSTER. Since the beginning of the war.
Mr. NORTON. That is, to investigate regarding explosions prior to the time of the war?
Mr. FOSTER. No; not prior, but since.
Mr. NORTON. Since the beginning of the war and up to the passage of the act?
Mr. STAFFORD. The explosion at Eddystone was subsequent to the declaration of war, was it not?
Mr. FOSTER. My recollection is it was since the beginning of the war.
Mr. STAFFORD. My impression is the Eddystone explosion occurred after Congress declared war.
Mr. FOSTER. The idea is it is not to go back beyond the time of the declaration of war, not beyond that, only since that time.
Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FOSTER. I will.
Mr. ROBBINS. Is this a proposition to investigate the explosions in the munition plants of the Government as well as explosions in private institutions?
Mr. FOSTER. No; of course, they would have the right to investigate, and if possible to find out the causes of those explosions, but——
Mr. ROBBINS. Both in the munition plants, navy yards of the Government, and in private institutions?
Mr. FOSTER. I imagine at the private institutions investigation has been made there, and it will not be done anywhere else. The gentleman should understand that under the organic law of the Bureau of Mines an examination made by the Bureau of Mines can not be made public. Now, there may be some place where it will be necessary that that should be done, and this gives authority to permit that.
Mr. ROBBINS. At the expense of the Government?
Mr. FOSTER. Yes.
Miss RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FOSTER. I will.
Miss RANKIN. Does this include any investigation into labor conditions in the mines?
Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.
Miss RANKIN. It is just as to the causes of the fires?
Mr. FOSTER. That is all.
Miss RANKIN. Have these investigations been made?
Mr. FOSTER. I understand they have to some extent, and possibly all that will be necessary.
Miss RANKIN. And this will simply mean publication of the findings of the investigations?
Mr. FOSTER. To make it public. Now, the lady remembers that in Butte, Mont., there was a question as to labor difficulties. I want to say to the lady that this will not interfere in any way whatever, because the Bureau of Mines in its work can not take up those conditions that might exist in any mine, because the minute they do it they are going to get into trouble.
Miss RANKIN. It would be very fine if we could have an investigation of the labor conditions, and, of course, it is very fine to have the cause of the fires made public, but it will not really mean very much more information, because there are certain people who already know the cause of the fire.
Mr. FOSTER. That may be, but it is not generally known by the public.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FOSTER. I will.
Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, the explosions which took place at the Eddystone plant and at Mare Island have been thoroughly investigated by other agencies of the Government, and the proposition is now under investigation. I assume that those investigations have been carried on very thoroughly by agents connected with the Department of Justice.
Now, just what additional information or advantage can be gained to the Government in its endeavors to suppress these seditious or treasonable efforts, if they were really occasioned by active agencies, by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois?
Mr. FOSTER. I will say this to the gentleman from Wisconsin, that it is not intended, so far as I know, that there shall be an investigation made as to the Mare Island Navy Yard or as to the Eddystone disaster; but that as to the cause of the accident which might be published or might be known, which occurred in the Butte mine, in which 170 lost their lives, that information might be given to the public. I do not think it affects the labor situation at all in that community.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly indicate just what is the amendment that is sought to be included in the bill as agreed to by the conferees—the phraseology?
Mr. FOSTER. You mean if the language shall be restored?
Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.
Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that I can quote the exact language, but all it does is to restore that part of the Senate amendment providing for the investigation of mine accidents since the war.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell me whether he is discussing House resolution No. 13?
Mr. FOSTER. I am. I am discussing the amendment the gentleman spoke about.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is something before the House, I take it.
The SPEAKER. Which resolution is it?
Mr. FOSTER. Senate concurrent resolution No. 13.
The SPEAKER. Number 14, is it not?
Mr. FOSTER. I think it is No. 13, though it may be No. 14. It is to restore the language.
The SPEAKER. Here is one numbered 14.
Mr. FOSTER. That is the one, then.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That one we have been unable to obtain thus far.
Mr. FOSTER. It is on the Speaker's table, I will say to the gentleman.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But not printed.
Mr. FOSTER. Not printed separately; but it was printed in the RECORD.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state just what it is, if he has it in mind? Where does it pertain to the bill?
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman will not do so.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is entirely too indefinite, I will say to the gentleman. Here is a conference report, and the gentleman comes in and proposes to change it.
Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman withhold a moment? It says, on page 11, in section 20:

That the Director of the Bureau of Mines is hereby authorized to investigate all explosions and fires which may occur or which since the commencement of the present war have occurred in mines, quarries, factories, warehouses, magazines, houses, cars, or boats, conveyances—

And so forth.
Now, what the House conferees struck out was "or which since the commencement of the present war have occurred." That language——
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that is intended to enable the Bureau of Mines to take the place of the Department of Justice and go back and investigate explosions that have occurred and concerning which inquiries have already been had?
Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no. They would not investigate that kind of a question.
Mr. STAFFORD. If investigation would be made by a bureau other than the Department of Justice, could not the claim be made that to receive testimony might grant immunity?
Here is a proposition that might work ill in the prosecution of these people.
Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not mean to say that if this resolution were adopted investigations could not be made of explosions that have occurred heretofore? In fact, that is the purpose of the resolution, as I understand it, namely, to authorize the investigation of explosions that have occurred prior to the passage of the act.
Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is correct.
Mr. MONDELL. So that there must be investigation of explosions prior to the passage of the act contemplated or the resolution would not be necessary.
Mr. FOSTER. I will state this to the gentleman. I want to be perfectly frank with the House. There has been a good deal of contention, I think, on how the explosions and the fire in the mine at Butte occurred. I think the lady from Montana will agree with us on that, and, of course, the Bureau of Mines has made an investigation, probably all it will make.
Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says, "all it will make."
Mr. FOSTER. Yes. I will say, probably all it could make.
Mr. MONDELL. What assurance have we that the Bureau of Mines, under this authorization, will not be prevailed upon to make a dozen investigations, use the small sum of money that has been appropriated for the purpose of putting in operation a great system of control over explosives for the purpose of some ancient investigation? How do we know that the bureau will not do that?

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, we have no knowledge of that except the good sense of the head of the Bureau of Mines, and the Secretary of the Interior would not countenance such a thing. I do not think they would.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman will admit that Congress has been very generous with the Department of Justice in furnishing money for the investigation of offenses of this kind, and that the Department of Labor has very large appropriations for the purpose of ferreting out matters respecting labor. And it seems to me it simply confuses the issue and multiplies the number of offices and officers to add to the Bureau of Mines investigations of matters long since passed.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is not for the purpose of prosecuting. It is simply to find out the cause of that accident.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman say that his bill as it is now, and with the authority already conferred upon the Chief of the Bureau of Mines, would not permit him to obtain all the information he desired about any one of these past occurrences or as to the causes of explosions, and things of that kind?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it would. I do not think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that I do not like ex post facto laws or retroactive laws. It seems to me there is sufficient law and sufficient authority here now in this new bill, which met some objection on its original passage, and which has been vitally changed since it left the House—sufficient authority is there to enable the Bureau of Mines to do a great many things, and it is practically sufficient to enable it to uncover all these facts to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. FOSTER. That is so, after the passage of the act. I take it that the Director of the Bureau of Mines, who says only three explosions would be effected, so far as he knows, by this legislation, is familiar with the matters to which he refers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I know how earnest the gentleman from Illinois is about matters of this kind and how anxious he is to put through any measure that has the sanction of his committee; but it seems to me that the money appropriated in this bill ought to be applied by the Director of the Bureau of Mines strictly to the work he has on hand and the work that is to come, and that he ought not to be given authority to spend that money to cover fields already covered by the activities of the Department of Justice and of the Department of Labor.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not ask for it if I thought that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman comes in with a resolution after the conference report has been agreed to and after the matter is out of the hands of both Houses.

Mr. FOSTER. It may not have been enrolled.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT MOULTRIE, GA.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the Senate bill 2852.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks for the present consideration of the Senate bill 2852. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2852) to increase the limit of cost of the Federal building and site therefor at Moultrie, Ga.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia if this bill has had the approval of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. PARK. No. That question was asked me a little while ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that, although knowing how earnest the gentleman is to get this bill through, the custom ought to be followed that obtains with respect to all bills, and that is to get a favorable report from the committee, and I therefore am constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

CHARLES S. GREENWOOD.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution (H. Res. 158; H. Rept. No. 195) to pay Charles S. Greenwood, clerk of the late EBENEZER J. HILL, a Representative in Congress, $166.66.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Charles S. Greenwood, clerk to EBENEZER J. HILL, a Representative from the State of Connecticut at the time of his death, September 27, 1917, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE, TEX.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill S. 2947, now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the Senate bill 2947. A similar House bill is on the calendar. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2947) granting the consent of Congress to the city of El Paso, Tex., to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River within or near the city limits of El Paso, Tex., such construction to be made with the consent and cooperation of the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the number of the House bill on the calendar?

Mr. BLANTON. H. R. 6412.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the number on the calendar?

Mr. BLANTON. Seventy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform me whether any negotiations have so far taken place with the Republic of Mexico toward the construction of this bridge?

Mr. BLANTON. I understand that negotiations have been had and that the city of El Paso will have the cooperation of the Republic of Mexico in building this bridge.

Mr. STAFFORD. From the wording of the bill I take it that this is not an ordinary bridge bill. It is a bridge across an international stream, and it provides in phraseology for the cooperation of the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say that at present the only bridge across the Rio Grande is owned by the street car company, and it is a toll bridge. It is proposed by this bill, which is reported out by the committee, to build a free bridge for free transportation, both for the benefit of El Paso and Juarez and the people of this country and the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. STAFFORD. I presume it is of special advantage to the city of El Paso?

Mr. BLANTON. It is of especial advantage not only to the city of El Paso but to every man, woman, and child in the United States who visits El Paso, because they always want to go to Juarez.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of El Paso, in the State of Texas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rio Grande River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation within or near the city limits of El Paso, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, such construction to be made only with the consent and cooperation of the Republic of Mexico, and such bridge to be free of any toll.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge is commenced within one year and completed within five years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that House bill 6412 of similar tenor lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

"GARABED" INVENTION.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution 116 and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 116 with a Senate amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that the Garabed resolution?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it a minor amendment?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] is recognized for 30 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the indulgence of the House for a few minutes to discuss the patriotic position taken by Republicans throughout the country, and by Republican Members of the House and Senate in particular, in support of the Government of the United States during the present crisis, or since the beginning of the European war.

Mr. Speaker, this extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth Congress convened on April 2 by virtue of the proclamation of the President of the United States. It has been in continuous session from that date to the present time, a period of six months. The entire time of the session has been devoted to the consideration of measures relating to the great war in which we are now engaged.

The Democratic Party has a small majority both in this body and in the other legislative branch, the Senate. Outside of the question of the organization of the two bodies on the convening of Congress in April, partisan politics has scarcely at any time been manifested in the deliberations of either branch of the Congress. [Applause.] The Democratic Party, having a majority, organized both branches of Congress, electing the present distinguished occupant of the chair [Mr. CLARK of Missouri] Speaker of the House of Representatives and a complete set of Democratic officials in all the minor positions in the House organization. The Senate was organized by the Democrats in the same manner along strictly partisan lines. Immediately following the organization of the two Houses the President of the United States appeared before a joint session of the two bodies on the evening of April 2 and delivered his message to Congress, which message was devoted wholly to the relations at that time existing between this Government and the Imperial Government of Germany. The President's message was a terrific arraignment of the Imperial German Government for the wholesale murder of our citizens upon the high seas and for the many flagrant violations of the rights of American citizens by Germany. In most eloquent and convincing language the President declared to the Congress that these flagrant acts on the part of the Imperial Government of Germany created a state of war, waged by that country against the Government and people of the United States, and demanded of Congress the adoption of a resolution officially recognizing the existence of such a state of war.

In the presence of such a tremendous and overwhelming crisis, partisanship along political lines ceased throughout the length and breadth of the land and the whole of our 100,000,000 people rallied loyally to the support of the country. It was proclaimed far and wide by the spokesmen of the administration that there was to be no partisan position taken by the administration in the conduct of the war that was then impending, and Republicans were urged to lay aside for the time being all political considerations and rally to the support of the President and the Government of the United States.

The Republican Party was in no way responsible for the condition of affairs that confronted the country at that time. The Democratic Party had been in complete control of every branch of the Government for the past four years, and the diplomatic affairs of the country had been handled exclusively by the President. Our relations with foreign nations had been managed by him during that time without any reference to the judgment, the opinion, or the wishes of Republicans. When the President in his very able address to Congress demanded that the existence of a state of war be recognized by the Congress it was a confession to the country that the exploited and boasted diplomacy of the President had failed to keep the country out of war. The adherents of Mr. Wilson had proclaimed loudly throughout the land in the campaign last year that because of the wonderful ability of the President, the splendid manner in which he had managed our foreign affairs, and his matchless skill as a diplomat and statesman he had kept the country out of war, and at the same time maintained the rights of our people and upheld the dignity and honor of the Nation. It was claimed, with equal assurance, by his supporters in that campaign, that his reelection guaranteed a continuation of peace and the keeping of our country out of the great war that was then devastating almost the whole of Europe. It was during the same campaign charged by the supporters of the President that the success of the Republican Party in November, 1916, would mean the entrance of the United States into war, and timid people everywhere were warned that the election of Mr. Hughes and the triumph of the Republican Party meant the placing of the young manhood of America in the trenches of the European war.

The conditions that confronted the country when the President addressed Congress on April 2 and the statements contained in the very eloquent and able address to the Congress demonstrated conclusively that, in so far as this issue of the campaign was concerned, and without doubt it was this issue that gave him reelection, it was a false issue, and that the voters of the country who were persuaded to support Mr. Wilson and the Democratic Party on the extravagant and absurd claims of his supporters as to his ability to keep the country out of war had been "gold-bricked" and had been made the victims of the greatest confidence game that was ever perpetrated upon the American electorate in a political campaign.

In view, however, of the overwhelming crisis confronting the country at the time of the President's address to Congress urging a declaration of war, the Republican Party was compelled to take a position one way or the other on these great questions without any reference to the events just preceding which had made war inevitable, and for none of which the Republican Party was in any manner responsible. There was but one position which it was possible for the Republican Party to take, and that was a position of unswerving loyalty. That was the position which the Republican Party as an organization took at that time, a position to which it has consistently and steadily adhered ever since. Republican leaders in Congress and out of Congress determined that they would not allow the fact that the party was temporarily out of power to in any way deter Republicans from doing their full duty to the country. The Republican Party has never at any time in its history been a copperhead organization, and none of its members have ever presided over a lodge of the Knights of the Golden Circle.

The Republican Party was born in the crucial period of the country's history when it was being determined whether or not the country was to survive or whether it was to fall to pieces because of the inherent inability of a democracy to sustain its existence as a nation.

From the days of Lincoln to the present time the Republican Party has been the robust champion of American rights to their fullest extent upon land and sea, at home and abroad. Under 11 Republican administrations the rights of our people have been zealously safeguarded in every quarter of the globe. Republicans have never limited their devotion to the flag and their loyalty to the country to those periods of time when their party was in power and reserved to themselves the right to play the part of the copperhead when the reins of government should be temporarily in the hands of their political opponents.

Immediately upon our break with Germany, William R. Wilcox, chairman of the Republican national committee, waited upon the President and assured him that, in so far as he was authorized to speak for the national organization of the party it would, during the crisis then impending, give true and loyal support to the Government without reference to political considerations. This position was immediately taken by practically every Republican of prominence, either in public life or private station, including two ex-Presidents of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft, and also our late candidate for President, Mr. Hughes. Every reputable Republican newspaper of influence from Maine to California took the same position and has steadily adhered to it since that time. Every Republican legislature that has been in session in any of the Northern States since the beginning of the war has unanimously adopted resolutions sustaining the position of our Government in the war and pledging the support of their States, without reserve, to the national cause.

Notwithstanding the patriotic position taken by Republicans at the very inception of the war and the enthusiastic and loyal support they have given to the administration on all the great questions affecting the preparation of the country for war during this session of Congress, there has been a surprising but very noticeable effort made by certain Democratic leaders high in the councils of the present administration to derive partisan advantage for the Democratic Party out of the management of the war, and a partisanship unwarranted and offensive has been displayed by the administration in practically every move that has been made toward a successful and vigorous prosecution of the war.

One of the most astonishing and convincing incidents evidencing this attitude on the part of prominent Democrats was a speech delivered by the distinguished Senator from my own State, Mr. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, at Manchester, N. H., on the 26th day of May, 1917, when speaking in support of the Democratic nominee for Congress at a special election held to fill the vacancy in this body occasioned by the death of our late colleague, the Hon. Cyrus H. Sulloway. In the special election in that district but two parties presented candidates, the Republican Party and the Democratic Party. The election took place weeks after the declaration of war had been adopted by Congress and after many of the great war measures that have been considered here had been practically agreed upon. At the time Senator LEWIS made this speech everybody in the United States who had sufficient intelligence to observe and know anything about current events knew that the Republican Party was practically solid in support of the war and was giving loyal support to the administration in the prosecution of the war. Republicans in both branches of Congress had given the President as cordial and whole-hearted support as had the Members of his own party. Yet, notwithstanding all these facts, which no one in the country knew better than Senator LEWIS, he felt justified on the occasion I have mentioned to address the voters of the first New Hampshire district in the following remarkable language:

There is no issue of Republican or Democratic Party in this contest. The issue is, "Will the citizens of the Manchester (N. H.) district stand by the President of the United States in his effort to maintain a war for democracy and justice, and give him a supporter in Congress who will support his policies and hold up his hands? Or will this district select a gentleman of whom it could be said he was an opponent of the policies of the President and of whom hereafter, throughout the whole world, it will be said was elected upon the issue of dishonoring the President and defeating America?" If the candidate representing the cause of the President is defeated, it will not matter what reasons may be given at home, through all the world it will be said that in the first election—in the first contest—where the issue was raised in all America as to whether the people of the country were with the President, were with the war, and were supporting the cause that the New Hampshire district was the first to answer, and that the Manchester (N. H.) district replied, "No"; and by its verdict told the civilized world that it was against the war, against the President, against America, was for Prussianism, and was for the defeat of the United States by her enemies, and that loyal New Hampshire voted disloyally to the American Government for the first time in its life. The question for you, then, is "Which way?" Are you for America or for Germany? Are you for the President or for the Kaiser? Are you for your country or for its enemies? Your ballot is the only answer you can give.

The support of the war and the issues of the war is to the honor of New Hampshire. To do otherwise is to dishonor your State and to hold yourselves up before the country as citizens disloyal to the cause and deserters from your flag.

Had these astounding and unwarranted statements been made by some obscure political orator it at least would have been considered a most surprising and unjustifiable argument, but the significance of such language coming from so eminent a person as the distinguished Senator from Illinois makes it a matter well worthy of thoughtful consideration. Senator LEWIS is known to be one of the President's closest friends on the floor of the Senate, and when he makes an important speech, either in the Senate or on the stump, he is supposed to reflect at least with some degree of accuracy the feelings and sentiments of the President of the United States.

That this argument of Senator LEWIS was made deliberately and was seriously advanced by him is proven by the fact that his speech had been carefully prepared in advance, and that copies of the speech were given to the Boston papers on the afternoon before its delivery. But if there had been any question about the statements made by the Senator in this speech being deliberately made, and made for the purpose of reflecting upon the patriotism of the Republicans of the country and Republican Members of Congress in particular, and driving into the Democratic Party all voters who are at this time giving loyal support to the country, that question was removed by a subsequent statement of the Senator in a speech on the floor of the Senate, in which he undertook to explain what he meant in his Manchester speech. In explaining what he really had in mind at that time the Senator makes it very plain that in his judgment support given by a voter in an election of Members of Congress to a Republican candidate indicates a lack of loyalty to the country at this time. The Senator explained his Manchester speech in this way:

Mr. President, it was my intention when I made that speech to present very clearly to the country that which I now repeat, that in an hour like this, when the President of the United States, as the Commander in Chief of the armies is waging a war against the enemies of America, the man who presents himself as representing the President stands for the things for which the President is fighting, and that the man who stands against the President stands against the things for which America is fighting. I made the issue.

I deplore, sir, that that constituency could not accept it as such, and regret all the more that my eminent friend from Ohio, by calling attention to the specific issue which I raised, and now inviting the attention of the Senate to the result of the election, could accentuate before the country, when the issue was directly put before this American constituency as to whether their ballots should be free from partisanship sufficient to be for the President or against the President, that they chose to be against the President and for the Kaiser, or that they chose to be against America and for Germany.

Notwithstanding Senator LEWIS's appeal to the voters of that district, the Republican candidate was elected by a very large majority, and in commenting on this fact the distinguished Senator, the spokesman of the President and the gifted oratorical champion of the Democratic Party, expresses deep regret that the sturdy and hard-headed Republican voters of that district were so forgetful of their duty to the country that they "chose to be against the President and for the Kaiser, or that they chose to be against America and for Germany."

Mr. Speaker, is it possible that Senator LEWIS reflected the sentiments of the President of the United States when he spoke in this manner? Is it possible that he voiced the sentiments of Democratic leaders of the country in making the bold charge that in order for the Republican voters of the country to demonstrate their "loyalty to the country" and the fact that they are not "deserters from the flag" they must give up their convictions of a lifetime on great political questions, abandon the party in whose principles they devoutly believe, turn their backs on the great party of Lincoln and go over "en masse, boots and baggage," into the Democratic camp? Is it possible that in the coming election in 1918, when a new Congress is to be elected, the slogan of the Democratic Party is going to be that a vote for a Republican candidate for Congress is a vote for the Kaiser, and that in order to prove their loyalty to the country and not to be "deserters from the flag" Republicans are expected to support Democratic candidates for office? It would seem so from this remarkable utterance, coming as it does from such a high source in the Democratic Party.

I propose now to analyze this appeal made by my good personal friend, the distinguished Senator from my State, to the Republican voters of the loyal State of New Hampshire and see what foundation, if any, he had in making such an appeal to them. Was there any justification for such an argument except the desire to have the Democratic Party profit politically on account of the present distress of the country? Let us see if this is not an effort to capitalize the loyalty and the patriotism of the loyal masses of the country to the advantage of the administration in power.

Every Member of the Congress of the United States, and every informed person in the country, knows that at no time since the delivery of the address of the President of the United States to the joint session of Congress on April 2 to the present time has there been any effort on the part of Republicans to play party politics on any of the great questions that have been considered here. [Applause on the Republican side.] Let us take up the essential war measures that have been considered and enacted into law and see whether or not the official actions of the Representatives of the Republican Party in this body and in any other branch of the National Legislature have been less patriotic or less loyal than have been the official actions of our Democratic friends.

Perhaps the first of the great measures considered by the Congress intimately connected with the war was the "armed-ship bill," which was considered during the closing days of the Sixty-fourth Congress. The President before that time had severed diplomatic relations with the German Government and had given Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, his passports. The President came before Congress and in a very able address requested Congress to pass what was then known as the "armed-ship bill," a measure granting to him the authority and the power to arm and equip the merchant vessels of the United States with guns and gunners from our Naval Establishment, so that they might protect themselves upon the high seas from German submarines. This question was considered in the House for two days before the close of the last Congress. Although the President urged this measure as a peace measure, it was generally regarded by everyone as a practical entrance into the war, or at least it was very generally believed that unless Germany backed up on her announced purpose to wage indiscriminate submarine warfare this step on the part of America meant an acceptance of the gage of battle thrown down by the German Government and was notice to the world that the United States was prepared to take the extreme step of going to war in defense of American rights. After quite a lengthy discussion of this bill a roll call was had in the House, and out of a membership of approximately 200 Republican Members but 9 Republicans voted against the bill on final passage. So, Mr. Speaker, there was certainly nothing in that vote, so far as the Republican membership of the House was concerned, that would justify the claim that Republicans were for the Kaiser or that they were "deserters from the flag." There was nothing to justify the argument of Senator LEWIS that the election of a Republican candidate to a seat in this body could anywhere be justly considered as an expression of disloyalty on the part of a constituency and a demonstration of unfriendly sentiments toward the President of the United States. This measure, as everyone remembers, failed in the Senate because of the inability of the supporters of the bill to bring it to a vote, but it is a matter of common information that had the measure reached a vote in the Senate it would have received the entire support of the Republican membership of that body, with probably two or three exceptions.

The next great measure affecting our relations with Germany and relating to the present war was the formal adoption by Congress of the war resolution. When the President addressed the joint session of the two Houses of Congress on the relations existing between our country and Germany he laid before the Congress instance after instance of the violation of American rights by the Government of Germany; cited the brutal and unjustifiable murder of American citizens—men, women, and children—traveling on peaceful missions on the high seas, and summed up his whole address with a declaration that this amounted to war upon the Government and people of the United States and demanded of Congress the adoption of a formal resolution recognizing the existence of a state of war. Congress immediately gave consideration to the address of the President—careful and earnest consideration such as a question of that tremendous importance to the American people demanded. On a roll-call vote in the Senate on the question of officially recognizing a state of war every Republican Member in that body, with the exception of three, voted for the adoption of the resolution. Four Democratic Members of the Senate voted against the resolution. When the resolution came to a vote in the House of Representatives, after a memorable debate, out of a total membership of 435 there were but 50 votes in the negative. These negative votes were divided about equally between the two sides of the House. If the vote on the formal resolution recognizing a state of war is to be the test of loyalty here, there was nothing in the vote in the House of Representatives or the Senate of the United States that would warrant anyone in believing or charging that Republicans were less friendly to the Government of the United States than Democrats or that Republican Members of Congress and the Senate are less worthy of occupying seats in Congress than their Democratic colleagues.

Since the declaration of war both branches of Congress have passed bills which, in the aggregate, authorized the issuing of bonds and have levied taxes upon the people to the amount of many billions of dollars to carry on the war. In the consideration of these measures in Congress partisan politics at no time have been injected into the discussion by Republican Members, and on the passage of these great bills which provide for the raising of the most stupendous sums of money that were ever raised in the history of the entire world there was no partisan division; and on both the measures authorizing billions in bond issues not a single Republican vote was cast in the negative. [Applause on the Republican side.] So in this phase of the conduct of the war, the raising of money which is as vital to the prosecution of a war as raising the Army, there was nothing in the attitude or in the action of the Republican Party as a whole or any of its Members that would justify the argument made by Senator LEWIS in the New Hampshire campaign that a vote for a Republican candidate for Congress was a vote for Germany and a vote against the Government of the United States.

Another great war measure that has been considered and enacted into law by Congress, perhaps the greatest, was the military bill, or the bill authorizing the creation of a new army of more than a million men. There was nothing connected with the consideration of this bill in either branch of Congress that would indicate that the Republicans are less ardent in their loyalty to the Government of the United States than Democrats. Let us see what the real facts are as to the military bill. The administration demanded of Congress that the army to be created should be raised by a selective-draft system. This plan of raising an army in America was a new departure, and at the time the proposition was first mentioned was contrary to the sentiment of a majority of the Members of Congress and, in my judgment, was contrary to the sentiment of an overwhelming majority of the people of the country. It was a reversal of the most sacred traditions of the American people. Yet the President and the administration very earnestly urged the adoption of this system as necessary to a successful prosecution of the war. In the consideration of that measure upon the floor of Congress many of the Democratic leaders were against the President. A majority of the Democratic members of the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported the bill to the House, refused to follow the lead of the administration and stood for the volunteer system that had heretofore prevailed. Among the prominent Democratic leaders who opposed the administration on this measure were the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and the able and honored occupant of the Speaker's chair, Mr. CLARK, who not only declined to follow the President's leadership, but delivered one of the most able and eloquent speeches of the entire session in opposition to the measure. The leadership in the fight to put through the President's program on that question was assumed by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], ranking Republican member of the Military Affairs Committee. Among the ablest advocates of the administration program in the debates in Congress were Members sitting on the Republican side of the House, and on the final test vote by which it was decided to accept the administration's plan of the selective draft in raising the armies as against the volunteer system, a very large number of Democratic Members broke away from the President, including the distinguished leaders I have mentioned and others prominent in the Democratic House organization. A very large majority of the Republican membership of the House voted with the administration.

On this question I was not in agreement with the majority of my Republican colleagues and was one of the 109 Members who voted for the volunteer system as against the system of a selective draft. And I am frank to say now that nothing has happened since that time that has caused me to change my opinion on this subject, and I do not in any way regret the vote I cast for the old, time-honored volunteer system. In fact, it is the one vote I am prouder of than any cast by me since I have been a Member of Congress. It therefore certainly does not lie in the mouth of any supporter of the President to say that in the consideration of this measure, which the administration considered of prime importance and which was the main feature of the legislative program urged upon Congress by the President, Republican Members of Congress took a position that could justify the argument made by Senator LEWIS that it was necessary for the support of the President and the war that Democratic Members of Congress should be sent here from Republican districts.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that the Republican Member [Mr. BURROUGHS] elected to fill the New Hampshire vacancy has stood by and voted for these war measures recommended by the President?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely so. The gentleman is right. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be given 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Another of the great war measures, which was recommended by the administration and which has been enacted into law by Congress, was the appropriation of practically three-quarters of a billion dollars to be expended in the building up of the greatest fleet of aircraft the world has ever seen. This measure received the support of every Republican in both branches of Congress. Another of the great war measures that has been enacted into law by Congress was the appropriation of vast sums of money for the construction of merchant vessels and the creation of a great merchant marine for the purpose of making it possible to transport our armies and munitions and supplies for the Army to Europe. This measure was one of the really important measures of the whole war program and received the solid vote of the Republican Members of Congress.

Another great measure that we have enacted into law during this special session and one which the administration was very insistent upon was the so-called food-control bill. This legislation was perhaps more far-reaching in its provisions, more radical in the changes made, than any measure ever passed by the American Congress. It conferred great and almost autocratic power on the President of the United States in the matter of the production, distribution, and conservation of food supplies. The President said that the enactment of this measure into law practically in the shape in which it was submitted to Congress was vitally necessary and important to the successful prosecution of the war. On the final passage of this great measure in the House of Representatives, on the vote approving the conference report, not a single Republican vote was cast against it. It received the unanimous vote of every Member present, without regard to party affiliations. Can it be claimed, then, by any candid person that there was anything in connection with the consideration of this great measure to justify the argument that Republicans are less to be trusted upon this floor in the enactment of legislation necessary to a successful prosecution of the war than Democrats?

Mr. Speaker, there have been several other important measures enacted into law during this special session of Congress which the President recommended and urged as a part of the war program, and on not a single one of these measures can it be said that the Republicans have shown less inclination to do that which was for the best interests of the country at this time than have the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle. On all essential war measures, including the creation of the Army, the strengthening of the Navy, the building up of a merchant marine, the creation of a great air service, the conservation of food supplies, the authorization of stupendous loans of money in amounts that almost stagger the imagination, Republicans have presented practically a united front, have laid aside partisan politics, and have declined to take advantage of many things where perhaps legitimate political capital could have been made. They have consistently acted in a manner to strengthen the Government and uphold the administration in every proper way. On no essential war measure can it truthfully be charged that Republicans have given less support to the administration than have Democrats.

It is true that on some measures incidental to the prosecution of the war we have considered during this session Republicans have not been able to follow the recommendations of the administration. The Republican Members almost unanimously opposed the proposition urged by the President to muzzle the press of the country, believing it was not essential to the successful prosecution of the war, and believing also that the constitutional guaranty of free speech and a free press could not and should not be denied the people of this country. [Applause.]

Republicans in Congress take the position that this being the people's Government, and this being the people's war, the American people are entitled to know all the facts possible for them to know in connection with its management. [Applause.] Republicans believe that the people of the country can be trusted, that they have a right to know what is going on in the various branches of government, also that they have a perfect right, in a proper way, to subject the acts of every official of the Government, from the President of the United States down to the humblest official to the closest scrutiny, and that the people have the undoubted right, and that it is their duty to discuss fully and freely public questions, even questions concerning the management of the war. [Applause.]

For these reasons Republicans in Congress refused to muzzle the press of the country and to deprive the people who are to pay the expenses of this war and who are to furnish the soldiers to fight its battles from their rightful privilege of knowing all that can properly be divulged consistent with the public safety. Republicans do not consider the fact that they have stood for free speech and a free press as evidence at all that they are for the Kaiser and against the President, and that they are for Germany and against the United States, or that they are "disloyal to the cause" and "deserters from the flag." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Another matter upon which Republicans, quite generally in Congress, opposed the administration was on the proposition of accepting the tender of Mr. Roosevelt to furnish a division of volunteer troops for service in France. Not only was the practically solid Republican membership of the two Houses in Congress in favor of allowing Mr. Roosevelt to take a division and go to France, but many Democrats joined them in support of that proposition; and it unquestionedly was the sentiment of an overwhelming majority of the American people that his services should be accepted. [Applause.] I have never seen anywhere any good or sufficient reason given why the President defied the expressed will of Congress, and what he knew was the pronounced sentiment of the people of the country in this matter. It is not surprising that the sentiment in the country is widespread that the reason Mr. Roosevelt's patriotic offer was not accepted was because it was feared in some quarters that he might distinguish himself if given an opportunity to fight for his country and thereby further increase his great and justly deserved popularity with the American people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed to complete his remarks. How long will it take?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, only a little longer.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask that the gentleman be given 10 minutes more.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] have 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Another proposition that Republicans quite generally agree upon and upon which they differ from the administration is that there should be a joint committee on war expenditures created from the membership of the two Houses of Congress, which committee would have to some extent supervision over the huge war contracts that are being let and over the expenditure of the stupendous sums of the people's money that Congress is appropriating to carry on this war.

Republicans take the position that the people are perfectly willing to furnish whatever money is necessary to a vigorous and successful prosecution of the war, but that they have a right to know that every dollar of their money is properly spent and there can be no harm and much good would result from a committee such as Republicans propose to create to supervise and control in the proper way the expenditures of these vast sums of money. [Applause on the Republican side.] Certainly if these contracts are all fair, and there is no graft going on anywhere, and there is no disposition in any quarter to steal a little from the Government here and there on contracts, there can be no harm come from the creation of a committee of this kind, and the people will rejoice to know their money is being honestly and economically expended.

And, on the other hand, if there is perchance some room for the suspicion that improper and extortionate contracts are being forced with the Government and that a large part of the people's money, raised for the prosecution of the war, may possibly be filched from the Treasury by thieving and grafting contractors no patriotic man could object if a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress should expose such improper transactions and put a stop to such practices. There can not be too much light turned on public officials who are expending billions of dollars with practically no control or supervision. The President, however, is very insistent that such a committee should not be appointed, and has stated in a letter written to the chairman of one of the important committees of the House that such a committee would hamper him greatly in the proper conduct of the war. The fact that Republicans in Congress are in favor of a committee of this kind and are in favor of the honest expenditure of every dollar of the people's money in this war, and are opposed to thieving and grafting and looting the Treasury does not prove that they are for the Kaiser and against the President, or that they are enemies of the United States or friends of Germany by any means.

Mr. Speaker, aside from the position which has been taken by the Republicans on these questions, no one reading the proceedings of this Congress, and no one following the debates or listening to the roll calls when votes have been taken here on great war measures would be able to distinguish between the support given to the Government and to the administration by Republican Members of Congress from that of Democratic Members. So there is certainly nothing in anything that has transpired during the eventful weeks and months since this Congress was called into extraordinary session by the President that would justify or would in the slightest degree warrant the astounding argument made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois to the voters of the first New Hampshire district, in which he appealed to them to show their loyalty to the country and to the flag by voting for the Democratic candidate for Congress, and solemnly and in eloquent phrases warned them that a failure on their part to do this could only be construed as opposition on their part to the President of the United States in his efforts to maintain a war for democracy and justice.

If there is nothing in the record and the conduct of the Republican Party since the beginning of this war to justify the appeal of Senator LEWIS in his Manchester speech for Republicans to vote for Democratic candidates for office on the grounds of patriotism and loyalty to the country during a time of war, there is certainly, Mr. Speaker, nothing in the past history or record, either of the Republican Party or the Democratic Party, that would warrant such an argument and such an appeal. The Republican Party, so far as loyalty to the country and devotion to the flag are concerned, has a record unsurpassed by any party in the political history of the United States. Without in any way reflecting upon the present leadership of the Democratic Party, so much can not be truthfully said of the past history and the past record of that great organization. There is much in the past history of the Democratic Party that Senator LEWIS and the other Democratic campaign speakers do not mention when they are discussing loyalty and urging voters not to be "deserters from the flag." This is not the first time the country has been involved in desperate war. This is not the first time in the history of America that democracy and liberty have been assailed. From 1861 to 1865 a sanguinary conflict was waged in this country for the very life of the Nation, and certainly liberty and democracy were at stake in that great struggle. At that time the Republican Party, which is the minority party during this administration, had control of the Government in both the executive and legislative branches, and the Democratic Party for which Senator LEWIS speaks was in the minority and occupied relatively the same position in the Government at that time that the Republican Party now occupies relative to the present war.

Before the argument of Senator LEWIS is conceded to be well founded and meritorious, before Republicans are required to desert their party, before they are asked not to support candidates upon their own ticket and are required to support Democratic candidates and Democratic tickets in order to demonstrate their loyalty to the country, it might not be amiss to inquire somewhat into what the record and attitude of the Democratic Party was toward the Government of the United States and toward the administration in power and what position that party took toward the prosecution of the great war for the Union in the dark days from 1861 to 1865. I would not feel justified in calling the attention of the House and the country to the unfortunate and regrettable record of the Democratic Party as an organization in time of war were it not for the fact that it is apparent that a great effort is to be made in the coming campaign, and probably in the following campaigns, to capitalize the patriotism of the country into an asset of the Democratic Party. During the Civil War the Democratic Party, although in the minority, had a large membership in both branches in the Congress of the United States. After the election in the fall of 1862, in the middle of the war, they controlled the State legislatures in a number of the Northern, or loyal, States. Did the Democratic Members of Congress in that day or the Democratic legislatures in the States which they controlled during the progress of that war give Mr. Lincoln's administration the cordial and earnest support that Republicans have accorded to the present administration? Did they, with the unanimity that has marked the action of Republicans during the present war, support all the essential war measures recommended by Mr. Lincoln? Were they in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war? Did they speak of Mr. Lincoln, who was then President, in terms of respect such as Republicans throughout the Nation and in Congress always speak of President Wilson during this crisis? Oh, no! Oh, no! It is a matter of history, and is also a matter within the recollection of many men and women now living, that the Democratic Party of the North as an organization during the four long, trying years of the Civil War, when the life of the Union was at stake, was a disloyal organization in the main. There is not a record anywhere extant where a Democratic convention or a mass meeting, from a township gathering up to the national convention of the party which assembled at Chicago in the autumn of 1864, ever expressed one word in support of Mr. Lincoln or one word in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war. Every official utterance of the party denounced Lincoln, denounced the conduct of the war, demanded the immediate termination of hostilities, and negotiation with the revolting States for the restoration of peace. There was not a prominent Democratic newspaper of the North during these long, dreary years that had a good word for Mr. Lincoln or that gave in any degree support to the Republican administration then in power. It is a fact well known by those who are familiar with the history of that time that the opposition which the Democratic Party of the North interposed to the prosecution of the war at times gave President Lincoln graver concern than the Confederate armies on southern battle fields.

Senator LEWIS, who is not only one of the most eloquent orators in the United States Senate, but is a gentleman of great learning and wide information, certainly had forgotten the recorded history of the record of his own party in our own State during the dark days of 1861 to 1865 when he admonished Republicans in the loyal State of New Hampshire that they could best show their loyalty to the country by deserting their own party and supporting a Democratic candidate for Congress.

In June, 1863, there was held at Springfield, Ill., the capital of my State, the home city of Abraham Lincoln, a great Democratic mass meeting. This meeting had been advertised far and wide throughout the confines of Illinois. The newspapers of that period estimated that on the day of this monster Democratic mass meeting 100,000 Democrats journeyed to the State capital and participated in what was in fact a great antiwar demonstration. Speeches were made to the assembled thousands by the then leading Democrats of Illinois and adjoining States.

Among the speakers were Senator Richardson, of Illinois, who succeeded the lamented Douglas in the Senate of the United States; Dan Voorhees, the eloquent leader of the Democratic Party of Indiana, Sunset Cox, then a distinguished Congressman from the State of Ohio, afterwards a Representative on this floor from the State of New York; and others equally noted. Lincoln was denounced as a tyrant, who had subverted constitutional government, who had become a greater autocrat, as was said by one speaker, than the Czar of all the Russias. There was much eloquence of a similar strain. Tremendous enthusiasm was aroused. The name of the archtraitor Valandingham was loudly cheered, and as a final act, which branded the great gathering for what it was—a traitorous assemblage of disloyal persons—the following resolutions, giving official expression to the sentiments of the Democratic Party of Illinois, the home State of President Lincoln, were adopted:

Resolved, That the further offensive prosecution of the war tends to subvert the Constitution and Government and entail upon the Nation all the disastrous consequences of misrule and anarchy; that we are in favor of peace upon the basis of a restoration of the Union and for the accomplishment of which purpose we propose a national convention to settle upon terms of peace, which shall have in view the restoration of the Union as it was by securing by constitutional amendments such rights to the several States and the people thereof as honor and justice demand.

These resolutions were given the greatest possible publicity through the disloyal publications of the North and were heralded far and wide as being evidence of the fact that the people of the Northern States, especially the home State of President Lincoln, the loyal State of Illinois, were not united in the support of the war and were determined upon its immediate termination. These resolutions were also printed in full in the newspapers of Richmond, Va., the Capital of the Confederate Government, and other prominent newspapers throughout the South. That they had a tremendously bad effect upon the prosecution of the war, tending to prolong it and to increase the sacrifice of blood and treasure necessary to save the Union, is not in any manner a matter of doubt. The gallant soldiers of the Confederate armies, against whom the tide of battle was turning at that time and who were fighting against great odds, were encouraged to believe by the resolutions adopted at Springfield and by similar resolutions adopted by Democratic assemblages throughout the North that there was such a growing public sentiment in the Northern States against a further prosecution of the war that if the Confederates could hold out a few months longer their cause would be won because of the total collapse of loyal sentiment in the North. How many gallant men wearing the Union blue lost their lives because of the renewed encouragement given to the Confederates and because of the prolongation of the war by reason of these disloyal utterances of Democratic Party leaders in the North will never be known.

Oh, this was a great meeting! It was a red-letter day in the history of the Democratic Party in Illinois. It was called by them a patriotic meeting. But not a single patriotic utterance was heard from any of the eminent gentlemen who spoke on that occasion. Not one word of criticism was spoken of Jefferson Davis and his associates who were engaged in a criminal and treasonable attempt to overthrow the Union and to destroy the Government. Not one word of condemnation of traitors, but torrents of abuse of loyal men characterized every speech. Lincoln was the object of their peculiar wrath, and his heroic efforts to save the Union were to these Illinois Democrats highly criminal and reprehensible.

What would have happened had the resolutions that were adopted by that great Democratic assemblage become the policy of the Nation? Would it have meant the saving of the Union? Would it have meant a reunited country of which a hundred million free people, North, South, East, and West, are proud to-day? No! If the resolutions so enthusiastically adopted by that meeting had been accepted as a program for the future management of the war, the Union cause would have been irretrievably lost, Lincoln's administration would have been an ignominious failure, secession would have become an accomplished fact, and the government of Washington and the fathers would have been dismembered for all time. Senator LEWIS certainly could not have had that great meeting of the Democracy of his own State in mind when he was advising the patriotic Republican voters of New Hampshire that in order to assert their patriotism they should support a Democratic candidate for Congress against a highly honorable and capable candidate on their own ticket.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. Even in the halls of the American Congress, during the dark days of the Civil War, treasonable speeches were made day after day by distinguished leaders of the Democratic party. The war program of President Lincoln was criticized and opposed in every way possible.

Lincoln was denounced, traduced, and vilified day after day. His every act, his every word, was criticized and everything possible was done to obstruct the successful prosecution of that great war, as the pages of the Congressional Globe during those four eventful years abundantly prove. Why, here in this very Chamber, upon this floor, on April 8, 1864, a Democratic Member of Congress from the State of Ohio, Alexander Long, delivered a speech fairly bristling with treason, in which he announced that the Union Armies could not succeed; that the Southern States by force of arms could not be held in the Union, and advocated a recognition of the independence of the Southern States. Lest it be thought that I may exaggerate what was said by this distinguished gentleman, this spokesman of the Democratic Party, on this floor in the darkest hour of our country's history, I quote his language from the Congressional Globe of that date:

> Will they throw down their arms and submit to the terms? Who shall believe that the free, proud American blood which courses with as quick pulsation through their veins as our own, will not be spilled to the last drop in resistance? Can the Union be restored by war? I answer unhesitatingly and deliberately, No!
> War is final, eternal separation. I am reluctantly and despondingly forced to the conclusion that the Union is lost, never to be restored. * * * I see neither North nor South any sentiment on which it is possible to build a Union. * * * In attempting to preserve our jurisdiction over the Southern States we have lost our constitutional form of government over the northern. The very idea upon which this war is founded, coercion of States, leads to despotism. I now believe there are but two alternatives, and they are either an acknowledgment of the independence of the South as an independent nation, or their complete subjugation and extermination as a people, and of these alternatives I prefer the former.

Mark the date of this treasonable utterance, April 8, 1864. At the time this speech was made upon the floor of Congress, hundreds of thousands of brave men had given up their lives under the flag that the Union might live; countless thousands more had been maimed and wounded for life; Gettysburg had been fought and won; Vicksburg and Mobile had fallen; and the Mississippi River, the Great Father of Waters, once more "flowed unvexed to the sea." After three years of desperate war the Confederate armies had been forced back over mountains and rivers, the Southern Confederacy was hemmed in on every side and surrounded by a wall of fire. The Federal armies were slowly but surely tightening their grip on Richmond, and Sherman was marshaling his invincible hosts for their triumphant march to the sea.

It was recognized everywhere that the days of the so-called Confederate Government were numbered and that the triumph of the Union was near. It was at this hour when assured victory was in sight that this proposition was made in Congress by a prominent Democratic leader to give up all that had been gained by the great sacrifice of blood and treasure, freely spent that the Union might live. It was in this hour when victory was certain and the restoration of the Union was practically assured that the treasonable proposition was made in Congress to acknowledge the independence of the Southern States as an independent nation. This was treason—bold, defiant treason.

What would be thought of a Republican Member of Congress in this day if he should arise in his place and demand a cessation of hostilities; should declare that Germany could never be defeated; say that the American cause was hopeless; and advise practically the unconditional surrender of the Government to German autocracy by admitting the righteousness of the German cause and denouncing the position of our own Government? A Member who would dare to utter such treasonable sentiments in this place at this time would be expelled from this body by an almost unanimous vote.

Yet this gentleman, Mr. Alexander Long, delivered the sentiments just quoted amid the frequent applause of his party colleagues and took his seat without a single word of rebuke or dissent coming from the Democratic side of the House. A resolution was introduced on the following day, April 9, by the Hon. Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, at that time Speaker of the House, providing for the expulsion of Long because of the treasonable utterances contained in his speech. This resolution required a two-thirds vote, which could not be obtained, as the entire Democratic membership, with very few exceptions, voted against the resolution of expulsion. Upon the failure of the resolution to expel Long, the following resolution was introduced:

> Resolved, That said Alexander Long, a Representative from the second district of Ohio, be, and he is hereby, declared to be an unworthy Member of the House of Representatives.

A roll call was had on this resolution, a record of which is found in the Congressional Globe of April 14, 1864, from which it appears that 69 Democratic Members of the House voted against the adoption of the resolution, indicating thereby that they indorsed the sentiments voiced by Long, and that they did not consider him an unworthy Member to sit as one of their colleagues in this Chamber.

Time will not permit even brief reference to the almost innumerable utterances of disloyal sentiments and treasonable acts of the leading members of the party of which Mr. LEWIS so eloquently speaks during the troubled days of the sixties. But the official position of the Democratic Party as an organization was proclaimed in the platform of that party which was adopted at Chicago on the 29th day of August, 1864. This convention was composed of leading Democrats from all the Northern and border States. These men presumably reflected the real sentiment of the constituencies which they represented in that great convention, and the platform which was adopted by the convention is an official expression of the position of the Democratic Party of that day on the questions growing out of the great war for the preservation of the Union. The most eloquent orators of the party appeared before the convention and many notable addresses were made. Not one word was uttered in commendation of Abraham Lincoln or his administration. Not a single criticism was made of the leaders of the so-called Confederate Government, many of whom had sat as delegates in the last preceding Democratic national convention, held four years before. The convention nominated as its standard bearer Gen. George B. McClellan, who, during the early years of the war, commanded the Army of the Potomac, and adopted a party platform for him to run upon which reads, in part, as follows:

> Resolved, That this convention does explicitly declare as the sense of the American people that after four years of failure to restore the Union by the experiment of war, during which, under the pretense of a military necessity or war power higher than the Constitution, the Constitution itself has been disregarded in every part, and public liberty and private right alike trodden down and the material prosperity of the country essentially impaired—justice, humanity, liberty, and the public welfare demand that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities, with a view to the ultimate convention of the States, or other peaceable means, to the end that at the earliest practicable moment peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal Union of the States.
> Resolved, That the aim and object of the Democratic Party is to preserve the Federal Union and the rights of the States unimpaired, and they hereby declare that they consider that the administrative usurpation of extraordinary and dangerous powers not granted by the Constitution—the supervision of the civil by military law in States not in insurrection; the arbitrary military arrest, imprisonment, trial, and sentence of American citizens in States where civil law exists in full force; the suppression of freedom of speech and the press; the denial of the right of asylum; the open and avowed disregard of State rights; the employment of unusual test oath; and the interference with and denial of the right of the people to bear arms in their defense—is calculated to prevent a restoration of the Union and the perpetuation of a Government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed.

These resolutions, unanimously adopted by the Democratic National Convention of 1864, require no word of comment or explanation from me. They show conclusively that the administration of President Lincoln in its supreme effort to put down the rebellion and preserve the Union had neither the sympathy nor the support of the Democratic Party of the North as an organization.

Gen. McClellan, the Democratic candidate for President in that campaign, in his letter accepting the nomination was compelled practically to repudiate the platform upon which he was running, and he did so in the following significant and remarkable language:

> I could not look in the face of my gallant comrades of the Army and Navy, who have survived so many bloody battles and tell them that their labors, and the sacrifice of so many of our slain and wounded brethern had been in vain; that we had abandoned that Union for which we so often perilled our lives.

By its platform utterance the National Democratic Party in 1864 proclaimed that the war had been a failure, asserted boldly the proposition that the Union could naver be restored by force of arms, and demanded that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities. This platform was adopted as the official creed of the Democratic Party within six months of the final collapse of the Confederate cause at Appomattox. It was published in all the leading newspapers of the South, and gave great aid and encouragement to the Confederate Government to continue the struggle until after the election, when it was confidently believed and announced Abraham Lincoln would be repudiated by the people of the North and that the friends of those in revolt against the authority of the Government and seeking to subvert it would come into power at Washington.

Mr. Speaker, this is the record for loyalty in time of war of the party for which Senator LEWIS spoke in his speech at Manchester, N. H., the party that now claims a monopoly on the patriotism of the country. It is not of such a character as would impel any Republican who reveres the name of Lincoln, and who is proud of the great traditions and the glorious history of the Republican Party to now abandon its banner and seek a home within the ranks of the Democratic Party. Before Republicans can be convinced that it is their patriotic duty to desert their party and to vote a Democratic ticket in congressional elections a stronger case will have to be made in support of the Democratic Party than that made by its record for loyalty during the days of the Civil War and a stronger case will be required to be made against the Republican Party than that shown by its record in support of the administration and the Government during this present war.

Republicans do not propose to abandon their party. It is not necessary that they should do so. They will give true and loyal support to this administration in its every effort looking to a vigorous and successful prosecution of the war because they are members of a loyal party and Republicans propose to discharge their full duty to the Government of the United States at all times, whether their party is in power or out of power.

Mr. Speaker, I represent here a people as intelligent and as patriotic as there is in this country. A majority of those whom I represent are surviving soldiers of the Civil War and their descendants.

A majority of them did not support the Democratic Party in the last election. They will not support the Democratic Party in the next election, in my opinion, yet they stand unitedly behind the United States in this great crisis and will do their full duty. They know the record and splendid history of the party to which they belong, and they are not unfamiliar with the record of the party which Senator LEWIS now invites them to join.

They are not "deserters from the flag," and they resent the charge that support given to Republican candidates for office during the continuance of this war brands them as being "against the war, against the President, against America," and that they are for "Prussianism and the defeat of the United States by her enemies."

They are for America now and always, as against the world, and will do their full duty in this crisis and make every sacrifice that loyalty and love of country may require of them. They have without complaint sent forth to the Army their sturdy sons to fight under the flag for the old Union as their fathers did in the days of Lincoln. They know but one country and one flag—that country is the United States of America; that flag is the Stars and Stripes.

But they must not be told by those high in the confidence of the present administration that loyalty to the country and to the flag now demands of them that they surrender their political convictions, desert the party of Lincoln, and enroll themselves under the political banner of the Democratic Party. This they will not do.

There is an issue before the country to-day that rises high above party issues and party considerations, and great is the responsibility resting upon Members of Congress at this time. The Nation demands of each of us the very best and most consecrated service of which we are capable. This is no time to seek party advantage. We can not gamble with the dearest interests of the American people by playing party politics here and now. A great Republican once said, "He serves his party best who serves his country best." This is especially true in a great national crisis like the present.

So far as I am concerned I have during the trying days of this special session been guided wholly by my sense of duty to the country, without giving the slightest consideration to what effect my actions here might have upon me personally in the future. I know our cause is just. We are striking in self-defense for the very principles of liberty and democracy upon which the Government is founded. Our future liberty, our future peace and security as a great people, are at stake in the conflict. This will not be a good world to leave for our children to live in if autocracy wins the war, and if the doctrine that solemn treaties between nations are "mere scraps of paper," and the doctrine that "necessity knows no law" should by brutal force and frightfulness become established as the rule of the world.

I thank God I represent upon this floor a loyal constituency, a constituency that would disown me if I faltered in my support of the Government or in my allegiance to the flag of our fathers; a constituency that would despise me if I should pay them so poor a compliment as to assume that I could win their applause and hold their confidence by a course of disloyalty as their Representative here in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

LAND LAWS—MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the committee, and to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 2918 for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The order of the House was that after the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] was to have 15 minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want in any way to impede the ordinary and natural procedure of the House, and as long as there is business pending I shall be glad to withhold my speech.

The SPEAKER. There are two small matters that will take only a very short time.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged, and to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2918) providing that the forfeiture provisions of land laws shall not apply in the case of persons in the military or naval service during the present war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks to discharge the committee from the further consideration of S. 2918, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, from a hurried reading of this bill I should take it to be an exact copy of section 501 of H. R. 6361, to extend protection of civil rights to Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war, which the House passed a day or two ago. Am I correct?

Mr. MAYS. It is not an exact copy; it is in effect the same; but that will not become a law at this session. This bill ought to pass at this session. There is a great desire to have it pass this session, because of the fact that the soldiers now going into the service are very much disturbed. I have here a telegram.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill may be read for the information of the House, still reserving my right to object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2918) providing that the forfeiture provisions of land laws shall not apply in the case of persons in the military and naval service during the present war.

Be it enacted, etc., That no right to hold, occupy, or enter any public land initiated or acquired under any public-land law of the United States by any person in the military or naval service of the United States during the existing war prior to the commencement of his military or naval service shall be lost or forfeited by reason of his absence from the land or of his failure to perform work or make improvements thereon, or do any other act required by the law under which initiated during his service in the present war and until six months thereafter: Provided, That each such claimant shall, within six months after the passage of this act, or within six months after he is mustered into the service, file in the local land office of the district wherein his claim is situated, a description of his claim a notice of his muster into the service of the United States, and of his desire to hold his said claim or claims under this act: Provided further, That during the present war and until his discharge from the service, any person serving in the armed forces of the United States who is a claimant, applicant, or entryman under any of the land laws of the United States, or who has prior to enlistment filed a contest with a view to exercising preference right or entry thereunder, may make any affidavit required by law or regulation of the department affecting such claim before his commanding officer, as provided in section 2293 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to deprive a person in the military or naval service or his heirs or devisees of any rights or benefits to which he or they may be entitled under the public acts of the United States, Sixty-fifth Congress, numbered 32, approved July 28, 1917; numbered 36, approved August 7, 1917; numbered 40, approved August 10, 1917; public resolution, Sixty-fifth Congress, numbered 10, approved July 17, 1917, or any other act or resolution of Congress; nor shall anything herein be construed as abating any contest filed against the claim of any such person prior to his entrance into the military or naval service of the United States for failure to comply with the law prior to such entrance, or as validating or reviving any claim, application, or entry upon or in connection with which such person failed to comply with the applicable law or laws to his entrance into the military or naval service.

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Utah if this bill has been referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, of which he is a member?

Mr. MAYS. My request for unanimous consent embodied the proposition that the committee be discharged.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman conferred with the members of the committee?

Mr. MAYS. Practically all that are in the city.

Mr. MONDELL. Are there any members of the committee here now?

Mr. MAYS. I have seen the chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill deals with a number of matters on which we have already legislated. We have legislated, and there is now on the statute books a law relieving homestead entrymen of the necessity of residence and homestead and desert entrymen of the necessity of doing work on their claims; and further, doing what this bill does not do, as I read it hurriedly, give them the benefit of constructive residence during their military absence. We passed a bill here the other day providing that claimants who had initiated rights to land before they entered the service could make affidavit relating to those lands before their commanding officer.

This bill may be all right, but it is a reenactment, in the main, of legislation now on the statute books. The remainder is a copy of part of a bill that has passed this House.

Mr. MAYS. But it has not passed the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. I know; but until the Committee on the Public Lands has had an opportunity to examine it and see wherein it may conflict with the laws we have already passed, in order that we may know that in attempting to do something more for the entrymen we are not depriving them of rights they already have, I shall have to object.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for me to read a portion of a telegram from the exemption board of my State?

Mr. MONDELL. I will withhold it.

Mr. MAYS. These laws that we have passed do not cover every case that requires consideration. This is from the board of appeals:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, September 19.

Congressman JAS. H. MAYS,
Washington, D. C.:

In a large number of cases of men held to service by this district board has been revealed a condition of indebtedness of a serious nature to the individual suddenly taken from his business. A large number of men who were squatters upon public land are affected. A large number of men developing mining claims are affected, because no provision has been made by the Government to protect their interests. These men entered the service unduly worried, and can not respond as they should. This board feels keenly this situation and regrets that in the exercise of its duty no consideration could be given such condition, and now most respectfully and emphatically urges that Congress enact protective legislation covering such cases of men ordered to service, and asks your best efforts to bring about such legislation before adjournment. Because of its close knowledge of these facts this board feels such legislation is vital to the proper morale of the new Army.

DISTRICT BOARD OF THE STATE OF UTAH,
By P. L. WILLIAMS, Chairman,
LAFAYETTE HANCHETTS, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 27, 1917.

Hon. WM. H. KING,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your request for some comments upon S. 2918, "A bill prohibiting forfeiture of entries on the public lands on account of absence in the military service of the United States," I submit the following:

The bill is similar to H. R. 6179, and I suggest that the title to the latter bill, "Providing that the forfeiture provisions of land laws shall not apply in the case of persons in the military or naval service during the present war," is more descriptive of the contents of the bill than is the caption to the Senate bill.

The first 12 lines of the bill are designed to protect any valid right which a soldier, sailor, marine, or any other person in the military service during the existing war may have initiated prior to his entrance in the service, and it will have the effect of suspending during the war and for six months thereafter any requirements as to residence, improvement, cultivation, application, entry, or any other act required by the law in connection with such a claim.

The acts of Congress cited in lines 20 to 25, page 2, and lines 1 and 2, page 3, protect homestead settlers and entrymen, desert-land entrymen, and relieve from the performance of annual assessment labor upon mining claims those in the military or naval service.

Senate bill 2918, in addition, would protect those in the military or naval service who have the following classes of claims:

Those persons in the military or naval service who had, prior to entering same, initiated desert claims upon unsurveyed lands, act of March 28, 1908 (35 Stat., 52); coal claims initiated under coal-declaratory statements (sec. 2348, Rev. Stat.); water-power permits acquired under the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790); reservoir and canal rights of way acquired under the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1095); preemption claims on the former Ute lands in western Colorado and the Bitter Root Valley, Mont., in which areas the old preemption law is still operative; Indian lands entered or purchased and upon which payment of annual installments of purchase money are required by existing law; mining claims upon the Shoshone ceded lands upon which entries are required within five years from date of location (see act of Feb. 25, 1909; 35 Stat., 650).

The proviso beginning on page 1 and concluding on page 2 is regarded as important for the reason that unless provision is made for the filing of a notice of the claim in the land office, the Interior Department will not know of the existence of claims to unsurveyed lands for which entry has not been made. To protect the persons in the military service, as well as to prevent the tying up of lands upon which there are no such claims, it is necessary that some record shall be made as provided in this bill.

The second proviso on page 2 will permit persons in the military or naval service to exercise preference rights secured through contest or to complete their entries or filings by making necessary affidavits before commanding officers, as provided in section 2293, Revised Statutes.

The provisions on page 3, lines 3 to 10, are deemed advisable in order that the bill may not protect fraudulent or invalid claims against which contests have been filed prior to defendant's entering into the military or naval service, and to prevent the reviving of any claims canceled or abandoned prior to that time.

Very truly, yours,

_____,
Member, Board of Appeals.

DISTRICT EXEMPTION BOARD,
Salt Lake City, Utah
(Care of Lafayette Hanchett):

Your telegram received. Legislation is enacted and in process of enactment designed to protect enlisted and selected men. Will urge its passage this session.

JAS. H. MAYS.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1917.

DISTRICT BOARD OF EXEMPTION,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

GENTLEMEN: In response to your suggestion I have introduced a bill in the House of Representatives, as per attached copy, designed to relieve enlisted and selected men who may be occupants upon public land.

The Interior Department believes this bill will cover all possible cases.

There is a bill pending, introduced by Senator CHAMBERLAIN, which will grant relief as per your suggestion, with respect to contractual and other obligations due from such enlisted and selected men. The Senator thinks the bill will pass this session.

We have already enacted legislation exempting locators of mining claims who may be in the service from doing assessment work.

A bill generally exempting mining claims from assessment work during this year was passed by the House yesterday, and probably will become a law this session.

We believe these various measures will cover all possible cases to which your telegram referred.

If I can be of further service, do not hesitate to call upon me.

Very truly, yours,

_____.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield right there? The gentleman knows that most, if not all, of these classes of claims have been protected. We have protected the miner by relieving him of the necessity of doing assessment work.

Mr. MAYS. We have not done anything to prevent the forfeiture. These men have to perform certain things. Since the telegram was sent we have passed a general exemption law on mining claims. I have a letter, written yesterday, from the Department of the Interior giving a long list of other cases to cover. The gentleman referred to the bill that passed a day or two ago, called the civil-rights bill, which embodies this idea?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and also the Timberlake bill.

Mr. MAYS. That did not cover forfeiture.

Mr. MONDELL. It protected them by allowing men to file their affidavits and thus do anything necessary to prevent forfeiture; and prior to that time we passed a bill which not only protected the entrymen and settlers on unsurveyed lands, and applicants under the 640-acre law, relieving the entryman from the necessity of residence on the land, but, in addition to that, giving them the benefit of constructive residence upon the land.

Mr. MAYS. Let me finish the telegram.

Mr. MONDELL. We have been doing things since the party wrote that telegram.

Mr. MAYS. Now, the remedy that is granted through the civil-rights bill will not become a law this session. I will say that the Senator from Utah tells me that he has 50 telegrams asking relief at this session, because of the state of mind of these people. The gentleman himself introduced an amendment on the civil-rights bill which, in my judgment, at the time will cover just this, but his amendment will not become a law at this session.

The Senate has to-day passed this bill, and we are asking that it be considered at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, let me make my position clear. The various laws that we have passed do protect in one way or another every class of land-claimant entryman in the service during his military service. It is true that this bill, in the portion that is copied from the civil-rights bill, holds all sorts of action against him in abeyance, so that it might not be necessary for him in a certain limited class of cases, as it may be now, to make affidavits while in the service in order to protect his rights; but we have practically covered the ground, with possibly a very limited number of comparatively unimportant exceptions. The Senator from Utah has gathered together some legislation that has already been enacted and some of the provisions contained in the civil-rights bill, that may not be enacted this session, and has put them into a new bill. I am not prepared to say that this bill, thus gathered together from laws that we have enacted or from proposals of legislation that has passed the House, may not be of some benefit; but without careful examination no man on the floor can tell what effect it may have on other and further provisions of recent legislation giving homestead settlers the benefit of constructive residence during the time of their service. The gentlemen said that he had referred this matter to certain members of the Committee on Public Lands. There is at least one member of the Committee on Public Lands on this side, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who says that he has not seen the bill. The matter is too important to be taken up now without anyone having read the bill, conflicting as it may with legislation that we have passed after careful consideration, and have the House pass it by unanimous consent, without opportunity for comparison and full consideration.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to a few matters?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I know that we could talk about this at length; but let me suggest to the gentleman that for the time being he withdraw his request and get his committee together, get the laws that we have passed on these subjects, examine them all in connection with this legislation, and then, if the members of the committee who are in the city believe the legislation will aid some cases we have not provided for and should be enacted, I shall not object; I shall be very glad to help. I think, however, it would be exceedingly dangerous in the last day of the session, without any consideration, to pass a bill that may jeopardize rights and privileges heretofore granted.

Mr. MAYS. I have no objection to doing that.

Mr. MONDELL. It would be very dangerous to bring in a bill that legislates upon subjects on which we have already legislated in a different way, without careful examination, which I can not have now.

Mr. MAYS. If the gentleman will permit one second, I am doing this at the request of the chairman of the committee himself, who is leaving the city. So many of the gentlemen were leaving the city that he said we would talk about it informally, and see if there was any objection to it. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] did not happen to be in the Chamber at the time, but I have seen a majority of the Committee on Public Lands. They considered the same idea the gentleman referred to in committee, and they passed it favorably. The idea here is to grant this relief at this time, rather than to wait until some future session.

Mr. MONDELL. The question is whether, assuming to grant relief in this bill, you do not by inference repeal legislation already enacted, and particularly legislation, and most important legislation from the standpoint of the gentleman's constituents, which gives the benefit of constructive residence during his service in the Army to a homesteader.

Mr. MAYS. I have no objection to getting those together whom we can who are on the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. I am fairly familiar with this class of legislation.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman introduced an amendment himself embodying the idea of it.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that this is all adopted from other legislation and legislative proposals.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to one matter.

Mr. MONDELL. To take up now, without examination by the committee, a piece of legislation which covers ground covered by three or four bills that we have heretofore passed, without an opportunity to consider the bill carefully, may result in repealing or affecting the best legislation that we have already enacted.

Mr. MAYS. I would say in explanation of this bill that upon receipt of this telegram from the district exemption board of my State I asked the Interior Department to report whether or not there were certain parties who should be protected who were going into the military and naval service who had not been protected, and the department said that they would report later in the day; they would have their attorney look it up carefully. This bill was drawn by the Interior Department to cover cases that had not been covered and matter that should be urgently considered and which is in no wise in conflict with the legislation already passed. It carries out the idea that the gentleman had in his amendment, and it carries out the idea of our section 501 in the civil rights bill. But that legislation will not become a law, I am advised, at this session.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me say to my friend I know he is just as anxious to have this legislation in perfect form as I am, and it is just as important for his people as for mine.

Mr. MAYS. I am willing to let it go over.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will withhold the request until the members of the committee can examine it——

Mr. MAYS. It will have to be done to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. It can be done the first thing to-morrow morning.

Mr. MAYS. I am perfectly willing to bring it up again. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the time being.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request.

PRINTING OF HOUSE REPORT NO. 169, ETC.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 170.

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of House Report No. 169, first session, Sixty-fifth Congress, and 10,000 copies of the act authorizing national banks to issue their notes in denominations of $1 and $2 be printed, 2,000 of which shall be delivered to the folding room and 8,000 to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

EXTRA MONTH'S PAY TO OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 15th day of September, 1917, including the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether the gentleman has advised the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of his intention to submit this resolution?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, if I were to submit myself to a rule of that kind lots of meritorious bills would never get through this House, and we really ought to be able to handle this proposition and do justice and fairness to the employees and officials of the two Houses without consulting the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the chairman of any other committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I took the liberty of asking, in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], whether the gentleman had submitted him this resolution granting an extra month's pay to the employees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would a motion be in order to suspend the rules and pass the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Not now. Whenever the Senate passes the adjournment resolution then a motion to suspend the rules would be in order; but I understand they are in a row over there and there is no telling when they will pass it. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

BARNARD STATUE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I send the following resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to use his good offices to prevent the shipment from the United States to England of the George Grey Barnard statue of Abraham Lincoln, which it is proposed to set up in London as a gift to the people of England.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the fame of Abraham Lincoln is, of course, secure as one of the great figures not only in the history of the United States, but in the world's history. From one point of view, it makes very little difference to us in the United States, who know his achievements and his character, what is thought of him in the other countries of the world. And yet I think it is a matter of proper and natural pride when we find to what an extent, and to what an increasing extent, the memory of Abraham Lincoln is revered in the countries across the sea. It is a source of legitimate pleasure when we read that the prime minister of England, in a recent very important address upon the purposes of the allies in this war, found that he could do no better in summing up than to quote the words of Abraham Lincoln, uttered at the time of the Civil War.

We accepted the war—

Said Lincoln, as quoted by Lloyd-George—for an object, a worthy object. The war will end when that object is attained. Under God, I hope it will never end until that time.

About eight years ago an organization was formed on this side of the Atlantic and on the other side of the Atlantic known in the one case as the American Centenary Committee and in the other as the British Empire Centenary Committee.

These two committees were formed to act in cooperation and to make plans for a fitting commemoration of the 100 years of peace between the United States and Great Britain. Doubtless many of the Members present who were Members of the Sixty-third Congress will recall that they allowed the use of their names as members of an honorary committee composed of men in public life, which was formed to participate in the arrangements and in the celebration.

When the great war broke out in 1914 it was found that the plans of the committees could not proceed to advantage or the celebration be held. And so the program was radically changed. It was arranged to substitute a plan which involved the dedication of suitable memorials to the great men of the two countries. The British committee, which became known as the Sulgrave Institution, purchased the manor house at Sulgrave, England, the home of that branch of the Washington family to which George Washington belonged, and made it a gift, and certainly a most welcome and appropriate gift, to the American people. The American committee conceived the laudable purpose of securing a sum of money with which could be purchased and erected in Great Britain a statue of Abraham Lincoln. An American sculptor of note, George Grey Barnard, was already at that time at work upon a statue of Lincoln, which was to be set up in the city of Cincinnati.

Through private benefaction it was arranged that he should prepare a replica of that Cincinnati statue, and that that replica should be sent across the sea and erected in London. That plan has progressed, until now, as I am informed, the replica is actually boxed and awaiting shipment to the other side. Those of you who are familiar with London will remember that as you go down from Trafalgar Square through Whitehall, and on through Parliament Street, you finally come to a point where on your left-hand side are the Houses of Parliament and on the right-hand side is Westminster Abbey. That point is the precise location where this statue is to be erected—probably the most conspicuous, honorable, and historic site in the whole of Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker, of course we are all proud that the United States and Great Britain are by joint and harmonious action to erect in such a historic spot a statue of Abraham Lincoln. But then comes the question, and the inevitable and proper question, what kind of a statue it is to be. Some of you may have seen the original statue, which is now erected in Cincinnati. I have in my hand a reproduction which appeared in the Literary Digest for January 6, 1917. Those of you who are in the front rows may be able to examine the details of the statue. I want to call your attention to the fact that in the type just beneath the picture are the words "Copyrighted by George Grey Barnard."

George Grey Barnard is the sculptor of this original statue, and, as a consequence, the sculptor of the replica which is to go to Great Britain. It is fair to infer from the fact that that photograph appears in the Literary Digest, bearing the inscription "Copyrighted by George Grey Barnard," that it represents—in his opinion, at least—a reasonably satisfactory reproduction, by which the public may get an accurate impression as to the merits of the statue. There are other photographs to which I will call the attention of the House. One of them appeared in the Literary Digest of February 10. Others appear in the June and August issues of the Art World.

I desire to call your attention to some things about the statue. In the first place, there is absolutely no trace of the grandeur and the repose and the power and the mentality in the face of the statue that we associate, and I believe associate properly, with the memory of Abraham Lincoln. When you look at the elongated neck you are inevitably reminded of the picture of Alice in Wonderland after she ate the wrong piece of cake. [Laughter.] If it be suggested that the Literary Digest photograph of this statue—which, by the way, is more than twice life size and stands on its pedestal 25 feet high—is unfair to the original in that, being taken by a camera at its base, it foreshortens and brings out of focus the upper portions, I remind you that every observer will see the statue from the height and location from which the photograph was taken. I am quite willing to predicate my remarks on any reproduction which may be submitted.

Mr. SLOAN. I understand there is such a statue in Cincinnati?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. It is the replica which it is proposed to send over to Great Britain.

Mr. SLOAN. I wonder that Brother LONGWORTH and Dr. FESS have allowed a statue of that kind—if that is the true representation—to stand in Cincinnati. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. Of course, if Cincinnati wants that kind of a statue, that is the kind of a statue it wants. But I think the whole American people, and not merely the people of Cincinnati, must interest themselves in the type of statue of Lincoln which shall go across the ocean to represent the United States for all time between Westminster Abbey and the House of Parliament.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. George Grey Barnard is a sculptor and artist of world-wide reputation. I was wondering whether the resolution the gentleman has offered has had the consideration of other artists or is the gentleman's own?

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will allow me to proceed for a few minutes I hope to demonstrate to him that I am not going off half-cocked, and that I am not alone in my opinion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may be right in his criticism. I do not know. I have read somewhere in the newspapers, however, that some artists were complaining of this particular replica. I say that only in fairness to the sculptor, who I understand has done some very exceptional work.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Barnard is a Pennsylvanian, is he not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; born in Bellefonte.

Mr. ROGERS. He designed, I think, some of the statuary in the capitol at Harrisburg?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I believe he did some of that work in France. I am not, however, particularly familiar with his work, but I know he is a sculptor of wide reputation.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me continue my analysis. The neck sticks up like that of a crane.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am sorry to say that the necks of some of the rest of us do that. [Laughter.] Will the gentleman let me see that picture?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly. The Adam's apple is easily the most noticeable feature—if an Adam's apple can be called a feature. Lincoln's arms are crossing himself at the middle as if he was suffering the most violent internal pain. [Laughter.] Perhaps he awaits an ambulance to take him to the operating table. He is wearing great shapeless boots like canal boats. His clothes are shabby and ill-fitting, and give the figure a slouchy and slovenly appearance. As a whole—I think it is fair and conservative to say—the statue looks rather simian than human, and certainly is not one that we like to think of as characteristic of Abraham Lincoln. It is a libelous and grotesque monstrosity.

I want to be entirely fair to Mr. Barnard, who is a sculptor of great ability and distinction. I will quote what seems to be an authentic interview with him, which appeared in the Philadelphia North American of November 19, 1916. In that interview he said, "I wanted to show the man's soul through his face and hands and feet."

If you will look at these great, awkward, skeletonlike hands, large as hams, crossing at his waist, I do not think you will feel that there is very much soul shown through them. If you will look at the misshapen, ugly, comic-cartoonist feet, I do not think you will find that there is much soul there—spelled "s-o-u-l"; although at least two very conspicuous soles. [Laughter.]

How did the sculptor get the impression of Lincoln upon which he drew? Here is what he says:

> I traveled through the States, North and South, East and West. I advertised and went personally to look at many men. At last, in Louisville, Ky., after a great number had come to me, I found the one I wanted. He was 6 feet 4¼ inches and realized as nearly as any other being conceivably could all that we know of Lincoln's appearance. I asked him about himself, and he gave this curious account:
> "I was born on a farm only 15 miles from where Lincoln was born. My father, my father's father, and his father were all born there. * * * I have been splitting rails all my life."

So that the basis for the model which Mr. Barnard used was a man combining three qualifications: He was 6 feet 4 inches tall, as Lincoln was; he was born 15 miles from where Lincoln was born, an obvious essential; and he had split rails all his life. Thereupon, as if conceived by magic, came the inevitable model of Abraham Lincoln. [Laughter.]

How did he get the clothing and shoes of Abraham Lincoln? Again, I quote from the interview in the Philadelphia North American, which tells us that the sculptor "wanted to show the man's soul through his face and hands and feet":

> To complete the circle he got an old-time broadcloth frock suit, which had served as a wedding garment in Illinois in the early sixties, and from the very county in Kentucky where the martyred President was born a pair of just such shoes as men of his position wore about the middle of the last century.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if he has any objection to my including in the RECORD at the close of his remarks a sketch of George Grey Barnard?

Mr. ROGERS. None whatever.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has the gentleman ever seen the statue in front of the old courthouse in this city, something similar to the statue that the gentleman is talking about? And does the gentleman recognize any resemblance to that?

Mr. ROGERS. No; and I do not recognize any marked resemblance between this statue and the wonderful St. Gaudens's statue in Chicago.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That has been recognized down there as not being of sufficient likeness to the martyred President.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I have absolutely no personal grievance in this matter. I do not know Mr. Barnard. I only know him through his work. I know that he is a sculptor of unusual distinction. I do not enjoy criticizing his work. I wish it were unnecessary.

But even if he is a sculptor of distinction, in an international matter of this kind the American people have the right to consider whether his notion of Abraham Lincoln, or the truth, shall prevail and shall serve as the basis for a monument which is to stand in Great Britain for all time.

Let us see what the facts are about the personal appearance of Abraham Lincoln. I hold in my hand the particular volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica—which, as you all know, is an English work—which contains the life of Abraham Lincoln. The publishers of the Encyclopædia Britannica came to America in order to secure the best possible author of their sketch of the life of Abraham Lincoln. They selected John G. Nicolay, Lincoln's private secretary and biographer. Here is what he says about Abraham Lincoln; and if you please I want you to consider, as I read, whether they square with the picture in the Literary Digest which I have just shown to the House:

President Lincoln was of unusual stature, 6 feet 4 inches, and of spare but muscular build. He had been in youth remarkably strong and skillful in the athletic games of the frontier, where, however, his popularity and recognized impartiality oftener made him an umpire than a champion.

Now mark this—

He had regular and prepossessing features; dark complexion; broad high forehead; prominent cheek bones; gray deep-set eyes; and bushy black hair, turning to gray at the time of his death.

"He had regular and prepossessing features." That is the assertion of the man who was for years the intimate and trusted friend of Abraham Lincoln. The Milwaukee Sentinel has taken a keen interest in this Barnard statue of Lincoln, and has taken the trouble to get the consensus of opinion of living men who knew Lincoln as to whether this statue is an accurate portrayal. Here is what the Milwaukee Sentinel has to say:

The question arises, Is it realism at all? Is it a faithful presentment in bronze of the real Lincoln? That question is still fairly capable of settlement. There are entirely credible and competent witnesses now living who knew Lincoln in the flesh and remember perfectly well how he looked—no difficult thing, for "Old Abe" was a striking figure that, once seen, was never forgotten.

We have tried this test, by submitting to some who knew Lincoln in life the appalling photographic cut of the production which is supposed to perpetuate for Cincinnatians the appearance of Lincoln. The consensus of usually indignant testimony is that it is fearfully and wonderfully unlike Lincoln as they knew him.

The sculptor seems to have evolved his conception of Lincoln out of his inner consciousness, though he states that he was greatly assisted by contemplating a man he met in Louisville, who was 6 feet 4½ inches tall, who was born not far from Lincoln's birthplace, and who had been splitting rails all his life.

The finished artistic result of these processes is one that, so far as our own inquiries go, is calculated to stir to wrath and resentment those who knew Mr. Lincoln in life and must be admitted to be competent witnesses as to his personal appearance.

It is perfectly possible to combine good art with a respectable degree of verisimilitude in these productions. If we are going to have statues of Lincoln, a decent respect for the memory of "Old Abe" seems to require that they resemble him, and are not freaks of fancy that with a few alterations might do duty as figures of Ichabod Crane or Dominie Sampson or St. Simeon Stylites on his penitential pillar.

I do not suppose that there can be higher or more credible testimony than that of the son of Abraham Lincoln, Mr. Robert T. Lincoln, now living in the city of Washington. Mr. Lincoln has gone on record in a public protest against this statue of his father. With the permission of the House, I will quote two letters from him on this subject:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 22, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am writing to ask your consideration of a matter which is giving me great concern and to bespeak such assistance as you feel able to give me.

When I first learned through the newspapers that your brother, Charles P. Taft, had caused to be made a large statue of my father for presentation to the city of Cincinnati I very naturally most gratefully appreciated the sentiment which moved him to do this; when, however, the statue was exhibited early this winter I was deeply grieved by the result of the commission which Mr. Taft had given to Mr. Barnard. I could not understand, and still do not understand, any rational basis for such a work as he has produced. I have seen some of the newspaper publications inspired by him, one of which, printed in the North American, of Philadelphia, in November, and another in the Literary Digest for January 6 last, attempt to make explanations which are anything but satisfactory, to me at least. He indicates, if I can understand him, that he scorned the use of the many existing photographs of President Lincoln and took as a model for his figure a man chosen by him, for the curious artistic reasons that he was 6 feet 4½ inches in height, was born on a farm 15 miles from where Lincoln was born, was about 40 years of age, and had been splitting rails all his life.

The result is a monstrous figure, which is grotesque as a likeness of President Lincoln, and defamatory as an effigy.

I understand that the completed statue has gone to Cincinnati to be placed. As to that I have nothing more to say, but I am horrified to learn just now that arrangements are being made for a statue of President Lincoln by the same artist, and, I assume, of a similar character, to be presented for location, one in London and one in Paris. I understand also that these statues are to be gifts by Mr. Taft. I do not think I have ever had the pleasure of meeting him, and I am therefore venturing to beg you, on my account, to intercede with him and, if possible, to induce him to abandon this purpose, if it is true that he has it in mind. I should, of course, have filial pride in having a good statue of my father in London and in Paris, of a character like the two great statues of him made by Augustus Saint-Gaudens, and that which I have good reason to expect in the Lincoln Memorial, now being modeled by Daniel Chester French. That my father should be represented in those two great cities by such a work as that of which I am writing to you would be a cause of sorrow to me personally, the greatness of which I will not attempt to describe.

Believe me, my dear Mr. President, always

Sincerely, yours,

(Signed) ROBERT LINCOLN.

The Hon. WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT.

HILDENE, MANCHESTER, VT., September 16, 1917.

F. WELLINGTON RUCKSTUHL, Esq.,
Editor of the Art World, New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. RUCKSTUHL: In reply to your suggestion that I should send you for publication a letter of protest against the erection in London and in Paris of the Bernard statue of my father, I find myself in difficulty, owing to the vigor and fullness of your own articles in the June and August issues of the Art World. I have already expressed to you my deep sense of gratification that you have so earnestly dealt with this miserable affair, from both artistic and public points of view, and I can think of nothing to add in those regards. But, as you did not know my own personal feeling and opinion when you kindly sent me your published articles, and think that there are others who might care to know them, I am sending you a copy of a letter written by me to President Taft as soon as I heard of the London and Paris projects; I send also copies of letters giving the views of three gentlemen peculiarly able to express a personal opinion for reasons I indicate in notes appended to the copies. These you are at liberty to use as you may think proper. Renewing my thanks to you for the helpful part you are taking in my efforts, believe me,

Very sincerely, yours,

(Signed) ROBERT LINCOLN.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, this protest of Mr. Robert T. Lincoln should be decisive, even if the case against the statue were not as strong as it is. Lincoln was not an ugly or repulsive man. He was a plain man. Perhaps he might even be called a homely man, in the best sense of that term. There was far more than mere beauty in his face. I have made it a point to talk with a number of men who knew Lincoln personally and who remember how he looked. Their impression was always one of dignity and high-minded intellectuality—the exact opposite of the impression that one extracts from the statue as portrayed in the picture to which I have referred.

Mr. George H. Story, who is still living at the age of 82, painted a portrait of Abraham Lincoln shortly after Lincoln went to the White House. I have called attention to the size of the hands and feet in the Barnard statue, and I have called attention also to the fact that this sculptor seems to be proud of the size and shape and appearance of the hands and the feet. I desire to read what Mr. Story said, in an entry in his diary made in 1861, of Lincoln's hands and feet. I do not say that this is the most important thing about the statue or that we ought to lay too great stress upon it, but I use it simply as indicating the unfairness of the statue and the lack of fidelity to life which I believe prevails throughout the whole work:

Mr. Story says:

Hands and feet appear rather small for a man of his size; his feet are in fine, close-fitting calfskin boots; his clothes are of the finest broadcloth and well fitting.

Abraham Lincoln was essentially a man of dignity. He knew the responsibilities and the proprieties of his great office. He lived the part. This statue shows him with a soft collar which does not rise above the level of the neckland; one point is tucked down in some way under the coat collar, and the other point raised above it, flying off as if pursued by a strong wind. Did he ever wear such a collar after he left the haunts of the frontiersman?

The question is, What shall be done? Great Britain is powerless to protest. She can not look a gift horse in the mouth, and especially can she look a gift horse in the mouth at this particular time. The question is whether the United States shall act. I do not suppose it is a natural thing for the Congress to legislate upon a matter of this sort. But this statue, which is a grotesque and distorted and defamatory caricature of Lincoln, is soon to go across the water unless it can be stopped. In my judgment it is a calamity to the American people, and not only to the American people but to the English people, to have it stand for all time before the walls of Westminster Abbey. In my resolution I call upon the President to prevent the shipment of this statue. Standing 25 feet high, it will be one of the most conspicuous as well as one of the most hideous objects in London.

A mere suggestion from the President would stop the shipment. The gentlemen who are presenting it and sending it are patriotic Americans. They do not want to fly in the face of the well-considered judgment of the American people. In a time of war, when so many other things of greater importance are engaging the attention of the American people, we are not thinking of these things unless our attention is specifically directed to them. I am sure that a single word from the President of the United States to the patriotic and high-minded sponsors of the gift, whose sole purpose is to perform a generous and public-spirited act and to cement the friendship between the United States and Great Britain would be sufficient. In my resolution I am calling on the President to speak that single word. [Applause.]

Let us have no statue if we can not have the best statue. Far better, rather than to have an inferior and unworthy and even cruel thing, to ask the people of Great Britain to remember the great American by recalling the words of the manly apology made by their own famous Punch on hearing of the martyrdom of the Emancipator:

Beside this corpse that bears for winding sheet
The Stars and Stripes he lived to rear anew;
Between the mourners at his head and feet,
Say, scurrile jester, is there room for you?
Yes; he had lived to shame me from my sneer,
To tame my pencil and confute my pen;
To make me own this hind of prince's peer—
This rail splitter, a true-born king of men.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend at this point a sketch of the artist who has been referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of Senate joint resolution 89, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes, and for its consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from further consideration of Senate joint resolution 89, and for its present consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes.

Resolved, etc., That in order to provide for immediate and necessary drainage of lands in the Rio Grande reclamation project, New Mexico and Texas, the provisions of the sundry civil act, approved June 12, 1917, so far as applicable to said project, are hereby modified and amended so as to authorize and permit the Secretary of the Interior to expend not exceeding $15,000 in drainage work upon that portion of the project located within the State of New Mexico pending the formation of an irrigation district covering the lands within New Mexico under this project, and to expend upon that portion of the project located within the State of Texas such amount, within the limit of available appropriations, as the existing irrigation district may obligate itself to repay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York to tell the House what this is about and about how much money it will cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in the sundry civil appropriation act for the current year there was a limitation placed on the expenditure of funds for the Rio Grande reclamation project for drainage purposes, under which, unless drainage districts were formed under State laws and the districts contracted with the Reclamation Service to assume the burden of the cost of drainage, money could not be expended for such purpose. That limitation was placed on the appropriation bill at the request of the Reclamation Service.

Since that time conditions on the Rio Grande project in certain portions of New Mexico and Texas have become such that unless money be immediately expended to overcome the rising ground water very considerable damage will be done to crops now in the ground.

In New Mexico an irrigation district is in process of formation. The necessary steps to be taken, together with the negotiations with the Reclamation Service officials, require a very considerable period of time. It is requested that the service be permitted to expend $15,000 in that district in anticipation of the formation of the district.

In Texas there is a somewhat different situation. On that portion of the project in Texas there is a water-users' association, which is a corporation under contract with the service to bear the cost of construction.

The Reclamation Service desired that an irrigation district, which is a municipal corporation, be formed, and that a new contract be entered into with it to assume the entire cost of construction and drainage. Under the constitution of the State of Texas, however, an irrigation district can not assume a liability for drainage in excess of 25 per cent of the value of the property, so that it has been found necessary, instead of creating this new corporation, to assume all of the liability, to continue the water-users' association, with the liability for the construction charges, and to organize the drainage districts, to assume the drainage charges. The matter has been investigated by the Reclamation Service, and the Secretary of the Interior, the Director of the Reclamation Service, and counsel for the Reclamation Service recommend that this action be taken. The Committee on Appropriations has been engaged since this bill came from the Senate on the 28th of September in connection with the deficiency appropriation bill, and has been unable to consider the bill. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who is very conversant with all of the reclamation matters, and myself took the matter up with the Reclamation Service officials and went into it thoroughly. We are satisfied that not only will the charges be assumed and expenditures be repaid under the contracts which will be made, but that unless action be taken at this time to enable the Reclamation Service to undertake the work at once damage of a very extraordinary character will result.

Mr. MADDEN. The original contract contemplated the payment in the first instance by the private parties, and now the Government of the United States is to assume the responsibility and advance the money?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The Government is building those reclamation projects, and the lands affected come in under an agreement to bear the cost. A dispute arose on this project as to whether the cost of doing drainage work should be added to the construction cost or should be defrayed under the reclamation fund, without repayment. It was because of that condition that the department itself requested this limitation be placed upon its ability to expend money for drainage purposes unless those districts were created and the burden assumed. The department, in the New Mexico portion of the project, because public notice has not yet been issued which fixes the cost to the individual landowners of the project, is able, even if the irrigation district should not contract to assume the burden, to include it in the construction costs; and in the Texas situation the organization of the irrigation district under the Texas law will unquestionably take care of the additional burden in that way.

Mr. MADDEN. They will have the power under the terms of their organization to levy assessments against the owners of the property, so that they may be able to reimburse the Government of the United States?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and it makes a contract by which the expenditure becomes a first lien upon the land.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Republican support of the war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a conference committee is ready to report and that the Senate is waiting, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that I be given leave to address the House to-morrow morning for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WINGO). The gentleman from New York asks leave to address the House for not to exceed 20 minutes to-morrow, not to interfere with conference reports or other privileged matters. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a conference report, notwithstanding the rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The conference report was read.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 197).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13, 15, 19, 25, 26, 33, 60, 92, 105, and 106.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 103, 104, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 118, and 119, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "cohabitation," at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "Provided further, That for the purpose of the administration of Article II of this act marriage shall be conclusively presumed, in the absence of proof, that there is a legal spouse living, if the man and woman have lived together in the openly acknowledged relation of husband and wife during the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of war, or the date of enlistment or of entrance into or employment in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States if subsequent to such declaration"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: ", and if such child, if born after December 31, 1917, shall have been born in the United States, or in its insular possessions"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 24. That the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, so far as practicable, shall upon request furnish information to and act for persons in the military or naval service, with respect to any contracts of insurance, whether with the Government or otherwise, as may be prescribed by regulations. Said bureau may upon request procure from and keep a record of the amount and kind of insurance held by every commissioned and appointive officer and of every enlisted man in the military or naval service of the United States, including the name and principal place of business of the company, society, or organization in which such insurance is held, the date of the policy, amount of premium, name and relationship of the beneficiary, and such other data as may be deemed of service in protecting the interests of the insured and beneficiaries."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert "five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Not later than five years after the date of the termination of the war as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States, the term insurance shall be converted, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by regulations and as the insured may request. Regulations shall provide for the right to convert into ordinary life, 20-payment life, endowment maturing at age 62 and into other usual forms of insurance and shall prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums thereon, but payments of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 120: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows; In the first line of the amendment proposed by the Senate strike out "406" and insert the figure "3"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the conference report:

On amendment No. 1: Changes the reference to the number of the section.

On amendment No. 2: Limits the construction of section 9 as referring only to the Division of Marine and Seaman's Insurance.

On amendment No. 3: Limits the amount of compensation paid to claim agents and attorneys for services to 10 per cent.

On amendment No. 4: Strikes out the words "so far as practicable," to which the House conferees agreed.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment makes the fees allowed and salaries to be the same as in other departments of the Government for similar services.

On amendment No. 6: The House conferees accepted the Senate amendment in its entirety, but also added in addition thereto the House text, which relates to proof of marriages for the purpose of the administration of Article II.

On amendment No. 7: Changes the word "approval" to "enactment."

On amendment No. 8: Changes the word "act" to "amendatory act."

On amendment No. 9: This amendment provides that the child must be legally adopted before enlistment.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment simply adds a comma after the word "only."

On amendment No. 11: This amendment proposes to insert "instrument in writing signed by."

On amendment No. 12: This amendment fixes the date of birth of child and requires birth in the United States or in its insular possessions.

On amendment No. 13: The Senate conferees receded from this amendment, which defines the term of "wife divorced" as being wife divorced without her fault as the ground or cause of such divorce.

On amendment No. 14: This amendment is simply a correction.

On amendment No. 15: This amendment restores the House text, which defines the age limit of a child.

On amendment No. 16: This amendment changes the language as to "disability."

On amendment No. 17: This amendment eliminates an Army clerk and a field clerk, Quartermaster's Corps, from the definition of the term "commissioned officer."

On amendment No. 18: This amendment includes in the definition of the terms "man and enlisted man" members of training camps authorized by law.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment defines the term "dependent"; and the Senate receded.

On amendment No. 20: Simply inserts the word "amendatory" before the word "act."

On amendment No. 21: The House recedes on amendment No. 21, striking out the words "a person mentally incompetent," because it is covered in amendment No. 22, disagreement to which the House also recedes.

On amendment No. 23: The House recedes on this amendment, as the language substituted by the Senate more clearly defines the party to whom payment shall be made.

On amendment No. 24: The Senate recedes from its amendment striking out section 24, and agrees thereto with an amendment inserting the words "on request" after the word "shall," in line 10; and also with amendments striking out the word "shall," in line 14 of the same section, and inserting the words "may on request."

On amendments Nos. 25 and 26: The Senate recedes from its amendments 25 and 26, which are only corrections.

On amendment No. 27: This amendment provides that allotment shall be made only to former wife divorced to whom alimony has been decreed; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 28: Adds the word "decree" after the court order.

On amendment No. 29: Inserts the word "written" before the word "agreement"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 30: This amendment defines what illegitimate child the father must contribute to, and further provides that where it has been judicially ordered that it shall not be beyond the amount decreed by the court; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 31: This amendment strikes out the words "his next of kin" and inserts in lieu thereof the words "the person or persons who would under the laws of the State of his residence be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 32: Strikes out the words "declaration of war" and inserts in lieu thereof "November 1, 1917"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 33: This amendment limits the payment of family allowances for members of class A and to those dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 34: This amendment relates to alimony when decreed to the wife; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 35: This amendment inserts the word "decree"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 36: This amendment inserts the word "written" after the word "agreement"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 37: This amendment relates to an illegitimate child to whose support the father has been judicially ordered or decreed to contribute, and the amount of the allotment shall not exceed the amount fixed in the order or decree; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 38: This amendment relates to the allotment under class B; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 39: This amendment simply changes the word "amendment" to "amendatory act"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 40: This amendment proposes to strike out "a wife, including a former wife divorced, and the children not in her custody, and as between children," and inserts "the members of class A and as between the members of class B"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 41: This amendment simply changes the language relating to the regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the distribution of allotments and clarifies the language; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 42: This amendment simply inserts the words "on the basis of"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 43: This amendment relates to the certification to the War and Navy Departments with reference to the amount of the allotment to be made by the man; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 44: This amendment strikes out the words "in the course of the service"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 45: This amendment provides that no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by the willful misconduct of the man; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 46: This amendment strikes out the words "from a marriage contracted before or within 10 years after the injury," and is covered in another section of the bill; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 47: This amendment strikes out the word "substantially" before the word "dependent"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 48: This amendment strikes out the words "percentages of his pay" and inserts the word "amounts." This is necessary because the percentage provisions of the bill were stricken out in the House and the word "amounts" inserted in lieu thereof; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 49 to 55, inclusive: These amendments all reduce the rates of compensation as passed by the House; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 56: This amendment strikes out the word "substantially" before the word "dependent" and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 57, 58, and 59: These amendments relate to the payment of burial expenses and return of bodies to homes of men who died before discharge or resignation from the service. The House provision provided for the payment of $100 for burial expenses for men who died after discharge or resignation; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 60: This amendment strikes out "eighteen" and inserts "sixteen"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 61: This amendment strikes out the words "mental or physical infirmity, of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation, then until the marriage or death or until such incapacity ceases," and inserts the words "insane, idiotic, or otherwise being permanently helpless, then during such incapacity"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 62: This amendment simply defines the word "widow" as used in section 301; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 63: This amendment strikes out "so as to make it impracticable for the injured person to pursue any gainful occupation," for the reason that if the injury is total a person could not pursue a gainful occupation; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 64 to 71, inclusive: These amendments reduce the rates for disability resulting from injury and change the lettering of the paragraphs; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 72: This amendment simply changes the lettering of the paragraphs; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 73: This amendment strikes out the word "substantially" before the word "dependent"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 74: This amendment inserts the word "amounts," which is necessary; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 75: This amendment adds to the classification of those permanently disabled the words "those helplessly and permanently bedridden"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 76: This amendment provides that those helplessly and permanently bedridden must be from causes occurring "in the line of duty"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 77: This amendment inserts the word "governmental" before the word "medical"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 78: This amendment inserts the words "with such" before the word "supplies"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 79: This amendment inserts a proviso that nothing in this act shall be construed to effect the necessary military control over any member of the Military or Naval Establishments before he shall have been discharged from the military or naval service, which is admitted to be necessary to avoid any conflict of authority; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 80: This amendment strikes out section 304.

On amendments Nos. 81 and 82: This amendment simply renumbers the sections.

On amendment No. 83: This amendment strikes out section 307, which relates to the definition of the term "pay"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 84, 85, 86, and 87: These amendments simply renumber the sections; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 88: The House recedes, with an amendment changing the time for the occurrence of the disability to 5 years instead of 10 years as inserted by the House and 2 years as inserted by the Senate.

On amendment No. 89: This amendment strikes out "in the course of" before the word "service" and inserts "during the"; and the House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 90 and 91: On these amendments the House recedes with an amendment changing the time for the occurrence of the disability to 5 years instead of 10 years as inserted by the House and 2 years as inserted by the Senate.

On amendment No. 92: This amendment adds after the word "such" the words "minority or"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 93, 94, and 95: These amendments simply change the numbers of the sections; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 96: This amendment strikes out the words "existing pension laws and laws providing for gratuities or payment in the event of death in the service" and inserts the words "the laws providing for gratuities or payment in the event of death in the service and existing pension laws"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 97: This amendment inserts the words "or their widows, children, or their dependents"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 98: This amendment renumbers the section only.

On amendment No. 99: This amendment inserts the word "amendatory" before the word "act"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 100: The House concurred in the amendment.

ARTICLE IV.

On amendment No. 101: This amendment simply inserts the word "permanent" before the word "disability"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 102: Insert the words "and permanently" before the word "disabled."

On amendment No. 103: Insert, after the word "wife," the words "from the time of his death and during her widowhood, or to his"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 104: Insert the words "and permanent" before the word "disability"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 105: Insert the word "dependent" before the word "both"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 106: Insert the word "dependent" before the word "sister"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 107: Insert the words "and permanent" before the word "disability."

On amendment No. 108: Strike out the words "and to such other person as may be provided for from time to time by regulation"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 109: Simply strikes out the word "only"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 110: Insert before the word "installments" the words "240 equal monthly" for the reason that it was desired that these payments should run for a period of 20 years; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 111: Adds the words "dividends from gains and savings," as it is believed the beneficiaries should have the full value of the policy at the time of the death; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 112: Makes the basis of calculation the American Experience of Mortality, with interest at 3½ per cent per annum, and provides further that no deduction shall be made from continuous installments during the life of the insured in case of total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 113: Strike out the words "or as in the regulations"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 114: Adds, after the words "reserve value," the words "if any"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 115: Strikes out the word "policy" and inserts in lieu thereof the words "contracts of insurance"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 116: Inserts after the word "war" the words "and thereafter until converted."

On amendment No. 117: Provides that not later than five years after the close of this war that term insurance shall be converted into other lines of insurance without medical examination, which supersedes the House provision that it could be converted after the war. The House agrees to the Senate amendment with the following amendments: After the word "after" insert the words "the date of the termination of," and after the word "war," in the same line, "as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States."

On amendment No. 118: This amendment simply strikes out the words "And provided further, That no" and inserts before the word "or" the word "no"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 119: Strikes out the words "this act" and inserts the words "the provision of this section"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 120: Adds a new section to the bill, section 3, which provides for the revival of the term "general" in the United States Army and provides for the appointment of the commander of the United States forces now in France to this rank; and provides that the salary of the general shall be $10,000 and the lieutenants general $9,000.

T. W. SIMS,
SAM RAYBURN,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, October 6, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 269) to authorize the advancement of funds to survey, construct, and maintain roads, trails, and bridges within Indian reservations, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 191), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 195) providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Okla., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 192), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3568) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on the 16th day of February, 1903, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 193), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, to which was referred the contested-election case of Beakes v. Bacon, reported the same with the recommendation that Samuel W. Beakes was duly elected, accompanied by a report (No. 194), which said report was referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HASTINGS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1681) to confer upon the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma the authority now conferred by law upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior respecting lands allotted to the enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes and their individual moneys, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 196), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Central Council of Irish County Associations, Boston, Mass., requesting the President of the United States to use his influence in obtaining national independence and self-government for Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, October 6, 1917.

(Legislative day of Friday, October 5, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration and immediate adoption of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 15), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 5723) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the words "of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election," as the same appear on page 30, lines 26 and 27, and lines 1 and 2, on page 31.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state briefly that by mistake when an amendment to an amendment was adopted a part of the same language was included in the amendment to the amendment and left in the amendment to which it was an amendment. So we want to strike it out.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EXPORT OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within three years from the date of entry into the United States, which was to amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within one year from the date of entry into the United States."

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker had appointed Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. GILLETT a committee on the part of the House to join a similar committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the clerk in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, to strike out the words "for premiums in advance," etc.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 162) authorizing the expenditure of money upon lands purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2527. An act authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army;

S. 2531. An act to prevent the publication of inventions by the grant of patents that might be detrimental to the public safety or convey useful information to the enemy, to stimulate invention, and provide adequate protection to owners of patents, and for other purposes;

S. 2663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River;

S. 2916. An act to amend sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, relating to the jurisdiction of the district courts, so as to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State;

S. 2920. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the State of North Carolina two brass cannon, with carriage;

S. 2937. An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta;

S. 2947. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of El Paso, Tex., to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River within or near the city limits of El Paso, Tex., such construction to be made with the consent and cooperation of the Republic of Mexico;

H. R. 5646. An act to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 5648. An act to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5918. An act to authorize the President to organize provisionally as Field Artillery or Infantry and to use as Field Artillery or Infantry during the existing emergency such regiments of Cavalry as he may designate;

S. J. Res. 89. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to expend funds in New Mexico and Texas for drainage purposes; and

S. J. Res. 99. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within one year from the date of entry into the United States.

PETITIONS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I submit resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Texas, which I ask may be inserted in the RECORD.

The resolutions are as follows:

House concurrent resolution 1, Legislature of Texas.

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States in a decision has held to be unconstitutional the law under which the cotton-tax fund was collected by the Federal Government; and

Whereas owing to the great number from whom it was collected and the difficulty of the establishment of the individual rights thereto; and

Whereas the money has remained in the Federal Treasury for half a century unclaimed, and it becomes more and more difficult to establish a claim as time goes by; and

Whereas there are none more worthy or who more truly represent the spirit of the South than those Confederates from whom the taxes were collected and their widows; and

Whereas if the Congress of the United States should appropriate money to repay these taxes, it would enable the survivors of the Confederacy to pass their remaining years in comparative comfort; and

Whereas said veterans and their descendants have proved their loyalty to their country by following the flag under the matchless Joe Wheeler in the Spanish-American War; and

Whereas the hundreds of thousands have responded to the call of the peerless leader Woodrow Wilson to enlist in the cause of their country and fight against Germany; and for one-half of a century have helped to pay the pensions of the Federal soldiers, it is just and right and equitable for the Federal Government to return to these veterans what is rightfully and morally theirs; and believing that the North and the Grand Army of the Republic would indorse this act in justice to the decimated ranks of the gray: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That we request our entire delegation in Congress at Washington to prepare, introduce, and work for the passage of a bill to appropriate "the cotton-tax fund" to the Confederate soldiers, sailors, and their widows, and to order the payment thereof to each Confederate soldier, sailor, and their widows in such monthly allowances as said fund will justify as long as such persons may live; therefore be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of the Texas delegation in Congress and to our great President, Woodrow Wilson, by the secretary of the Senate and the chief clerk of the House of the Texas Legislature.

Adopted by the house on September 25, 1917.

F. O. FIELDS,
Speaker of the House.
T. B. REESE,
Acting Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from sundry citizens of Alpine, Tex., regarding the utterances of certain Senators, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented petition of sundry citizens of Colfax, Wash., relative to the public utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a petition of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Baltimore, Md., relative to the public utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

STREET RAILWAY CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PITTMAN. On behalf of the special committee to investigate street railway conditions in the District of Columbia, I present a report (No. 176) and ask that it be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 93) to consolidate national forest lands (Rept. No. 173);

A bill (S. 95) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska (Rept. No. 174); and

A bill (S. 102) relating to the temporary filling of vacancies occurring in the offices of register and receiver of district land offices (Rept. No. 175).

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 101) to provide further for the national security and defense by insuring to the Government of the United States an adequate supply of paper at a fair price and by insuring a supply and equitable distribution at fair prices to the industries of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 177) thereon.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT (S. DOC. NO. 116).

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. From the Committee on Printing, I report back favorably Senate resolution 147, submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] on the 5th instant, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 147) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "The Official Report of the Second Inauguration of Woodrow Wilson as President of the United States and Thomas R. Marshall as Vice President of the United States, on March 5, 1917," be printed as a Senate document, with accompanying illustrations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2980) to permanently renew patent No. 24917; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 2981) granting a pension to Elizabeth K. Cottman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 2982) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer B. Sims;

A bill (S. 2983) granting a pension to Edward G. Davis; and

A bill (S. 2984) granting an increase of pension to Martha A. Cooper; to the Committee on Pensions.

ADDRESS BY JUDGE W. M. BOND.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a patriotic address delivered by Judge W. M. Bond, of Edenton, N. C., at Lumberton, N. C., on August 30, 1917. I have read the address, and it is a very admirable one by one of the prominent men of North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WAR AND OUR DUTY.

[A patriotic address delivered by Judge W. M. Bond, of Edenton, N. C., at Lumberton, N. C., on the 30th day of August, 1917.]

Judge Bond said:

"With the world veiled in the gloom of war, alike upon its surface, in the skies, and beneath the bosom of its seas, with millions dead and millions perhaps yet to die, with the flower of our manhood preparing to face its destruction, it may be well to speak of existing conditions. Fate has brought us face to face with a distressing situation. It has come uninvited and is not our fault. After our Government was constructed and our independence had been won by success in the Revolution our Nation began its career. In spite of disasters predicted, each closing decade has waved its admiring tribute to her growth and progress, and to-day her flag is respected on every ocean and her voice is heeded in every council of the nations.

"The War of 1812 was fought with England and terminated. About a quarter century later we had war with Mexico. That ended by establishing American sovereignty to the banks of the Rio Grande. In 1861 we had the War between the States. It closed by a settlement of the slavery question and denial of the right of the Southern States to secede from the Union in 1865. From then until our trouble with Spain a few years ago, which ended in liberation of the isle of Cuba, the pearl of the Caribbean Sea, from Spanish cruelty, we had peace until a few months ago. The weapons used in those contests were playthings compared with present-day methods of destruction. During the entire period of her existence no threat has ever been made to blight the liberties of her people; since the dawn of history no government has placed as few burdens on its citizens.

"The framers of this Government believed in America for Americans, and fancied that, with 3,000 miles of ocean on one side and 10,000 on the other, we would sleep with our dreams undisturbed by European or Asiatic complications. Submarine perfection has dissipated that distance and furled those watery curtains of immunity. Dark shadows of assault, with threatened invasion and destruction, have been floated over us and the continued enjoyment of our liberties is threatened.

"We stretched our arms across the Pacific and gathered in the Hawaiian Isles, and went farther over the bosom of that mighty sheet and acquired the Philippines. That move chained our destinies to theirs. We saw ourselves thus drawn into Asiatic policies and questions. Up to now peace has remained undisturbed and we pursued the noiseless tenor of our way.

"We have fought no war with any foreign power that was not to preserve the freedom of the seas, the great highways of nations, and to preserve the rights and liberties of men. We have fought no war with any power that was provided with present-day equipment for conquest and destruction. We have wanted no war and have done nothing to invite it, but we will meet it, regardless of cost, rather than surrender our national honor and lose our self-respect. True Americans can die, but can not live as slaves.

"Based upon the broad fundamental doctrine that man was capable of self-government and upon the further theory that every man should have equality of opportunity to enjoy the blessings of liberty and happiness, our Government has never fired a cannon that did not echo a desire to maintain the rights of men to freedom and liberty. No shackles of slavery can fetter beneath the shadow of our flag.

"Cutting through the heart of Europe and crossing the Asiatic border for years there has existed a great Government whose whole theory of national existence has been founded upon the so-called divine right of certain men to rule by reason of hereditary privilege. That Government is the German Empire, and its idea of ruling has ever been that every man's neck should have upon it the heel of Prussian military despotism. Its sole conception of right is its might, and its sole idea of solemn promises is to violate them whenever violation is to its advantage. Destructive power and brute force have paralyzed its measure of morality.

"Recently we have been forced into war with that great military machine—a nation that has dreamed only of war and conquest, and that has builded the greatest fighting machine the world has ever seen. They desire other monument to bespeak their conquest, as do the statues in Paris draped in mourning silently lament the loss of Alsace and Lorraine.

"With ghoulish glee, as they spoke of England's contemptible little army, we have seen German soldiery laugh at their solemn treaty to respect the integrity of Belgium, calling it a "scrap of paper," invade that happy and historic little country, converting the sites where stood its splendid cities into international cemeteries where to-day sleep the dead soldiers of many nations and many climes. Like a pestilence which walked in the darkness and a destruction that wasted at noonday, they have made graveyards of that historic country which has never done them a wrong.

"We have seen them become the pirate of nations, and by the use of undersea boats sink ships and drown noncombatant men and helpless women and children. The ocean's bottom is to-day strewn with the bones of its victims. We have seen them make desolate happy countries that had done them no wrong, and leave to starvation their former citizens; they have hammered down cathedrals and colleges with their cannon; trained their guns on Red Cross boats; and slaughtered sleeping men, women, and children by dropping dynamite bombs at night, their vengeance writing cruelty that would have brought blushes to the cheek of the Goth, the Vandal, and the Hun, all done while they were marching arm in arm with the unspeakable Turk, and boasting of the culture and civilization of the Rhine. Language must confess its poverty in any attempt to describe the wantonness of their cruelty and to picture the deeds which only barbarians could have imagined. They seem to enjoy it.

"We have seen their representatives in office in our Capital, under the protection of our flag, entering into intrigues to incite Mexico and Japan to make war upon us. We have read of their efforts to incite to rebellion the negroes of the South. They drowned our citizens while asserting their friendship for us. We protested, but the outrages continued unabated. They were making war upon us months before we declared that a state of war existed. Any nation that would submit in its cowardice to such treatment without resistance should be swept from existence. It ought not to live and could not live. Struggle for existence is a basic principle of life. Not an animal roams beneath the forest shades, not a bird flies beneath the summer skies, not a fish cuts his way beneath the bosom of the deep, but must be ever alert to resist efforts aimed at its destruction. So is eternal vigilance the price of liberty with man.

"Staggered by their disregard of size and sex in their efforts to stage a frightfulness at which barbarians would shudder, we wonder if Atilla, the Hun, the scourge of God, would not lie dissatisfied in his grave if he knew how they had surpassed him. Faced with duty of selecting whether we would purchase peace at price of surrendering honor, or whether we would die if necessary to maintain it, we were forced into the war. We are told by some it is not our war, and they pretend not to know what we are fighting for. Only the blind should fail to see, in this panorama of bloodshed and slaughter, a studied effort to float the flag of Prussian domination over every capitol of the globe. Since the close of the Franco-Prussian war not a day has passed without strengthening the German dream for absolute world control. Are we ready for them to have it? Not an allied soldier's blood has crimsoned the snows of the Carpathians, not one died at the forts of Liege, not one fell at the Marne, and not one has fallen on the fields of Belgium and France but whose heart's blood flowed to preserve free government and freedom for man. They were fighting as much for us as for themselves; they died that our descendants, as well as their's, might be free. Is it cowardice, demagoguery, politics, or ignorance which makes any say it is not our war?

"Every American soldier who dies on the battle fields of Europe should have floating over him the inscription:

> "He died that American liberty might live;
> He died to stay the iron hand of Prussian despotism.

"Are we craven descendants of ancestors whose blood was shed for us? Some say, from what motives we do not know, that we have no right to send our soldiers to die in Europe. Appalling as the threatened destruction is, it is astounding that American citizens, descendants of men whose blood on the fields of the Revolution bought the liberties we enjoy, should be weakening the arms of their Government, in a state of actual war, by creating distrust and dissension, and making utterances calculated to destroy loyalty and patriotism and give comfort to the enemies of their country. In the face of the enemy, in a state of war, are not words and conduct calculated to destroy loyalty to our flag in every respect moral treason? No man unwilling to support his flag should be protected by it.

"Many treasonable utterances have been made. From now on let every man make a note of such, by whom spoken, when, and where, and who heard them, so that when the smothered resentment of those whose relatives are facing the struggle shall burst into flame, as it will when the death lists float their harrowing sorrow over us, and then inflamed sentiment demands the punishment of the guilty, we may know who the guilty are. Words spoken which lessen the ardor of our people and embolden the enemy are as much overt acts of treason as would be the killing of American soldiers, because of one's sympathy for Germany. Many now are cavorting with the shaded silhouettes of death. They are sowing the wind; they will reap the whirlwind.

"If this Government has not the power to put its soldiers anywhere to prevent its own destruction, we are indeed a weak Nation, and its Constitution is a rope of sand. The suggestion would seem too childish to merit consideration. To say we had no power to intercept and destroy threatened invaders, but must wait until they get on our soil, and then risk our own destruction it would seem unnecessary to answer.

"I am not without sympathy for the fathers and mothers whose sons must go. Ghastly as may be the reflection. I admit many will go who will never return. I am in position to sympathize. One of my sons is in the Army and has served on the Mexican border and elsewhere for a year. Some morning I expect to hear that he is gone. I have another who will probably be drawn into it in the near future. What their fate is to be I can not know. I can only wait and hope, and 'hope's brightest robes will be broidered with the sable fringe of fear.' Every man owes to his Government the loss of his own life, if that loss is needed to prevent his Government's destruction.

"Every man who does not do his duty strikes a blow at the heart of the land of his birth. We are now at war. It is too late for difference of opinion. The utterance of every man should be:

> "My country, my country, may she ever be right;
> But right or wrong, my country.

"No fancied freedom of speech gives to any man the right to make disloyal remarks after his country is at war. They should stand by the flag.

"It is no time for difference of classes or views. Some complainers say it is a rich man's war. There has been no war in which that statement was not made. It was being said in England, when the sons of wealthy men were falling at the front, while at the same moment workers in munition factories were striking for higher wages. Away with such utterances. For better or for worse we are in it. Except by absolute loss of self-respect we could not stay out. If we have disloyalty in our ranks those possessing it should be silent.

"Instead of calling it Europe's war, in the language of Gen. Wood at Fayetteville, 'we should thank God that we have the trenches of the allies behind which to prepare for the struggle.'

"Let us march shield locked to shield, every man determined to do all he can to prevent the destruction of American liberty, trusting in God for success. The selective draft all must admit is absolutely fair. Each in turn as drawn must go. There is nothing in it open to complaint. Its validity has been adjudged in the Federal court. Who furnished the money to assail it?

"In closing upon this subject a word as to the duty of those who will not be sent to face the cannon and rifles of the battle field: Every person should produce what he can. A starving world appeals to us for food. Hunger stalks abroad to-day over many countries of Europe. It may come here. He who feeds a soldier helps to win the war. Extravagance should be avoided and economy practiced. No waste should be permitted. We must win, or ruin awaits us. Success can not be easily attained. A nation which boils the bodies of its dead soldiers to extract oil with which to run its engines and grinds their bones into fertilizer can not be easly subdued. We must prepare to meet the gloom that death lists will bring to us. We know they are coming. We must prepare to meet the taxation burdens. Will demagogues try to capitalize it?

"Every man whose avarice commands him to make commercial warfare on those who are to go to the front, or on the families and dependents they may leave, should have the eyes of censure riveted upon him. We should live or die together. Cries of greed should be silenced. The tongue of the agitator should be still. Play no politics in gambling with the lives of men. The contest is on between preservation of human liberties, or leaving to our descendants slavery to despotism. It is too late for assertion of individual opinion. Who lends aid and comfort to our enemies in this struggle will himself die a traitor to his native land and a deserter to his family and his descendants. Let every soldier who marches to the front feel that he has behind him the undivided support of every American man and woman. If he dies, he dies for them. They should not desert him. God pity the man who stands not by the flag of his country. That flag, our homes, and our country call. Let us turn no deaf ear to that call.

"Permanent peace for the future should be secured. The right of people to free government should be assured to avoid the shedding of other oceans of blood. The stars of freedom can not be turned backward in their course, nor the hand of autocratic tyranny be lifted higher. It is whispered in the air, 'The world must be made safe for democracy.' On this rock, and on this alone, can the world have assurance of permanent peace. Blood must be shed. Men must die and women suffer to achieve, but its attainment should be the lofty aim of those who feel it is not all of life to live nor all of death to die. We owe to freedom's cause the everlasting destruction of its arch enemy. There can be no security for permanent peace as long as a military giant sleeps in the lap of Europe determined upon world domination. No doves of peace can live surrounded by vultures of destruction. No desire for promotion and no glitter of German gold, nor any other forms of bribery, should swerve us from duty's path. We can not die but once, nor in better cause than to save man's freedom for man.

"President Wilson showed great patience in suffering under the injustices done us. As far as honor would permit, he tried to avoid the conflict. Deploring war and desiring peace, he watched and waited until longer forbearance ceased to be a virtue. The world wondered at us. The Congress declared existence of war. That settled the right and the status of every citizen. The wise occupant of the White House at once threw his matchless energy to complete preparation. He said mankind must be free. History will wrap wreaths of fadeless honor about his brow. He has consecrated his effort to protect humanity. Secretary Daniels, of our State, is the directing head of our Navy. Senator SIMMONS is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. They are now and have been at every step standing side by side with the President. Neither has done any act to weaken, hinder, or embarrass. They have done all in their power to help. Patriotic devotion to their flag has characterized their conduct. The Old North State has grave responsibilities resting upon her. She is not ashamed of her past. Let us preserve her future untarnished.

"There may be some Americans whose conduct should have awarded to them the Kaiser's iron cross for distinguished services rendered. We should not want it, but must prepare lest we meet the fate of crucifixion upon it.

"The great conflict will stagger many of us; to what extent we are not now permitted to know. Determination to do our duty and to take with calm resignation whatever comes should be our aim. We should have faith in the guiding power which shapes our destinies.

"Whether this cyclone of world madness be a part of the great plan of existence or whether it be caused by the weakness of men we may not know; but we can feel assured that the unseen force which from the center of the seas calls the wild waves to quiet and whispers peace to the storm-swept forest can in its own proper time command the stacking of arms and stop the flowing of rivers of blood.

"With duty done and faith in the Guiding Power, we must man the ship of state and pray she may sail on, sail on, while humanity, with its hopes, its fears, its smiles, its tears, is hanging breathless on her fate."

ADDRESS BY HON. GEORGE SUTHERLAND (S. DOC. NO. 119).

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that an address of the president of the American Bar Association, Hon. George Sutherland, of Utah, may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes. Before the question is put I may say that it is not my expectation or desire to ask for final action. My sole purpose is to have the bill made the unfinished business, so that it may be taken up at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will immediately ask that it be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. POMERENE. If that is the desire of the Senate, I shall do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair lays the bill before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be temporarily laid aside.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have prepared an estimate of appropriations and contract authorizations for the Naval Establishment and Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. I ask to have these estimates of expenditures and authorizations printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

MANUFACTURE AND STORAGE OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I rise to a question of the highest privilege, not of personal privilege, but of the privilege of the Senate, and call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on yesterday the signature of the Vice President was appended to the bill H. R. 3932, evidently by an inadvertence, while a motion was pending before the Senate, and undisposed of, for the reconsideration of the vote by which the conference report upon that bill was adopted.

I advise the Senate further of the fact that on Monday, the 1st day of October, a resolution of the Senate was adopted requesting the House to return that bill to the Senate. The request was submitted to the House and by certain proceedings in the House was disposed of without even the courtesy of a reply to the request of the Senate, as I am advised. I shall refer to the proceedings had in the House directly.

The request of the Senate thus being ignored by the House, the bill was presented to the Speaker, signed by him, and returned to the Senate, and, as I am advised, being laid on his desk, was signed by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair make a statement as to his signature to the bill. The Chair has to rely exclusively upon the bills that come to his desk. There is no way the Chair can keep a record of them.

Mr. WALSH. I had not time to inquire how it can be possible for a thing of that kind to occur. I assumed that one of the clerks was charged, as a matter of course, with the duty of seeing that no bills were laid upon the table of the Vice President that had not been finally disposed of by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I know nothing about that. There is no way to keep on my desk a record of the proceedings when bills come to me to be signed.

Mr. WALSH. I assumed that one of the clerks is charged with that duty; but I want to call the attention to the proceedings had in the House on the request made by the Senate for the return of the bill. I read from the RECORD of October 4, as follows——

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped for order.

Mr. WALSH. I assume that it will be of some considerable interest to the Senate to see how its request to the House for the return of a bill was disposed of, without even a reply from that body. I read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
October 1, 1917.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 3932) "to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes," with accompanying conference papers.

Attest:

JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, as I observed the reading of the resolution, it seems to me that is an unusual form of resolution coming from the Senate.

I pause to remark, Mr. President, that I am advised by the clerks and the Secretary of the Senate that the resolution is in the usual and customary form. In fact, the form was drafted by one of the expert clerks of the Senate.

The conference report on this bill was agreed to by the Senate on September 28—

Within the time limited by the rules of the Senate I moved to reconsider the vote by which that conference report was agreed to, and the customary resolution for the recall of the bill was adopted by the Senate as provided by its Rule XIII.

The House agreed to it on September 29. A motion was made to reconsider, and to lay that motion on the table, which was agreed to in the House, and the Clerk of the House reported to the Senate that the House had agreed to the conference report, when it was supposed that that was the end of the matter, and that the bill would be enrolled and presented to the President. The orderly proceeding between the House and the Senate, it seems to me, ought to be such that when a conference report has been agreed to, where no mistake has been made, except such as was remedied by a concurrent resolution here, that ought to be the end of it—

That is to say, I take it, that the distinguished Member of the House whose language I have quoted takes the position that when a conference report has been agreed to in the Senate that ends the matter, and that there is no power in the Senate to reconsider the vote by which such report was agreed to. I do not believe the Senate can afford to have its rules thus interpreted. At least, it should reserve the right to be the sole judge of the signification and application of its own rules.

Such a question has never before been presented to the House or to the Congress of the United States to my knowledge in this way, except where a mistake has been made. It requires unanimous consent to set aside the proceedings of the House, in order that this bill may go back to the Senate and be sent over here as originally agreed to by the Senate with amendments, as this bill has. I do not believe that under those circumstances it is any discourtesy to the Senate that the House should not return these papers, and I think that for the future the Senate ought not to expect the House to return the papers in a case like this.

Further brief discussion, quite irrelevant, I venture to say, followed, resulting in the adoption by the House of a motion that the request of the Senate be laid on the table.

So the papers have not been returned to the Senate except in the manner I have indicated.

It is but just to the House to state that after the motion for the recall of the bill was adopted a concurrent resolution was passed by the Senate directing the enrolling clerk to insert language in the bill which was omitted from the conference report. That went to the House and was nonconcurred in there, but the request of the Senate for the return of the bill remains on the table of the House.

Now just what action the Senate should take to uphold its own dignity in view of the substantial declination of the House either to comply with its request or even to communicate its reason for its refusal may be deferred to be considered at some later day. It is a matter that has no more interest to me than to any other Member of the Senate, and I shall not suggest what action should be taken; but, Mr. President, the Senate certainly should advise the President of the United States that the signature of the Presiding Officer of this body was affixed to the bill inadvertently, so that he may know that it is in fact still pending before and undisposed of by this body. I have accordingly drawn a resolution to that effect.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would like to submit a question to the Senator, if it would not interrupt him disagreeably. Was any reason given by the gentleman in the House, whom I understood the Senator to be quoting from, as to why the action of the Senate in accepting a conference report was not subject to a motion to reconsider, as any other action of the Senate would be?

Mr. WALSH. I have read the entire discussion on that point.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I was not on the floor when the Senator began, and if he could briefly tell me without reading it all over again I would be obliged to him.

Mr. WALSH. No reason was urged except apparently the Member of the House, from whose remarks I have quoted, took the position that when the Senate had once concurred in a conference report the action was final.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No reason was given?

Mr. WALSH. No reason was given.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is no reason.

Mr. WALSH. I offer, in view of the situation, the following resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 148) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the President of the United States that the signature of the Vice President was inadvertently affixed to the bill (H. R. 3932) "to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives; providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes," and while there was pending before the Senate a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee on conference to said bill was adopted.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 162) authorizing the expenditure of money upon lands purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes was read twice by its title.

Mr. MARTIN. This is a very important resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to the expenditure of appropriations for the Ordnance Department of the Army now available for the purchase of land and for improvements upon such land.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me for just a moment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN. I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 149) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints Mr. MARTIN and Mr. SMOOT as the committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President.

FREE SPEECH AND THE RIGHT OF CONGRESS TO DECLARE THE OBJECTS OF THE WAR.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

I have no intention of taking the time of the Senate with a review of the events which led to our entrance into the war except in so far as they bear upon the question of personal privilege to which I am addressing myself.

Six Members of the Senate and 50 Members of the House voted against the declaration of war. Immediately there was let loose upon those Senators and Representatives a flood of invective and abuse from newspapers and individuals who had been clamoring for war, unequaled, I believe, in the history of civilized society.

Prior to the declaration of war every man who had ventured to oppose our entrance into it had been condemned as a coward or worse, and even the President had by no means been immune from these attacks.

Since the declaration of war the triumphant war press has pursued those Senators and Representatives who voted against war with malicious falsehood and recklessly libelous attacks, going to the extreme limit of charging them with treason against their country.

This campaign of libel and character assassination directed against the Members of Congress who opposed our entrance into the war has been continued down to the present hour, and I have upon my desk newspaper clippings, some of them libels upon me alone, some directed as well against other Senators who voted in opposition to the declaration of war.

One of these newspaper reports most widely circulated represents a Federal judge in the State of Texas as saying, in a charge to a grand jury—I read the article as it appeared in the newspaper and the headline with which it is introduced:

DISTRICT JUDGE WOULD LIKE TO TAKE SHOT AT TRAITORS IN CONGRESS.

[By Associated Press leased wire.]

HOUSTON, TEX., October 1, 1917.

Judge Waller T. Burns, of the United States district court, in charging a Federal grand jury at the beginning of the October term to-day, after calling by name Senators STONE of Missouri, HARDWICK of Georgia, VARDAMAN of Mississippi, GRONNA of North Dakota, GORE of Oklahoma, and LA FOLLETTE of Wisconsin, said:

"If I had a wish, I would wish that you men had jurisdiction to return bills of indictment against these men. They ought to be tried promptly and fairly, and I believe this court could administer the law fairly; but I have a conviction, as strong as life, that this country should stand them up against an adobe wall to-morrow and give them what they deserve. If any man deserves death, it is a traitor. I wish that I could pay for the ammunition. I would like to attend the execution, and if I were in the firing squad I would not want to be the marksman who had the blank shell."

The above clipping, Mr. President, was sent to me by another Federal judge, who wrote upon the margin of the clipping that it occurred to him that the conduct of this judge might very properly be the subject of investigation. He inclosed with the clipping a letter, from which I quote the following:

I have been greatly depressed by the brutal and unjust attacks that great business interests have organized against you. It is a time when all the spirits of evil are turned loose. The Kaisers of high finance, who have been developing hatred of you for a generation because you have fought against them and for the common good, see this opportunity to turn the war patriotism into an engine of attack. They are using it everywhere, and it is a day when lovers of democracy, not only in the world, but here in the United States, need to go apart on the mountain and spend the night in fasting and prayer. I still have faith that the forces of good on this earth will be found to be greater than the forces of evil, but we all need resolution. I hope you will have the grace to keep your center of gravity on the inside of you and to keep a spirit that is unclouded by hatred. It is a time for the words, "with malice toward none and charity for all." It is the office of great service to be a shield to the good man's character against malice. Before this fight is over you will have a new revelation that such a shield is yours.

If this newspaper clipping were a single or exceptional instance of lawless defamation, I should not trouble the Senate with a reference to it. But, Mr. President, it is not.

In this mass of newspaper clippings which I have here upon my desk, and which I shall not trouble the Senate to read unless it is desired, and which represent but a small part of the accumulation clipped from the daily press of the country in the last three months, I find other Senators, as well as myself, accused of the highest crimes of which any man can be guilty—treason and disloyalty—and, sir, accused not only with no evidence to support the accusation, but without the suggestion that such evidence anywhere exists. It is not claimed that Senators who opposed the declaration of war have since that time acted with any concerted purpose either regarding war measures or any others. They have voted according to their individual opinions, have often been opposed to each other on bills which have come before the Senate since the declaration of war, and, according to my recollection, have never all voted together since that time upon any single proposition upon which the Senate has been divided.

I am aware, Mr. President, that in pursuance of this general campaign of villification and attempted intimidation, requests from various individuals and certain organizations have been submitted to the Senate for my expulsion from this body, and that such requests have been referred to and considered by one of the committees of the Senate.

If I alone had been made the victim of these attacks, I should not take one moment of the Senate's time for their consideration, and I believe that other Senators who have been unjustly and unfairly assailed, as I have been, hold the same attitude upon this that I do. Neither the clamor of the mob nor the voice of power will ever turn me by the breadth of a hair from the course I mark out for myself, guided by such knowledge as I can obtain and controlled and directed by a solemn conviction of right and duty.

But, sir, it is not alone Members of Congress that the war party in this country has sought to intimidate. The mandate seems to have gone forth to the sovereign people of this country that they must be silent while those things are being done by their Government which most vitally concern their well-being, their happiness, and their lives. To-day and for weeks past honest and law-abiding citizens of this country are being terrorized and outraged in their rights by those sworn to uphold the laws and protect the rights of the people. I have in my possession numerous affidavits establishing the fact that people are being unlawfully arrested, thrown into jail, held incommunicado for days, only to be eventually discharged without ever having been taken into court, because they have committed no crime. Private residences are being invaded, loyal citizens of undoubted integrity and probity arrested, cross-examined, and the most sacred constitutional rights guaranteed to every American citizen are being violated.

It appears to be the purpose of those conducting this campaign to throw the country into a state of terror, to coerce public opinion, to stifle criticism, and suppress discussion of the great issues involved in this war.

I think all men recognize that in time of war the citizen must surrender some rights for the common good which he is entitled to enjoy in time of peace. But, sir, the right to control their own Government according to constitutional forms is not one of the rights that the citizens of this country are called upon to surrender in time of war.

Rather in time of war the citizen must be more alert to the preservation of his right to control his Government. He must be most watchful of the encroachment of the military upon the civil power. He must beware of those precedents in support of arbitrary action by administrative officials, which excused on the plea of necessity in war time, become the fixed rule when the necessity has passed and normal conditions have been restored.

More than all, the citizen and his representative in Congress in time of war must maintain his right of free speech. More than in times of peace it is necessary that the channels for free public discussion of governmental policies shall be open and unclogged. I believe, Mr. President, that I am now touching upon the most important question in this country to-day—and that is the right of the citizens of this country and their representatives in Congress to discuss in an orderly way frankly and publicly and without fear, from the platform and through the press, every important phase of this war; its causes, the manner in which it should be conducted, and the terms upon which peace should be made. The belief which is becoming widespread in this land that this most fundamental right is being denied to the citizens of this country is a fact the tremendous significance of which, those in authority have not yet begun to appreciate. I am contending, Mr. President, for the great fundamental right of the sovereign people of this country to make their voice heard and have that voice heeded upon the great questions arising out of this war, including not only how the war shall be prosecuted but the conditions upon which it may be terminated with a due regard for the rights and the honor of this Nation and the interests of humanity.

I am contending for this right because the exercise of it is necessary to the welfare, to the existence, of this Government, to the successful conduct of this war, and to a peace which shall be enduring and for the best interest of this country.

Suppose success attends the attempt to stifle all discussion of the issues of this war, all discussion of the terms upon which it should be concluded, all discussion of the objects and purposes to be accomplished by it, and concede the demand of the war-mad press and war extremists that they monopolize the right of public utterance upon these questions unchallenged, what think you would be the consequences to this country not only during the war but after the war?

RIGHT OF PEOPLE TO DISCUSS WAR ISSUES.

Mr. President, our Government, above all others, is founded on the right of the people freely to discuss all matters pertaining to their Government, in war not less than in peace, for in this Government the people are the rulers in war no less than in peace. It is true, sir, that Members of the House of Representatives are elected for two years, the President for four years, and the Members of the Senate for six years, and during their temporary official terms these officers constitute what is called the Government. But back of them always is the controlling sovereign power of the people, and when the people can make their will known, the faithful officer will obey that will. Though the right of the people to express their will by ballot is suspended during the term of office of the elected official, nevertheless the duty of the official to obey the popular will continues throughout his entire term of office. How can that popular will express itself between elections except by meetings, by speeches, by publications, by petitions, and by addresses to the representatives of the people? Any man who seeks to set a limit upon those rights, whether in war or peace, aims a blow at the most vital part of our Government. And then as the time for election approaches and the official is called to account for his stewardship—not a day, not a week, not a month, before the election, but a year or more before it, if the people choose—they must have the right to the freest possible discussion of every question upon which their representative has acted, of the merits of every measure he has supported or opposed, of every vote he has cast and every speech that he has made. And before this great fundamental right every other must, if necessary, give way, for in no other manner can representative government be preserved.

Mr. President, what I am saying has been exemplified in the lives and public discussion of the ablest statesmen of this country, whose memories we most revere and whose deeds we most justly commemorate. I shall presently ask the attention of the Senate to the views of some of these men upon the subject we are now considering.

Closely related to this subject of the right of the citizen to discuss war is that of the constitutional power and duty of the Congress to declare the purposes and objects of any war in which our country may be engaged. The authorities which I shall cite cover both the right of the people to discuss the war in all its phases and the right and the duty of the people's representatives in Congress to declare the purposes and objects of the war. For the sake of brevity, I shall present these quotations together at this point instead of submitting them separately.

DISCUSSION BY AMERICAN STATESMEN.

Henry Clay, in a memorable address at Lexington, Ky., on the 13th day of November, 1847, during the Mexican War, took a strong position in behalf of the right of the people to freely discuss every question relating to the war, even though the discussion involved a strong condemnation of the war policy of the Executive. He also declared it to be not only the right but the duty of the Congress to declare the objects of the war. As a part of that address he presented certain resolutions embodying his views on these subjects. These resolutions were adopted at that meeting by the people present, and were adopted at many other mass meetings throughout the country during the continuance of the Mexican War.

For introducing in this body some time ago a resolution asserting the right of Congress to declare the purposes of the present war, I have, as the newspaper clippings here will show, been denounced as a traitor and my conduct characterized as treasonable.

As bearing directly upon the conduct for which I have been so criticized and condemned, I invite your attention to the language of Henry Clay in the address I have mentioned.

He said:

But the havoc of war is in progress and the no less deplorable havoc of an inhospitable and pestilential climate. Without indulging in an unnecessary retrospect and useless reproaches on the past, all hearts and heads should unite in the patriotic endeavor to bring it to a satisfactory close. Is there no way that this can be done? Must we blindly continue the conflict without any visible object or any prospect of a definite termination? This is the important subject upon which I desire to consult and to commune with you. Who in this free Government is to decide upon the objects of a war at its commencement or at any time during its existence? Does the power belong to collective wisdom of the Nation in Congress assembled, or is it vested solely in a single functionary of the Government?

A declaration of war is the highest and most awful exercise of sovereignty. The convention which framed our Federal Constitution had learned from the pages of history that it had been often and greatly abused. It had seen that war had often been commenced upon the most trifling pretexts; that it had been frequently waged to establish or exclude a dynasty; to snatch a crown from the head of one potentate and place it upon the head of another; that it had often been prosecuted to promote alien and other interests than those of the nation whose chief had proclaimed it, as in the case of English wars for Hanoverian interests; and, in short, that such a vast and tremendous power ought not to be confided to the perilous exercise of one single man. The convention therefore resolved to guard the war-making power against those great abuses, of which, in the hands of a monarch, it was so susceptible. And the security against those abuses which its wisdom devised was to vest the war-making power in the Congress of the United States, being the immediate representatives of the people and the States. So apprehensive and jealous was the convention of its abuse in any other hands that it interdicted the exercise of the power to any State in the Union without the consent of Congress. Congress, then, in our system of government, is the sole depository of that tremendous power.

Mr. President, it is impossible for me to quote as extensively from this address as I should like to do and still keep within the compass of the time that I have set down for myself; but the whole of the address is accessible to every Senator here, together with all of the discussion which followed it over the country, and in these times it would seem to me worthy of the review of Senators and of newspaper editors and of those who have duties to discharge in connection with this great crisis that is upon the world.

I quote further:

The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to declare war and grant letters of marque and reprisal, to make rules concerning captures on land and water, to raise and support armies, and provide and maintain a navy, and to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces. Thus we perceive that the principal power, in regard to war, with all its auxiliary attendants, is granted to Congress. Whenever called upon to determine upon the solemn question of peace or war, Congress must consider and deliberate and decide upon the motives, objects, and causes of the war.

If that be true, is it treason for a Senator upon this floor to offer a resolution dealing with that question?

I quote further from Mr. Clay:

And, if a war be commenced without any previous declaration of its objects, as in the case of the existing war with Mexico, Congress must necessarily possess the authority, at any time, to declare for what purposes it shall be further prosecuted. If we suppose Congress does not possess the controlling authority attributed to it, if it be contended that a war having been once commenced, the President of the United States may direct it to the accomplishment of any object he pleases, without consulting and without any regard to the will of Congress, the convention will have utterly failed in guarding the Nation against the abuses and ambition of a single individual. Either Congress or the President must have the right of determining upon the objects for which a war shall be prosecuted There is no other alternative. If the President possess it and may prosecute it for objects against the will of Congress, where is the difference between our free Government and that of any other nation which may be governed by an absolute Czar, Emperor, or King?

In closing his address Mr. Clay said:

I conclude, therefore, Mr. President and fellow citizens, with entire confidence, that Congress has the right, either at the beginning or during the prosecution of any war, to decide the objects and purposes for which it was proclaimed or for which it ought to be continued. And I think it is the duty of Congress, by some deliberate and authentic act, to declare for what objects the present war shall be longer prosecuted. I suppose the President would not hesitate to regulate his conduct by the pronounced will of Congress and to employ the force and the diplomatic power of the Nation to execute that will. But if the President should decline or refuse to do so and, in contempt of the supreme authority of Congress, should persevere in waging the war for other objects than those proclaimed by Congress, then it would be the imperative duty of that body to vindicate its authority by the most stringent and effectual and appropriate measures. And if, on the contrary, the enemy should refuse to conclude a treaty containing stipulations securing the objects designated by Congress, it would become the duty of the whole Government to prosecute the war with all the national energy until those objects were attained by a treaty of peace. There can be no insuperable difficulty in Congress making such an authoritative declaration. Let it resolve, simply, that the war shall or shall not be a war of conquest; and, if a war of conquest, what is to be conquered. Should a resolution pass disclaiming the design of conquest, peace would follow in less than 60 days, if the President would conform to his constitutional duty.

Mr. Clay as a part of that speech presented certain resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the meeting and which declared that the power to determine the purposes of the war rested with Congress, and then proceeded clearly to state the purposes, and the only purposes, for which the war should be prosecuted.

The last one of these resolutions is so pertinent to the present discussion that I invite your attention to it at this time. It is as follows:

Resolved, That we invite our fellow citizens of the United States who are anxious for the restoration of the blessings of peace, or, if the existing war shall continue to be prosecuted, are desirous that its purposes and objects shall be defined and known, who are anxious to avert present and future perils and dangers, with which it may be fraught, and who are also anxious to produce contentment and satisfaction at home, and to elevate the national character abroad, to assemble together in their respective communities, and to express their views, feelings, and opinions.

Abraham Lincoln was a Member of Congress at the time of the Mexican War. He strongly opposed the war while it was in progress and severely criticized President Polk on the floor of the House because he did not state in his message when peace might be expected.

In the course of his speech Lincoln said:

At its beginning, Gen. Scott was by this same President driven into disfavor, if not disgrace, for intimating that peace could not be conquered in less than three or four months. But now, at the end of 20 months * * * this same President gives a long message, without showing us that as to the end he himself has even an imaginary conception. As I have said, he knows not where he is. He is a bewildered, confounded, and miserably perplexed man. God grant he may be able to show there is not something about his conscience more painful than his mental perplexity.

Writing to a friend who had objected to his opposition to Polk in relation to this power of the President in war, Lincoln said:

The provision of the Constitution giving the war-making power to Congress was dictated, as I understand it, by the following reasons: Kings had always been involving and impoverishing their people in wars, pretending generally, if not always, that the good of the people was the object. This our convention understood to be the most oppressive of all kingly oppressions, and they resolved to so frame the Constitution that no man should hold the power of bringing this oppression upon us. But your view destroys the whole matter and places our President where kings have always stood.

I now quote from the speech of Charles Sumner, delivered at Tremont Temple, Boston, November 5, 1846.

John A. Andrew, who was the great war governor of Massachusetts, as I remember, presided at this public meeting, which was in support of the independent nomination of Dr. I. G. Howe as Representative in Congress. Mr. Sumner was followed by Hon. Charles Francis Adams, who also delivered an address at this meeting.

This is the view of Mr. Sumner on the Mexican War, which was then in progress, as expressed by him on this occasion:

The Mexican War is an enormity born of slavery. * * * Base in object, atrocious in beginning, immoral in all its influences, vainly prodigal of treasure and life, it is a war of infamy, which must blot the pages of our history.

In closing his eloquent and powerful address, he said:

Even if we seem to fail in this election we shall not fail in reality. The influence of this effort will help to awaken and organize that powerful public opinion by which this war will at last be arrested. Hang out, fellow citizens, the white banner of peace; let the citizens of Boston rally about it; and may it be borne forward by an enlightened, conscientious people, aroused to condemnation of this murderous war, until Mexico, now wet with blood unjustly shed, shall repose undisturbed beneath its folds.

Contrast this position taken by Charles Sumner at Tremont Temple with that of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo. He is now touring the country with all the prestige of his great financial mission and the authority of his high place in the administration. I quote the language of the authorized report of his speech before the Bankers' Association of West Virginia, September 21, 1917. According to daily press reports he is making substantially the same denunciation in all his addresses:

America intends that those well-meaning but misguided people who talk inopportunely of peace when there can be no peace until the cancer which has rotted civilization in Europe is extinguished and destroyed forever shall be silenced. I want to say here and now and with due deliberation that every pacifist speech in this country made at this inopportune and improper time is in effect traitorous.

In these times we had better turn the marble bust of Charles Sumner to the wall. It ill becomes those who tamely surrender the right of free speech to look upon that strong, noble, patriotic face.

Mr. President, Daniel Webster, then in the zenith of his power, and with the experience and knowledge of his long life and great public service in many capacities, to add weight to his words, spoke at Faneuil Hall, November 6, 1846, in opposition to the Mexican War. He said:

Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak with all soberness in this respect, and I would say nothing here to-night which I would not say in my place in Congress or before the whole world. The question now is, For what purposes and to what ends is this present war to be prosecuted?

What will you say to the stature of the statesmanship that imputes treason to his country to a Member of this body who introduces a resolution having no other import than that?

Webster saw no reason why the purposes of the war in which his country was engaged should not be discussed in Congress or out of Congress by the people's representatives or by the people themselves.

After referring to Mexico as a weak and distracted country he proceeded:

It is time for us to know what are the objects and designs of our Government.

It is not the habit of the American people, nor natural to their character, to consider the expense of a war which they deem just and necessary—

Not only just, but necessary—

but it is their habit and belongs to their character to inquire into the justice and necessity of a war in which it is proposed to involve them.

Mr. Webster discussed the Mexican War at Springfield, Mass., September 29, 1847, and again, while the war was in progress, he did not hesitate to express his disapproval in plain language.

Many battles had been fought and won, and our victorious armies were in the field, on foreign soil.

Sir, free speech had not been suppressed. The right of the people to assemble and to state their grievances was still an attribute of American freedom. Mr. Webster said:

We are, in my opinion, in a most unnecessary and therefore a most unjustifiable war.

Whoever expects to whip men, free men, in this country into a position where they are to be denied the right to exercise the same freedom of speech and discussion that Webster exercised in that speech little understand the value which the average citizen of this country places upon the liberty guaranteed to him by the Constitution. Sir, until the sacrifices of every battle field consecrated to the establishment of representative government and of constitutional freedom shall be obliterated from the pages of history and forgotten of men, the plain citizenship of this country will jealously guard that liberty and that freedom and will not surrender it.

To return to my text. Mr. Webster said:

We are, in my opinion, in a most unnecessary and therefore a most unjustifiable war. I hope we are nearing the close of it. I attend carefully and anxiously to every rumor and every breeze that brings to us any report that the effusion of blood, caused, in my judgment, by a rash and unjustifiable proceeding on the part of the Government, may cease.

He makes the charge that the war was begun under false pretexts, as follows:

Now, sir, the law of nations instructs us that there are wars of pretexts. The history of the world proves that there have been, and we are not now without proof that there are, wars waged on pretexts; that is, on pretenses, where the cause assigned is not the true cause. That I believe on my conscience is the true character of the war now waged against Mexico. I believe it to be a war of pretexts; a war in which the true motive is not distinctly avowed, but in which pretenses, afterthoughts, evasions, and other methods are employed to put a case before the community which is not the true case.

Think you Mr. Webster was not within his constitutional rights in thus criticizing the character of the war, its origin, and the reasons which were given from time to time in justification of it?

Mr. Webster discusses at length what he considers some of the false pretexts of the war. Later on he says:

Sir, men there are whom we see, and whom we hear speak of the duty of extending our free institutions over the whole world if possible. We owe it to benevolence, they think, to confer the blessings we enjoy on every other people. But while I trust that liberty and free civil institutions, as we have experienced them, may ultimately spread over the globe, I am by no means sure that all people are fit for them; nor am I desirous of imposing, or forcing, our peculiar forms upon any nation that does not wish to embrace them.

Taking up the subject that war does now exist, Mr. Webster asks:

What is our duty? I say for one, that I suppose it to be true—I hope it to be true—that a majority of the next House of Representatives will be Whigs; will be opposed to the war. I think we have heard from the East and the West, the North and the South, some things that make that pretty clear. Suppose it to be so. What then? Well, sir, I say for one, and at once, that unless the President of the United States shall make out a case which shall show to Congress that the aim and object for which the war is now prosecuted is no purpose not connected with the safety of the Union and the just rights of the American people, then Congress ought to pass resolutions against the prosecution of the war, and grant no further supplies. I would speak here with caution and all just limitation. It must be admitted to be the clear intent of the Constitution that no foreign war should exist without the assent of Congress. This was meant as a restraint on the Executive power. But, if, when a war has once begun, the President may continue it as long as he pleases, free of all control of Congress, then it is clear that the war power is substantially in his own single hand. Nothing will be done by a wise Congress hastily or rashly, nothing that partakes of the nature of violence or recklessness; a nigh and delicate regard must, of course, be had for the honor and credit of the Nation; but, after all, if the war should become odious to the people, if they shall disapprove the objects for which it appears to be prosecuted, then it will be the bounden duty of their Representatives in Congress to demand of the President a full statement of his objects and purposes. And if these purposes shall appear to them not to be founded in the public good, or not consistent with the honor and character of the country, then it will be their duty to put an end to it by the exercise of their constitutional authority. If this be not so, then the whole balance of the Constitution is overthrown, and all just restraint on the Executive power, in a matter of the highest concern to the peace and happiness of the country, entirely destroyed. If we do not maintain this doctrine; if it is not so—if Congress, in whom the war-making power is expressly made to reside, is to have no voice in the declaration or continuance of war; if it is not to judge of the propriety of beginning or carrying it on—then we depart at once, and broadly, from the Constitution.

Mr. Webster concluded his speech in these memorable words:

We may be tossed upon an ocean where we can see no land—nor, perhaps, the sun or stars. But there is a chart and a compass for us to study, to consult, and to obey. That chart is the Constitution of the country. That compass is an honest, single-eyed purpose to preserve the institutions and the liberty with which God has blessed us.

In 1847 Senator Tom Corwin made a memorable speech in the Senate on the Mexican War. It was one of the ablest addresses made by that very able statesman, and one of the great contributions to the discussion of the subject we are now considering. At the time of Senator Corwin's address the majority in Congress were supporting the President. The people up to that time had had no chance to express their views at an election. After referring to the doctrine then preached by the dominant faction of the Senate, that after war is declared it must be prosecuted to the bitter end as the President may direct, until one side or the other is hopelessly beaten and devastated by the conflict, with one man—the President—in sole command of the destinies of the Nation, Mr. Corwin said:

With these doctrines for our guide, I will thank any Senator to furnish me with any means of escaping from the prosecution of this or any other war, for an hundred years to come, if it please the President who shall be, to continue it so long. Tell me, ye who contend that, being in war, duty demands of Congress for its prosecution all the money and every able-bodied man in America to carry it on if need be, who also contend that it is the right of the President, without the control of Congress, to march your embodied hosts to Monterey, to Yucatan, to Mexico, to Panama, to China, and that under penalty of death to the officer who disobeys him—tell me, I demand it of you—tell me, tell the American people, tell the nations of Christendom, what is the difference between your democracy and the most odious, most hateful despotism, that a merciful God has ever allowed a nation to be afflicted with since government on earth began? You may call this free government, but it is such freedom, and no other, as of old was established at Babylon, at Susa, at Bactrina, or Persepolis. Its parallel is scarcely to be found when thus falsely understood, in any, even the worst, forms of civil polity in modern times. Sir, it is not so; such is not your Constitution; it is something else, something other and better than this.

Lincoln, Webster, Clay, Sumner—what a galaxy of names in American history! They all believed and asserted and advocated in the midst of war that it was the right—the constitutional right—and the patriotic duty of American citizens, after the declaration of war and while the war was in progress, to discuss the issues of the war and to criticize the policies employed in its prosecution and to work for the election of representatives opposed to prolonging war.

The right of Lincoln, Webster, Clay, Sumner to oppose the Mexican War, criticize its conduct, advocate its conclusion on a just basis, is exactly the same right and privilege as that possessed by every Representative in Congress and by each and every American citizen in our land to-day in respect to the war in which we are now engaged. Their arguments as to the power of Congress to shape the war policy and their opposition to what they believed to be the usurpation of power on the part of the Executive are potent so long as the Constitution remains the law of the land.

English history, like our own, shows that it has ever been the right of the citizen to criticize and, when he thought necessary, to condemn the war policy of his Government.

DISCUSSION BY ENGLISH STATESMEN.

John Bright consistently fought the Crimean War with all the power of his great personality and noble mind; he fought it inch by inch and step by step from the floor of the English Parliament. After his death Gladstone, although he had been a part of the ministry that Bright had opposed because of the Crimean War, selected this as the theme for his eulogy of the great statesman, as best portraying his high character and great service to the English people.

Lloyd-George aggressively opposed the Boer War. Speaking in the House of Commons July 25, 1900, in reply to the prime minister, he said:

He has led us into two blunders. The first was the war. But worse than the war is the change that has been effected in the purpose for which we are prosecuting the war. We went into the war for equal rights; we are prosecuting it for annexation. * * * You entered into these two Republics for philanthropic purposes and remained to commit burglary. * * * A war of annexation, however, against a proud people must be a war of extermination, and that is, unfortunately, what it seems we are now committing ourselves to—burning homesteads and turning men and women out of their homes

I am citing this language, Mr. President, as showing the length to which statesmen have gone in opposing wars which have been conducted by their governments and the latitude that has been accorded them.

* * * The right honorable gentleman has made up his mind that this war shall produce electioneering capital to his own side. He is in a great hurry to go to the country before the facts are known. He wants to have the judgment of the people in the very height and excitement of the fever. He wants a verdict before the pleadings are closed and before "discovery" has been obtained. He does not want the documents to come, but he wants to have the judgment of the country upon censured news, suppressed dispatches, and unpaid bills.

In a speech delivered October 23, 1901, Lloyd-George charged that the English Army had burned villages, blown up farmhouses, swept away the cattle, burned thousands of tons of grain, destroyed all agricultural implements, all the mills, the irrigation works, and left the territory "a blackened devastated wilderness." He said:

In June the death rate among the children in the Orange River Colony camps was at the rate of 192 per thousand per annum, and in Transvaal 233 per thousand per annum. In July the figures were 220 and 336 per thousand per annum, respectively. In August they had risen to 250 and 468, and in September to 442 in Orange River Colony and to 457 in the Transvaal. These are truly appalling figures. It means that at that rate in two years' time there would not be a little child left in the whole of these two new territories. The worst of it is that I can not resist the conclusion that their lives could have been saved had it not been that these camps had been deliberately chosen for military purposes. In the few camps near the coast there is hardly any mortality at all—and if the children had been removed from the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal to the seacoasts, where they could have been easily fed and clothed and cared for, their lives might be saved; but as long as they were kept up in the north there was a terrible inducement offered to the Boer commanders not to attack the lines of communication. * * * If I were to despair for the future of this country it would not be because of trade competition from either America or Germany, or the ineffectiveness of its army, or anything that might happen to its ships; but rather because it used its great, hulking strength to torture a little child. Had it not been that his ministry had shown distinct symptoms of softening of the brain, I would call the torpor and indifference they are showing in face of all this, criminal. It is a maddening horror, and it will haunt the Empire to its dying hour. What wonder is it that Europe should mock and hiss at us? Let any honest Britisher fearlessly search his heart and answer this question: Is there any ground for the reproach flung at us by the civilized world that, having failed to crush the men, we have now taken to killing babes?

Mr. President, while we were struggling for our independence the Duke of Grafton, in the House of Lords, October 26, 1775, speaking against voting thanks to British officers and soldiers, after the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill, declared:

I pledge myself to your lordships and my country that if necessity should require it and my health otherwise permit it, I mean to come down to this House in a litter in order to express my full and hearty disapproval of the measures now pursued, and, as I understand from the noble lords in office, meant to be pursued.

On the same occasion, Mr. Fox said:

I could not consent to the bloody consequences of so silly a contest, about so silly an object, conducted in the silliest manner that history or observation had ever furnished an instance of, and from which we are likely to derive poverty, misery, disgrace, defeat, and ruin.

In the House of Commons, May 14, 1777, Mr. Burke is reported in the parliamentary debates against the war on the American Colonies, as saying he was, and ever would be, ready to support a just war, whether against subjects or alien enemies, but where justice or color of justice was wanting he would ever be the first to oppose it.

Lord Chatham, November 18, 1777, spoke as follows regarding the war between England and the American Colonies:

I would sell my shirt off my back to assist in proper measures, properly and wisely conducted, but I would not part with a single shilling to the present ministers. Their plans are founded in destruction and disgrace. It is, my lords, a ruinous and destructive war; it is full of danger; it teems with disgrace and must end in ruin * * *. If I were an American, as I am an Englishman, while a foreign troop was landed in my country I never would lay down my arms! Never! Never! Never!

Mr. President, I have made these quotations from some of the leading statesmen of England to show that the principle of free speech was no new doctrine born of the Constitution of the United States. Our Constitution merely declared the principle. It did not create it. It is a heritage of English-speaking peoples, which has been won by incalculable sacrifice, and which they must preserve so long as they hope to live as free men. I say without fear of contradiction that there has never been a time for more than a century and a half when the right of free speech and free press and the right of the people to peaceably assemble for public discussion have been so violated among English-speaking people as they are violated to-day throughout the United States. To-day, in the land we have been wont to call the free United States, governors, mayors, and policemen are preventing or breaking up peaceable meetings called to discuss the questions growing out of this war, and judges and courts, with some notable and worthy exceptions, are failing to protect the citizens in their rights.

It is no answer to say that when the war is over the citizen may once more resume his rights and feel some security in his liberty and his person. As I have already tried to point out, now is precisely the time when the country needs the counsel of all its citizens. In time of war even more than in time of peace, whether citizens happen to agree with the ruling administration or not, these precious fundamental personal rights—free speech, free press, and right of assemblage so explicitly and emphatically guaranteed by the Constitution should be maintained inviolable. There is no rebellion in the land, no martial law, no courts are closed, no legal processes suspended, and there is no threat even of invasion.

But more than this, if every preparation for war can be made the excuse for destroying free speech and a free press and the right of the people to assemble together for peaceful discussion, then we may well despair of ever again finding ourselves for a long period in a state of peace. With the possessions we already have in remote parts of the world, with the obligations we seem almost certain to assume as a result of the present war, a war can be made any time overnight and the destruction of personal rights now occurring will be pointed to then as precedents for a still further invasion of the rights of the citizen. This is the road which all free governments have heretofore traveled to their destruction, and how far we have progressed along it is shown when we compare the standard of liberty of Lincoln, Clay, and Webster with the standard of the present day.

This leads me, Mr. President, to the next thought to which I desire to invite the attention of the Senate, and that is the power of Congress to declare the purpose and objects of the war, and the failure of Congress to exercise that power in the present crisis.

POWER OF CONGRESS TO DECLARE OBJECTS OF WAR.

For the mere assertion of that right, in the form of a resolution to be considered and discussed—which I introduced August 11, 1917—I have been denounced throughout this broad land as a traitor to my country.

Mr. President, we are in a war the awful consequences of which no man can foresee, which, in my judgment, could have been avoided if the Congress had exercised its constitutional power to influence and direct the foreign policy of this country.

On the 8th day of February, 1915, I introduced in the Senate a resolution authorizing the President to invite the representatives of the neutral nations of the world to assemble and consider, among other things, whether it would not be possible to lay out lanes of travel upon the high seas and through proper negotiation with the belligerent powers have those lanes recognized as neutral territory, through which the commerce of neutral nations might pass. This, together with other provisions, constituted a resolution, as I shall always regard it, of most vital and supreme importance in the world crisis, and one that should have been considered and acted upon by Congress.

I believe, sir, that had some such action been taken the history of the world would not be written at this hour in the blood of more than one-half of the nations of the earth, with the remaining nations in danger of becoming involved.

I believe that had Congress exercised the power in this respect, which I contend it possesses, we could and probably would have avoided the present war.

Mr. President, I believe that if we are to extricate ourselves from this war and restore this country to an honorable and lasting peace, the Congress must exercise in full the war powers intrusted to it by the Constitution. I have already called your attention sufficiently, no doubt, to the opinions upon this subject expressed by some of the greatest lawyers and statesmen of the country, and I now venture to ask your attention to a little closer examination of the subject viewed in the light of distinctly legal authorities and principles.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED.

Section 8, Article I, of the Constitution provides:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

In this first sentence we find that no war can be prosecuted without the consent of the Congress. No war can be prosecuted without money. There is no power to raise the money for war except the power of Congress. From this provision alone it must follow absolutely and without qualification that the duty of determining whether a war shall be prosecuted or not, whether the people's money shall be expended for the purpose of war or not rests upon the Congress, and with that power goes necessarily the power to determine the purposes of the war, for if the Congress does not approve the purposes of the war, it may refuse to lay the tax upon the people to prosecute it.

Again, section 8 further provides that Congress shall have power—

> To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;
> To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years;
> To provide and maintain a Navy;
> To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;
> To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion;
> To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

In the foregoing grants of power, which are as complete as language can make them, there is no mention of the President. Nothing is omitted from the powers conferred upon the Congress. Even the power to make the rules for the government and the regulation of all the national forces, both on land and on the sea, is vested in the Congress.

Then, not content with this, to make certain that no question could possibly arise, the framers of the Constitution declared that Congress shall have power—

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

We all know from the debates which took place in the constitutional convention why it was that the Constitution was so framed as to vest in the Congress the entire war-making power. The framers of the Constitution knew that to give to one man that power meant danger to the rights and liberties of the people. They knew that it mattered not whether you call the man king or emperor, czar or president, to put into his hands the power of making war or peace meant despotism. It meant that the people would be called upon to wage wars in which they had no interest or to which they might even be opposed. It meant secret diplomacy and secret treaties. It meant that in those things, most vital to the lives and welfare of the people, they would have nothing to say. The framers of the Constitution believed that they had guarded against this in the language I have quoted. They placed the entire control of this subject in the hands of the Congress. And it was assumed that debate would be free and open, that many men representing all the sections of the country would freely, frankly, and calmly exchange their views, unafraid of the power of the Executive, uninfluenced by anything except their own convictions, and a desire to obey the will of the people expressed in a constitutional manner.

Another reason for giving this power to the Congress was that the Congress, particularly the House of Representatives, was assumed to be directly responsible to the people and would most nearly represent their views. The term of office for a Representative was fixed at only two years. One-third of the Senate would be elected each two years. It was believed that this close relation to the people would insure a fair representation of the popular will in the action which the Congress might take. Moreover, if the Congress for any reason was unfaithful to its trust and declared a war which the people did not desire to support or to continue, they could in two years at most retire from office their unfaithful Representatives and return others who would terminate the war. It is true that within two years much harm could be done by an unwise declaration of war, especially a war of aggression, where men were sent abroad. The framers of the Constitution made no provision for such a condition, for they apparently never contemplated that such a condition would arise.

Moreover, under the system of voluntary enlistment, which was the only system of raising an army for use outside the country of which the framers of the Constitution had any idea, the people could force a settlement of any war to which they were opposed by the simple means of not volunteering to fight it.

The only power relating to war with which the Executive was intrusted was that of acting as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and of the militia when called into actual service. This provision is found in section 2 of Article II, and is as follows:

> The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States.

Here is found the sum total of the President's war powers. After the Army is raised he becomes the General in Command. His function is purely military. He is the General in Command of the entire Army, just as there is a general in command of a certain field of operation. The authority of each is confined strictly to the field of military service. The Congress must raise and support and equip and maintain the Army which the President is to command. Until the Army is raised the President has no military authority over any of the persons that may compose it. He can not enlist a man, or provide a uniform, or a single gun, or pound of powder. The country may be invaded from all sides and except for the command of the Regular Army, the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, is as powerless as any citizen to stem the tide of the invasion. In such case his only resort would be to the militia, as provided in the Constitution. Thus completely did the fathers of the Constitution strip the Executive of military power.

It may be said that the duty of the President to enforce the laws of the country carries with it by implication control over the military forces for that purpose, and that the decision as to when the laws are violated, and the manner in which they should be redressed, rests with the President. This whole matter was considered in the famous case of Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall., 2). The question of enforcing the laws of the United States, however, does not arise in the present discussion. The laws of the United States have no effect outside the territory of the United States. Our Army in France or our Navy on the high seas may be engaged in worthy enterprises, but they are not enforcing the laws of the United States, and the President derives from his constitutional obligation to enforce the laws of the country no power to determine the purposes of the present war.

The only remaining provision of the Constitution to be considered on the subject is that provision of Article II, section 2, which provides that the President—

Shall have power by and with the consent of the Senate to make treaties, providing two-thirds of the Senate present concur.

This is the same section of the Constitution which provides that the President "shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, consuls, judges of the Supreme Court," and so forth.

Observe, the President under this constitutional provision gets no authority to declare the purposes and objects of any war in which the country may be engaged. It is true that a treaty of peace can not be executed except the President and the Senate concur in its execution. If a President should refuse to agree to terms of peace which were proposed, for instance, by a resolution of Congress, and accepted by the parliament of an enemy nation against the will, we will say, of an emperor, the war would simply stop, if the two parliaments agreed and exercised their powers respectively to withhold supplies; and the formal execution of a treaty of peace would be postponed until the people could select another President. It is devoutly to be hoped that such a situation will never arise, and it is hardly conceivable that it should arise with both an Executive and a Senate anxious, respectively, to discharge the constitutional duties of their office. But if it should arise, under the Constitution, the final authority and the power to ultimately control is vested by the Constitution in the Congress. The President can no more make a treaty of peace without the approval not only of the Senate but of two-thirds of the Senators present than he can appoint a judge of the Supreme Court without the concurrence of the Senate. A decent regard for the duties of the President, as well as the duties of the Senators, and the consideration of the interests of the people, whose servants both the Senators and the President are, requires that the negotiations which lead up to the making of peace should be participated in equally by the Senators and by the President. For Senators to take any other position is to shirk a plain duty; is to avoid an obligation imposed upon them by the spirit and letter of the Constitution and by the solemn oath of office each has taken.

PRECEDENTS AND AUTHORITIES.

As might be expected from the plain language of the Constitution, the precedents and authorities are all one way. I shall not attempt to present them all here, but only refer to those which have peculiar application to the present situation.

Watson, in his work on the Constitution, Volume II, page 915, says:

The authority of the President over the Army and Navy to command and control is only subject to the restrictions of Congress to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. * * * Neither can impair or invade the authority of the other. * * * The powers of the President (under the war clause) are only those which may be called "military."

The same author on the same and succeeding page points out that the President as Commander in Chief of the Army may direct the military force in such a way as to most effectively injure the enemy. He may even direct an invasion of enemy territory. But, says the author, this can be done "temporarily, however, only until Congress has defined what the permanent policy of the country is to be."

How, then, can the President declare the purposes of the war to be, to extend permanently the territory of an ally or secure for an ally damages either in the form of money or new territory?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I prefer not to yield, if the Senator will permit me to continue. I can hardly get through within the time allotted, and I am certain to be diverted if I begin to yield.

Mr. KING. I just wanted to ask the Senator whether he thinks the President of the United States has contravened any constitutional powers conferred upon him thus far in the prosecution of the war?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, sir, I am discussing the constitutional question here, and Senators must make their own application.

Pomeroy, in his "Introduction to the Constitutional Law of the United States" (9th edition, 1886, p. 373), says:

The organic law nowhere prescribes or limits the causes for which hostilities may be waged against a foreign country. The causes of war it leaves to the discretion and judgment of the legislature.

In other words, it is for Congress to determine what we are fighting for. The President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, is to determine the best method of carrying on the fight. But since the purposes of the war must determine what are the best methods of conducting it, the primary duty at all times rests upon Congress to declare either in the declaration of war or subsequently what the objects are which it is expected to accomplish by the war.

In Elliot's Debates (supplement 2d edition, 1866, p. 439, vol. 5) it is said:

There is a material difference between the cases of making war and making peace. It should be more easy to get out of war than into it.

In the same volume, at page 140, we find:

Mr. Sherman said he considered the executive magistracy as nothing more than an institution for carrying the will of the legislature into effect.

Story, in his work on the Constitution (5th edition, 1891, p. 92), says:

The history of republics has but too fatally proved that they are too ambitious of military fame and conquest and too easily devoted to the interests of demagogues, who flatter their pride and betray their interests. It should, therefore, be difficult in a republic to declare war, but not to make peace. The representatives of the people are to lay the taxes to support a war, and therefore have a right to be consulted as to its propriety and necessity.

I commend this language to those gentlemen, both in and out of public office, who condemn as treasonable all efforts, either by the people or by their representatives in Congress, to discuss terms of peace or who even venture to suggest that a peace is not desirable until such time as the President, acting solely on his own responsibility, shall declare for peace. It is a strange doctrine we hear these days that the mass of the people, who pay in money, misery, and blood all the costs of this war, out of which a favored few profit so largely, may not freely and publicly discuss terms of peace. I believe that I have shown that such an odious and tyrannical doctrine has never been held by the men who have stood for liberty and representative government in this country.

Ordronaux, in his work on Constitutional Legislation, says:

This power (the war-making power) the Constitution has lodged in Congress, as the political department of the Government, and more immediate representative of the will of the people. (P. 495).

On page 496, the same author points out that—

The general power to declare war, and the consequent right to conduct it as long as the public interests may seem to require—is vested in Congress.

The right to determine when and upon what terms the public interests require that war shall cease must therefore necessarily vest in Congress.

I have already referred to the fact that Lincoln, Webster, Clay, Sumner, Corwin, and others, all contended and declared in the midst of war that it was the right—the constitutional right—and the patriotic duty of American citizens, after the declaration of war, as well as before the declaration of war, and while the war was in progress, to discuss the issues of the war, to criticize the policies employed in its prosecution, and to work for the election of representatives pledged to carry out the will of the people respecting the war.

Let me call your attention to what James Madison, who became the fourth President of the United States, said on the subject in a speech at the constitutional convention, June 29, 1787:

A standing military force, with an overgrown Executive, will not long be safe companions to liberty. The means of defense against foreign dangers have always been the instrument of tyranny at home. Among the Romans it was a standing maxim to excite war whenever a revolt was apprehended. Throughout all Europe the armies kept up under the pretense of defending have enslaved the people. It is perhaps questionable whether the best concerted system of absolute power in Europe could maintain itself in a situation where no alarms of external danger could tame the people to the domestic yoke.

I now invite your attention to some of the precedents established by Congress showing that it has exercised almost from the time of the first Congress substantially the powers I am urging it should assert now.

CONGRESSIONAL PRECEDENTS.

Many of the precedents to which I shall now briefly refer will be found in Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, chapter 49. My authority for the others are the records of Congress itself as contained in the Congressional Globe and CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In 1811 the House originated and the Senate agreed to a resolution as follows:

Taking into view the present state of the world, the peculiar situation of Spain and of her American Provinces, and the intimate relations of the territory eastward of the River Perdido, adjoining the United States, to their security and tranquillity: Therefore Resolved, etc., That the United States can not see with indifference any part of the Spanish Provinces adjoining the said States eastward of the River Perdido pass from the hands of Spain into those of any other foreign power.

In 1821 Mr. Clay introduced the following resolution, which passed the House:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives participates with the people of the United States in the deep interest which they feel for the success of the Spanish Provinces of South America, which are struggling to establish their liberty and independence, and that it will give its constitutional support to the President of the United States whenever he may deem it expedient to recognize the sovereignty and independence of any of the said Provinces.

In 1825 there was a long debate in the House relating to an unconditional appropriation for the expenses of the ministers to the Panama Congress. According to Mr. Hinds's summary of this debate, the opposition to the amendment, led by Mr. Webster, was that—

While the House had an undoubted right to express its general opinion in regard to questions of foreign policy, in this case it was proposed to decide what should be discussed by the particular ministers already appointed. If such instructions might be furnished by the House in this case they might be furnished in all, thus usurping the power of the Executive.

James Buchanan and John Forsythe, who argued in favor of the amendment, "contended that it did not amount to an instruction to diplomatic agents, but was a proper expression of opinion by the House. The House had always exercised the right of expressing its opinion on great questions, either foreign or domestic, and such expressions were never thought to be an improper interference with the Executive."

In April, 1864, the House originated and passed a resolution declaring that—

It did not accord with the policy of the United States to acknowledge a monarchical government erected on the ruins of any republican government in America under the auspices of any European power.

On May 23 the House passed a resolution requesting the President to communicate any explanation given by the Government of the United States to France respecting the sense and bearing of the joint resolution relative to Mexico.

The President transmitted the correspondence to the House.

The correspondence disclosed that Secretary Seward had transmitted a copy of the resolution to our minister to France, with the explanation that—

This is a practical and purely executive question, and the decision of its constitutionality belongs not to the House of Representatives or even to Congress but to the President of the United States.

After a protracted struggle, evidently accompanied with much feeling, the House of Representatives adopted the following resolution, which had been reported by Mr. Henry Winter Davis from the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That Congress has a constitutional right to an authoritative voice in declaring and prescribing the foreign policy of the United States as well in the recognition of new powers as in other matters, and it is the constitutional duty of the President to respect that policy, no less in diplomatic negotiations than in the use of the national force when authorized by law.

It will be observed from the language last read that it was assumed as a matter of course that Congress had an authoritative voice as to the use of the national forces to be made in time of war, and that it was the constitutional duty of the President to respect the policy of the Congress in that regard, and Mr. Davis in the resolution just read argued that it was the duty of the President to respect the authority of Congress in diplomatic negotiations even as he must respect it when the Congress determined the policy of the Government in the use of the national forces. The portion of the resolution I have just read was adopted by a vote of 119 to 8. The balance of the resolution was adopted by a smaller majority, and was as follows:

And the propriety of any declaration of foreign policy by Congress is sufficiently proved by the vote which pronounces it, and such proposition, while pending and undetermined, is not a fit topic of diplomatic explanation with any foreign power.

The joint resolution of 1898 declaring the intervention of the United States to remedy conditions existing in the island of Cuba is recent history and familiar to all. This resolution embodied a clear declaration of foreign policy regarding Cuba as well as a declaration of war. It passed both branches of Congress and was signed by the President.

After reciting the abhorrent conditions existing in Cuba it reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., First. That the people of the island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

On April 28, 1904, a joint resolution was passed by both Houses of Congress in the following terms:

That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that it is desirable in the interests of uniformity of action by maritime States in time of war, that the President endeavor to bring about an understanding among the principal maritime powers, with a view to incorporating into the permanent law of civilized nations the principle of the exemption of all private property at sea, not contraband of war, from capture or destruction by belligerents.

Here it will be observed that the Congress proposed by resolution to direct the President as to the policy of exempting from capture private property at sea, not contraband of war, in not only one war merely but in all wars, providing that other maritime powers could be brought to adopt the same policy. So far as I am aware, there is an unbroken line of precedents by Congress upon this subject down to the time of the present administration. It is true that in 1846 President Polk, without consulting Congress, assumed to send the Army of the United States into territory the title of which was in dispute between the United States and Mexico, thereby precipitating bloodshed and the Mexican War. But it is also true that this act was condemned as unconstitutional by the great constitutional lawyers of the country, and Abraham Lincoln, when he became a Member of the next Congress, voted for and supported the resolution, called the Ashmun amendment, which passed the House of Representatives, declaring that the Mexican War had been—

Unnecessarily and unconstitutionally begun by the President of the United States. (See Schouler's History of the United States, vol. 5, p. 83. See also Lincoln's speech in the House of Representatives, Jan. 12, 1848.)

That the full significance of this resolution was appreciated by the House of Representatives is shown by the speech of Mr. Venable, Representative from North Carolina, and a warm supporter of President Polk, made in the House, January 12, 1848, where referring to this resolution he says:

Eighty-five Members of this House sustained that amendment (referring to the Ashmun amendment) and it now constitutes one of our recorded acts. I will not here stop to inquire as to the moral effect upon the Mexican people and the Mexican Government which will result to us from such a vote in the midst of a war. I suppose gentlemen have fully weighed this matter. Neither will I now inquire how much such a vote will strengthen our credit or facilitate the Government in furnishing the necessary supply of troops. * * *

They [referring to his fellow Members in the House of Representatives] have said by their votes that the President has violated the Constitution in the most flagrant manner; that every drop of blood which has been shed, every bone which now whitens the plains of Mexico, every heart-wringing agony which has been produced must be placed to his account who has so flagitiously violated the Constitution and involved the Nation in the horrors of war. This the majority of this House have declared on oath. The grand inquest of the Nation have asserted the fact and fixed it on their records, and I here demand of them to impeach the President.

That Mr. Lincoln was in no manner deterred from the discharge of his duty as he saw it is evidenced by the fact that on the day following the speech of Representative Venable, Lincoln replied with one of the ablest speeches of his career, the opening sentences of which I desire to quote. He said:

Some, if not all, the gentlemen of the other side of the House, who have addressed the committee within the last two days, have spoken rather complainingly, if I have rightly understood them, of the vote given a week or 10 days ago, declaring that the War with Mexico was unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by the President. I admit that such a vote should not be given in mere party wantonness and that the one given is justly censurable, if it have no other or better foundation. I am one of those who joined in that vote; and I did so under my best impression of the truth of the case.

Lincoln then proceeded to demonstrate the truth of the charge as he regarded it. Evidently he did not think that patriotism in war more than in peace required the suppression of the truth respecting anything pertaining to the conduct of the war.

And yet to-day, Mr. President, for merely suggesting a possible disagreement with the administration on any measure submitted, or the offering of amendments to increase the tax upon incomes, or on war profits, is "treason to our country and an effort to serve the enemy."

Since the Constitution vests in Congress the supreme power to determine when and for what purpose the country will engage in war and the objects to attain which the war will be prosecuted, it seems to me to be an evasion of a solemn duty on the part of the Congress not to exercise that power at this critical time in the Nation's affairs. The Congress can no more avoid its responsibility in this matter than it can in any other. As the Nation's purposes in conducting this war are of supreme importance to the country, it is the supreme duty of Congress to exercise the function conferred upon it by the Constitution of guiding the foreign policy of the Nation in the present crisis.

A minor duty may be evaded by Congress, a minor responsibility avoided without disaster resulting, but on this momentous question there can be no evasion, no shirking of duty of the Congress, without subverting our form of government. If our Constitution is to be changed so as to give the President the power to determine the purposes for which this Nation will engage in war, and the conditions on which it will make peace, then let that change be made deliberately by an amendment to the Constitution proposed and adopted in a constitutional manner. It would be bad enough if the Constitution clothed the President with any such power, but to exercise such power without constitutional authority can not long be tolerated if even the forms of free government are to remain. We all know that no amendment to the Constitution giving the President the powers suggested would be adopted by the people. We know that if such an amendment were to be proposed it would be overwhelmingly defeated.

The universal conviction of those who yet believe in the rights of the people is that the first step toward the prevention of war and the establishment of peace, permanent peace, is to give the people who must bear the brunt of war's awful burden more to say about it. The masses will understand that it was the evil of a one-man power exercised in a half dozen nations through the malevolent influences of a system of secret diplomacy that plunged the helpless peoples of Europe into the awful war that has been raging with increasing horror and fury ever since it began and that now threatens to engulf the world before it stops.

No conviction is stronger with the people to-day than that there should be no future wars except in case of actual invasion, unless supported by a referendum, a plebiscite, a vote of ratification upon the declaration of war before it shall become effective.

And because there is no clearness of understanding, no unity of opinion in this country on the part of the people as to the conditions upon which we are prosecuting this war or what the specific objects are upon the attainment of which the present administration would be willing to conclude a peace, it becomes still more imperative each day that Congress should assert its constitutional power to define and declare the objects of this war which will afford the basis for a conference and for the establishment of permanent peace. The President has asked the German people to speak for themselves on this great world issue; why should not the American people voice their convictions through their chosen representatives in Congress?

Ever since new Russia appeared upon the map she has been holding out her hands to free America to come to her support in declaring for a clear understanding of the objects to be attained to secure peace. Shall we let this most remarkable revolution the world has ever witnessed appeal to us in vain?

We have been six months at war. We have incurred financial obligations and made expenditures of money in amounts already so large that the human mind can not comprehend them. The Government has drafted from the peaceful occupations of civil life a million of our finest young men—and more will be taken if necessary—to be transported 4,000 miles over the sea, with their equipment and supplies, to the trenches of Europe.

The first chill winds of autumn remind us that another winter is at hand. The imagination is paralyzed at the thought of the human misery, the indescribable suffering, which the winter months, with their cold and sleet and ice and snow, must bring to the war-swept lands, not alone to the soldiers at the front but to the noncombatants at home.

To such excesses of cruelty has this war descended that each nation is now, as a part of its strategy, planning to starve the women and children of the enemy countries. Each warring nation is carrying out the unspeakable plan of starving noncombatants. Each nurses the hope that it may break the spirit of the men of the enemy country at the front by starving the wives and babes at home, and woe be it that we have become partners in this awful business and are even cutting off food shipments from neutral countries in order to force them to help starve women and children of the country against whom we have declared war.

There may be some necessity overpowering enough to justify these things, but the people of America should demand to know what results are expected to satisfy the sacrifice of all that civilization holds dear upon the bloody altar of a conflict which employs such desperate methods of warfare.

The question is, Are we to sacrifice millions of our young men—the very promise of the land—and spend billions and more billions, and pile up the cost of living until we starve—and for what? Shall the fearfully overburdened people of this country continue to bear the brunt of a prolonged war for any objects not openly stated and defined?

The answer, sir, rests, in my judgment, with the Congress, whose duty it is to declare our specific purposes in the present war and to state the objects upon the attainment of which we will make peace.

CAMPAIGN SHOULD BE MADE ON CONSTITUTIONAL LINES.

And, sir, this is the ground on which I stand. I maintain that Congress has the right and the duty to declare the objects of the war and the people have the right and the obligation to discuss it.

American citizens may hold all shades of opinion as to the war; one citizen may glory in it, another may deplore it, each has the same right to voice his judgment. An American citizen may think and say that we are not justified in prosecuting this war for the purpose of dictating the form of government which shall be maintained by our enemy or our ally, and not be subject to punishment at law. He may pray aloud that our boys shall not be sent to fight and die on European battle fields for the annexation of territory or the maintenance of trade agreements and be within his legal rights. He may express the hope that an early peace may be secured on the terms set forth by the new Russia and by President Wilson in his speech of January 22, 1917, and he can not lawfully be sent to jail for the expression of his convictions.

It is the citizen's duty to obey the law until it is repealed or declared unconstitutional. But he has the inalienable right to fight what he deems an obnoxious law or a wrong policy in the courts and at the ballot box.

It is the suppressed emotion of the masses that breeds revolution.

If the American people are to carry on this great war, if public opinion is to be enlightened and intelligent, there must be free discussion.

Congress, as well as the people of the United States, entered the war in great confusion of mind and under feverish excitement. The President's leadership was followed in the faith that he had some big, unrevealed plan by which peace that would exalt him before all the world would soon be achieved.

Gradually, reluctantly, Congress and the country are beginning to perceive that we are in this terrific world conflict, not only to right our wrongs, not only to aid the allies, not only to share its awful death toll and its fearful tax burden, but, perhaps, to bear the brunt of the war.

And so I say, if we are to forestall the danger of being drawn into years of war, perhaps finally to maintain imperialism and exploitation, the people must unite in a campaign along constitutional lines for free discussion of the policy of the war and its conclusion on a just basis.

Permit me, sir, this word in conclusion. It is said by many persons for whose opinions I have profound respect and whose motives I know to be sincere that "we are in this war and must go through to the end." That is true. But it is not true that we must go through to the end to accomplish an undisclosed purpose, or to reach an unknown goal.

I believe that whatever there is of honest difference of opinion concerning this war, arises precisely at this point.

There is, and of course can be, no real difference of opinion concerning the duty of the citizen to discharge to the last limit whatever obligation the war lays upon him.

Our young men are being taken by the hundreds of thousands for the purpose of waging this war on the Continent of Europe, possibly Asia or Africa, or anywhere else that they may be ordered. Nothing must be left undone for their protection. They must have the best army, ammunition, and equipment that money can buy. They must have the best training and the best officers which this great country can provide. The dependents and relatives they leave at home must be provided for, not meagerly, but generously so far as money can provide for them.

I have done some of the hardest work of my life during the last few weeks on the revenue bill to raise the largest possible amount of money from surplus incomes and war profits for this war and upon other measures to provide for the protection of the soldiers and their families. That I was not able to accomplish more along this line is a great disappointment to me. I did all that I could, and I shall continue to fight with all the power at my command until wealth is made to bear more of the burden of this war than has been laid upon it by the present Congress. Concerning these matters there can be no difference of opinion. We have not yet been able to muster the forces to conscript wealth, as we have conscripted men, but no one has ever been able to advance even a plausible argument for not doing so.

No, Mr. President; it is on the other point suggested where honest differences of opinion may arise. Shall we ask the people of this country to shut their eyes and take the entire war program on faith? There are no doubt many honest and well-meaning persons who are willing to answer that question in the affirmative rather than risk the dissensions which they fear may follow a free discussion of the issues of this war. With that position I do not—I can not agree. Have the people no intelligent contribution to make to the solution of the problems of this war? I believe that they have, and that in this matter, as in so many others, they may be wiser than their leaders, and that if left free to discuss the issues of the war they will find the correct settlement of these issues.

But it is said that Germany will fight with greater determination if her people believe that we are not in perfect agreement. Mr. President, that is the same worn-out pretext which has been used for three years to keep the plain people of Europe engaged in killing each other in this war. And, sir, as applied to this country, at least, it is a pretext with nothing to support it.

The way to paralyze the German arm, to weaken the German military force, in my opinion, is to declare our objects in this war, and show by that declaration to the German people that we are not seeking to dictate a form of government to Germany or to render more secure England's domination of the seas.

A declaration of our purposes in this war, so far from strengthening our enemy, I believe would immeasurably weaken her, for it would no longer be possible to misrepresent our purposes to the German people. Such a course on our part, so far from endangering the life of a single one of our boys, I believe would result in saving the lives of hundreds of thousands of them by bringing about an earlier and more lasting peace by intelligent negotiation, instead of securing a peace by the complete exhaustion of one or the other of the belligerents.

Such a course would also immeasurably, I believe, strengthen our military force in this country, because when the objects of this war are clearly stated and the people approve of those objects they will give to the war a popular support it will never otherwise receive.

Then, again, honest dealing with the entente allies, as well as with our own people, requires a clear statement of our objects in this war. If we do not expect to support the entente allies in the dreams of conquest we know some of them entertain, then in all fairness to them that fact should be stated now. If we do expect to support them in their plans for conquest and aggrandizement, then our people are entitled to know that vitally important fact before this war proceeds further. Common honesty and fair dealing with the people of this country and with the nations by whose side we are fighting, as well as a sound military policy at home, requires the fullest and freest discussion before the people of every issue involved in this great war and that a plain and specific declaration of our purposes in the war be speedily made by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—— [Applause in the galeries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries at the present time are not aware of the fact perhaps that the presiding officer of the Senate is required to suppress all demonstrations of approval or disapproval on the part of occupants of the galleries. Upon the assumption that that rule was not known to the occupants of the galleries it will not be enforced at the present time. A repetition of it will result in the clearing of the galleries. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he will yield to me for just one second?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the adjournment resolution which came from the House, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 25.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on Saturday, the 6th day of October, 1917, at 3 o'clock p. m.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have no sympathy with unjust and intemperate criticism of the Members of this Senate or of any public men, for I realize that when this Senate ceases to be a deliberative body the Republic is in danger. I desire for a few moments, however, to discuss the reasons which brought this country into this great conflict and what I believe to be the duties of public men in relation thereto.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] stated that resolutions or petitions had been presented asking for his expulsion for expressions of his opinion in public. I introduced one of those petitions a week ago. I presented it to the Senate. It came as a resolution from the Minnesota Public Safety Commission, a body created by authority of statute and headed by the distinguished governor of that Commonwealth. It had attached thereto, certified to me, a stenographic copy of the speech of the senior Senator from Wisconsin. It was not a pleasant duty to present the petition to the Senate of the United States. Sir, I performed that duty in response to the guaranties of the Constitution of the United States, fixing forever in our laws the right of petition.

At the time I made no comment thereon, and should not have done so but for the speech of the Senator to-day. I shall not now anticipate the action of the committee or of the Senate upon the question, or express any opinion as to what, if anything, should be done; but I can not allow this occasion to pass or this Congress to adjourn without expressing my emphatic dissent from some of the views stated in that speech. I shall limit my remarks to those parts of the speech stating, as the Senator understood it, the reasons why this Government went to war. The speech was delivered on the 20th day of September—16 days ago. It has been scattered broadcast all over this land. I have heard no denial of the parts of the speech which I shall read to the Senate. I hope they were not spoken; but they have been printed in the press of this country, and it is as to the sentiments therein expressed and the reasons therein given for this war to which I address myself. I invite the attention of the Senate to two paragraphs of that speech, reading as follows:

> Now, fellow citizens, we are in the midst of a war. For my own part, I was not in favor of beginning the war. [Continued applause.] I didn't mean to say we had not suffered grievances. We had, at the hands of Germany, serious grievances; we had cause for complaining; they had interfered with the right of American citizens to travel upon the high seas on ships loaded with munitions for Great Britain. [Applause and yells.] And, gentlemen, I would not be understood as saying we didn't have grievances; we did, and upon those grievances, which I have regarded as insufficient, considering the amount involved and the rights involved, which was the right to ship munitions to Great Britain with American passengers on board to secure a safe transit. [Laughter and applause.] We had a right, a technical right, to ship munitions, and the American citizens had a technical right to ride on those vessels. I was not in favor of riding on them [laughter] because it seemed to me when the consequences resulting from any destruction of life that might occur would be so awful, I say [a voice: "Yellow"]—any man who says that in an audience where he can conceal himself is yellow himself. [Cries: "Put him out."] I say this, that the comparatively small privilege of the right of an American citizen to ride on a munition-loaded ship flying a foreign flag is too small to involve this country in a loss of millions and hundreds of millions of lives. [Applause.]

Reading another part:

> And, fellow citizens, it behooves a nation to consider well before it enters upon a war of that sort how much it has got at stake. If all it has got at stake is the loans the house of Morgan makes to foreign Governments, and the profits that the munition makers will earn in shipping their products to foreign countries, then I think it ought to be weighed, not in a common hay scale, but in an apothecary's scale. [Applause.]
> Ah! But somebody will tell you American rights are involved. What American rights? The right of some venturesome person to ride upon a munition-laden vessel in violation of an American statute that no vessel which carries explosives shall carry passengers. Four days before the Lusitania sailed President Wilson was warned in person by Secretary of State Bryan that the Lusitania had 6,000,000 rounds of ammunition on board, besides explosives, and that the passengers who proposed to sail on that vessel were sailing in violation of a statute of this country, that no passengers shall travel upon a railroad train or sail upon a vessel which carries dangerous explosives. [Applause.] And Mr. Bryan appealed to President Wilson to stop passengers from sailing upon the Lusitania. I am giving you some history that maybe has not come to you heretofore—the grievances that carry this country into the war, into a war the results of which, as to the loss of life and burdens, financial burdens, that shall be laid upon us can not be calculated by any mind.

Mr. President, after we have declared war and when we are calling upon brave men to sacrifice their lives, when we are marshaling the resources of a mighty nation for a struggle unparalleled in history, I believe that we should be extremely cautious and scrupulously accurate in stating the grounds of conflict and causes of the war. I deny that we went to war to secure the right of American citizens to ride on ships loaded with munitions for Great Britain or loaded with explosives in violation of American statutes. I deny that we went to war to protect the loans of the house of Morgan & Co. to foreign Governments. I deny that we went to war to insure profits to munition makers, and I believe that such a statement is a slander upon the intelligence, the honor, and the patriotism of this country. What did we go to war for? I shall not hark back to the cause of the war between the central empires and the entente allies, although from a most painstaking investigation, I am convinced that Imperial Germany has been preparing for more than 30 years to spring on an unsuspecting world. To that preparation she has brought all the resources of her great empire and the marvelous energy of her concentrated government; that when the opportune time came, when she thought Europe was unprepared to meet her onslaught, she availed herself of an excuse to plunge Europe into war, that she might realize her dream of conquest and imperial mastery. I am convinced that the allied nations—France, England, and Russia—used every reasonable effort to prevent this world calamity. Sir, Germany stands convicted, by the judgment of the civilized world, and this war is a blot upon the pages of her history which sacrificial blood and time will never efface.

But whatever may be said as to the original cause of the war between Germany and the allies, this Nation rests upon solid grounds, backed by international law, by the dictates of humanity, and the instincts of self-preservation. Germany violated her sacred treaties with this country. She closed the ocean to our commerce and the commerce of the world. She sank merchant ships in violation of international law and the universal custom of all civilized nations. She murdered noncombatants, innocent women, and children; she defied and scoffed at our authority. She tried to induce a neighboring nation, with which we were at peace, to make war upon us by promising that nation a part of our territory. She violated our hospitality by having her ambassador, her consular agents, and her spies plot in our midst against our peace and safety. Sir, to-day, when we are at war, her spies and her agents are in our midst. She undertook to stir up rebellion in Cuba, in Haiti, in Santo Domingo, and she has filled the world with her mercenaries advocating her unlimited power and ruthlessness in destruction.

Mr. President, it is unnecessary for me to recite the details of the record of the sinking of American and foreign passenger ships—a record so black, so treacherous, so barbarous as to stir the indignation of all civilized nations. It is sufficient here to say that in addition to the sinking of the Lusitania and many other ships, on the 24th of March, 1916, her submarines sank the Sussex in the English Channel, having on board a number of American citizens. She was a passenger ship. There was no claim that she was armed or carrying munitions. And following a demand by our Government, on May 4, Germany gave her solemn pledge that thereafter "merchant vessels, both within and without the area declared a naval war zone shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless the ship attempted to escape or offer resistance."

But this pledge, like all other pledges of the Imperial German Government, was treated as a scrap of paper, and on the last day of January, 1917, the German Government declared itself bound by no promises and threatened a ruthless submarine warfare against all the world.

I send to the desk and ask to have inserted in the RECORD a statement containing the number of American ships sunk immediately following this decree and American lives lost by the sinking of more than 20 vessels, American and foreign.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Without objection, the matter referred to will be inserted in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Following eight or more American vessels which had been sunk or attacked earlier, in most cases in contravention to international law, these ships also had been sunk following the repudiation of her pledges by Germany:

February 3, 1917, Housatonic.
February 13, 1917, Lyman M. Law.
March 16, 1917, Vigilancia.
March 17, 1917, City of Memphis.
March 17, 1917, Illinois.
March 21, 1917, Healdton (claimed to have been sunk off Dutch coast, and far from the so-called "prohibited zone").
April 1, 1917, Aztec.
March 2, 1917, Algonquin.

Furthermore, no American should forget the sinking of the William P. Frye on January 28, 1915, by a German raider. This act, under normal circumstances, would be a casus belli. The raider, the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, then impudently took refuge in an American port.

American lives lost on the ocean during the war. (See Cong. Rec., 65th Cong., 1st sess.)

American lives have been lost during the sinking of at least 20 vessels, whereof 4 were American, 1 Dutch, and 1 Norwegian. In one or two cases the vessels tried to escape and made resistance, and the loss of life was possibly excusable for the Germans. In the bulk of the cases the destruction was without fair warning and without reasonable effort to give the passengers and crew chance to escape.

Among the more flagrant cases were:

May 7, 1915, Lusitania, 114 Americans lost.
August 19, 1915, Arabia, 3 Americans lost.
September 4, 1915, Hesperian, 1 American lost.
October 28, 1916, Marina, 8 Americans lost.
December 14, 1916, Russian, 17 Americans lost.
February 26, 1917, Laconia, 8 Americans lost.
March 16, 1917, Vigilancia, 5 Americans lost (United States).
March 21, 1917, Healdton, 7 Americans lost (United States).
April 1, 1917, Aztec, 28 Americans lost (United States).

Some on Aztec, probably not American citizens, although she was a regular American ship.

In all, up to declaration of war by us, 226 American citizens, many of them women and children, had lost their lives by the action of German submarines, and in most instances without the faintest color of international rights.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it is sufficient for me to say that eight American vessels were sunk after that declaration of Germany and before the declaration of war by this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And they were flying the American flag.

Mr. KELLOGG. And, as the Senator from Mississippi says, they were flying the American flag.

Sir, there are duties which a nation owes to its citizens and to the world which it can not ignore without danger to its institutions. Are our brave and patriotic young men who are going to Europe to fight our battles to be told they are fighting for no cause; that they are giving their lives that munition makers may reap a harvest; that banking houses may loan money? Is this Congress, this Nation, so sordid that our noble sons on the field of battle are to be sacrificed for these purposes, and all the splendid patriotism and the marshaling of the resources of this mighty Nation are for no honorable purpose? Sir, we owe it to ourselves, we owe it to those brave men, we owe it to history, we owe it to the nations allied with us in this tremendous conflict to place our disapproval before the world of this slanderous accusation.

I have it upon the highest authority that it is not a fact that President Wilson was warned by Secretary Bryan before the sailing of the Lusitania that she had on board 6,000,000 rounds of ammunition, besides explosives, and that the passengers who proposed to sail on that vessel were sailing in violation of the statutes of this country. In fact, Mr. Bryan denies that statement in the morning papers. We have the highest authority for the statement that the Lusitania was not armed, and that she did not carry a cargo prohibited by the statutes of the United States—the authority of a declaration of the State Department of this Nation, made on June 9, 1915, when the Secretary of State sent to the German Government, through Ambassador Gerard, the following statement:

Fortunately, these are matters concerning which the Government of the United States is in a position to give the Imperial German Government official information. Of the facts alleged in your excellency's note, if true, the Government of the United States would have been bound to take official cognizance in performing its recognized duty as a neutral power and in enforcing its national laws. It was its duty to see to it that the Lusitania was not armed for offensive action; that she was not serving as a transport; that she did not carry a cargo prohibited by the statutes of the United States; and that if, in fact, she was a naval vessel of Great Britain, she should not receive clearance as a merchantman; and it performed that duty and enforced its statutes with scrupulous vigilance through its regularly constituted officials. It is able, therefore, to assure the Imperial German Government that it has been misinformed.

And, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests, the man who furnished that information to Bernstorff was afterwards prosecuted for perjury and, I believe, convicted. This solemn statement of the Secretary of State to the German Government has never been successfully controverted.

Neither is it an accurate statement that the passengers who sailed upon the Lusitania did so in violation of the statutes of the United States. I send to the desk and ask to have incorporated in my remarks section 10404 of the Compiled Statutes, which, in substance, makes it unlawful to transport, carry, or convey liquid nitroglycerin, fulminate in bulk in dry condition, or other like explosive on any vessel or vehicle of any description operated by a common carrier in the transportation of passengers or articles of commerce by land or water.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Minnesota will be incorporated in the RECORD.

The section of the statutes referred to is as follows:

SEC. 10404 (Criminal Code, sec. 234). High explosives excluded from certain vessels or vehicles.—It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey liquid nitroglycerin, fulminate in bulk in dry condition, or other like explosive, between a place in a foreign country and a place within or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and a place in any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or any vessel or vehicle of any description operated by a common carrier in the transportation of passengers or articles of commerce by land or water.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it is not unlawful nor in violation of the laws of nations to carry contraband of war or for passengers to ride upon such ships. But, however this may have been, it was not within the laws of nations, within the principles of humanity and justice governing the civilized communities of the world, the right of Germany to sink such a ship without warning and without taking off the crew and passengers and landing them in a place of safety.

Are we as a Nation willing to subscribe to the doctrine that will turn back the wheels of progress for more than 500 years; that will countenance the sinking of ships, freighted with men, women, and children, without warning, upon the highway of nations? Sir, it would be a blot upon the honor of this Nation, which stands for justice, for international law, for right, and for civilization, to consent for one day to such conduct.

But that is not all. Germany did sink our ships and take the lives of American citizens thereon when there was no pretense that they were carrying munitions of war or explosives, and this without warning and in brutal defiance of this Nation and the world. The time came when no self-respecting nation, believing in the principles of self-government and enlightened civilization, could longer ignore this monstrous menace to free institutions. If we believe in the right of a people to govern themselves unmolested by the dictates of arbitrary power; if we believe in the institutions of our own Government and all they mean to us; if we believe in self-preservation, in a peace that shall not make the world an armed camp, it is our duty to prosecute this war, to uphold the national arm until a lasting and honorable peace can be made, based upon these rights.

Sir, I wish here to read the language of the Father of his Country in his first inaugural address. He said:

> The foundations of our national policy will be laid in the pure and immutable principles of private morality. There exists in the course of nature an indissoluble union between virtue and happiness, between duty and advantage, between honest policy and public felicity. The propitious smiles of heaven can never be expected on a union [or government] that disregards the eternal rules of order and right, which heaven itself has ordained.

Mr. President, I have no quarrel with the Senator from Wisconsin or with the principles enunciated by the long line of American statesmen quoted by him who claimed the highest right and privilege of expressing their opinions of the rights of their country when involved in a foreign war. But, Mr. President, this is not a question of free speech. It is a question of an erroneous statement of facts rather than of free speech. I honor that long line of statesmen referred to by the Senator—Webster and his immortal appeal for unity of the Nation; Lincoln, the martyr of our greatest struggle, and many others. Charles James Fox protested against England's war with the French, but when we were engaged in war with Mexico our land was not filled with German spies, interfering with our citizens, stirring up discord and anarchy, encouraging the destruction of property, and plotting with foreign nations. We were not then engaged with the mightiest autocracy the world has ever known and the greatest of military powers for the principles of eternal justice upon which our Government is founded. Sir, I would refer the Senator to the language of President Lincoln addressed to the agitators in Ohio and other States when this Nation was struggling for its existence.

Mr. President, I am as jealous of the right of free speech as any Member of this body or any citizen of this land. It is a right acquired by the struggles of our ancestors for 700 years—since the days of Runnymede—and immutably fixed in our written Constitution; and I believe that the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press are absolutely necessary to human liberty.

I have no right or wish to criticize any man who voted against this Nation going to war, although I may disagree with him. But, sir, we are at war, and I believe men of this body, men of influence, should not make statements tending to aid and encourage the enemy and to cast dishonor and discredit upon this Nation. Imagine, sir, the circulation in the German Empire of these statements reflecting discredit upon our prosecution of the war and sustaining the justice of the cause of the German Empire. Could these people be blamed for believing in a cause, however lacking in justice and right, if these are the reasons which lead us into this great conflict and sustain us through its trying ordeal?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President and Senators, I regret that the address of the Senator from Wisconsin has been made in the closing hours of this session of Congress, so that the minds and labors of Senators are diverted from matters of important public interest to a consideration of the questions which are involved in the views which he has expressed. The greater portion of his address was directed toward the vindication of the constitutional privilege and right of freedom of the press and freedom of speech and to the quotation of mere platitudinous utterances by great men of the past.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin seems to me strangely inconsistent in insisting upon his right, under the constitutional guaranty of free speech, to declare in substance that this Government has entered upon war for no just cause, and to assail the Executive Department of the Government for its manner of conducting this conflict, to assail the legislative branch of the Government for a failure to perform its alleged duty, and even to attack the courts of the United States for their failure to protect the citizens of this country in the enjoyment of their constitutional rights. If it is the right of a Senator of the United States to speak freely upon topics of this character, why should the Senator from Wisconsin or any other Senator entertaining those views denounce newspaper men and other citizens of this country who, in the exercise of the same right of free thought and free speech, have declared that the Senator ought to abandon his seat in the United States Senate and seek membership in the German Bundesrath?

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has sought to justify his attitude in this debate upon the record of Abraham Lincoln and Daniel Webster. It may be recalled that Mr. Lincoln, who introduced the resolution denouncing and criticizing his Government for engaging in the Mexican War and for its manner of conducting that conflict, was defeated for reelection by an Illinois constituency. Daniel Webster is not remembered for the speech the Senator quotes; his name does not linger in the memory of millions of American citizens because of the act of which the Senator from Wisconsin has spoken to-day—that is, because of his criticism of his Government for entering the Mexican War—but Daniel Webster will live in the hearts of the American people as long as men love liberty because he stood in this sacred presence and declared for the preservation of his country and the maintenance of its flag.

It is a singular thing to me, Senators, that a Senator of the United States should consume two and a half hours in denouncing his Government and have not one word for its flag, not one word for the Commander in Chief of the Armies of the United States, not one word for the encouragement of the men who have already been sent to the far-stretched battle fronts of Europe, and who are now upholding with their lives the honor, the dignity, and the safety of this great Nation. If it is a privilege of free speech for Senators to test the patience of their colleagues and the patience of the citizens of this Nation, it is equally a right of other citizens, in the exercise of free speech, to criticize the conduct of Senators.

If I entertained the sentiments which the Senator from Wisconsin has expressed in this presence this morning, I would not wait for the United States Senate to pass upon the question of my loyalty or disloyalty; I would seek the companionship of those whom my discussion and my sentiments are calculated to support.

Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has discussed an address credited to the Senator from Wisconsin, made in St. Paul some days ago. In that address the Senator from Wisconsin is charged with saying that the United States went to war for the purpose of vindicating the right of venturesome citizens to ride on passenger vessels transporting ammunition. I want to know from Senators now assembled whether they believe that is an exercise of the right of free speech. The Senator from Wisconsin is one of the best-informed men in the United States Senate. I want to know from you, sirs, whether or not you believe that was a statement of the conscientious sentiments of the Senator from Wisconsin. If he believes that the United States is involved in this conflict for that cause, or if he believes that is the principal cause which brought the United States into this conflict, his attitude is justified; but where does he get his information?

I propose to tell you to-day, in addition to the incidents that have been recited by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], some of the reasons which forced the United States into this war. The whole speech of the Senator from Wisconsin is based upon the erroneous assumption that the United States declared war against Germany and forced war on her. We did no such thing. The United States recognized a state of war which had already been existing between the United States and Germany for many months, for some years; and that state of war was brought about by the brutal, lawless disregard by the German Government of the rights of American citizens and of the sovereignty of this great Nation. A Senator who can find it in his heart to say, here or elsewhere, that the United States went to war for a trivial cause is, to say the least, lacking in the information which a Senator should possess.

The Senator, during the course of his address, referred to the failure of the courts to protect citizens of the United States in the exercise of their rights as citizens. I was astounded when, in the beginning of his address, he made the statement that Government agencies, acting under the authority of the Executive, are invading the private homes of loyal citizens, are arresting and confining innocent and loyal American citizens in jail, without warrant and without cause; that Government officers are violating every private and sacred right of the people of this Government. Passing over the references made by the Senator from Minnesota, taking the speech just made as the basis of my address, I say to you that while I can not find language within the rules of the Senate to appropriately characterize the sentiments uttered on this floor this morning by the Senator from Wisconsin, if I entertained those sentiments I would not think I had the right to retain a seat on the floor of the United States Senate. I would apply to the Kaiser for a seat in the Bundesrath.

The Senator from Wisconsin has denounced this Congress for failure to perform its duty in passing a resolution which he has introduced. That is Senate concurrent resolution No. 11 introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin August 11, 1917. I think the Senator himself inserted that resolution in the RECORD. I want to call the attention of the Senate to some of the provisions in that resolution.

He says it is designed to bring about peace by forcing the United States and the allies to declare their purposes in conducting this war. One of the purposes to which he declares the United States should commit itself is as follows:

Resolved further, That the Congress hereby declares that this Government will not contribute to the efforts of any belligerent for the purpose of prolonging the war to annex new territory, either in Europe or outside of Europe, nor to enforce the payment of indemnities to recover the expenses of the war.

The correct construction of that language is that it is designed to prevent the allies, in case of victory, from compelling Germany to indemnify Belgium for the misery and desolation which she has so lawlessly brought to that kingdom, for the wreck and ruin which has followed in the path of the German armies as they lawlessly invaded the Kingdom of Belgium. It will be remembered that at the outbreak of the war Germany invaded both Belgium and France. She justified her invasion of Belgium on the ground of alleged military necessity, and the Kaiser promised indemnity at the end of the war. He recognized that he was violating international law. He recognized that he was tearing up treaties and denouncing them as mere "scraps of paper." He said that in order to carry out the military purpose of the German Army it was necessary to violate the sovereignty of Belgium and to invade her, and that when the war was over, Germany would make reparation for that damage.

Germany violated the sovereignty of France. What was the excuse given for the invasion of France? She said French aviators had dropped bombs on the Nuremberg railway line. That statement, like the statement about armament on the Lusitania, was proved to be false. The German who gave that evidence to Von Bernstorff and made that affidavit concerning the Lusitania afterwards plead guilty to perjury. German agencies of high authority have denounced as equally false the statement that French aviators, before the outbreak of the war, dropped bombs on German railway lines.

It will be remembered that the Franco-Prussian War of 1871 was precipitated by the false telegram of Ems, sent by Bismarck. So, in this war, Germany invaded Belgium and France in violation of the law of nations.

I have not language nor time to recite the many brutalities imposed upon the people of Belgium by the German Army. If I could command your attention and express these outrages in language that would accurately define them, your blood would boil in horror. I shall not speak of German wrongs against foreign nations. I shall speak of German wrongs against the United States, which the Senator from Wisconsin and every other Senator here has sworn to vindicate.

The United States was forced into this war with Germany. We have not gone to war. The war has come to us. Before the Congress recognized the existence of a state of war the German Government, with insufferable barbarity and cruelty, had committed many acts of war against the United States. Every known peaceful means was resorted to by the President in his efforts to preserve neutrality, but the rulers of Germany misjudged our prudence and forbearance as cowardice and grew more and more aggressive until it became apparent that we must fight or be destroyed.

In the minds of nearly all our citizens, the question whether the United States was right in declaring the existence of a state of war with Germany has been so completely foreclosed that further discussion of that issue may seem useless. They know that our Government is now at war, and they are willing to uphold the flag without regard to the merits of our cause; but I am not willing to rest the case upon so narrow grounds.

As a Senator, I voted for the resolution declaring the existence of a state of war, and I intend to tell you why I cast that vote. No citizen more than I is imbued with the ideals of peace. My efforts have been contributed toward the establishment of permanent, world-wide peace. It was therefore with reluctance, and only when the path of duty seemed too clear for doubt, that I voted to protect with military force the lives and property of American citizens against German aggressions on land and sea.

The war was imperative from the standpoint of our national safety. Incredible as the statement may at first appear, the German Government planned for war with the United States even before the outbreak of the present conflict in Europe.

Just before the clash of August, 1914, Field Marshal von Edelsheim, of the Prussian General Staff, published in German newspapers Germany's war aim against Great Britain, France, and the United States. Regarding the contemplated attack against this Government, he said:

Operations against the United States of North America would have to be conducted in a different manner from those against England. During the last year political friction with the States, especially friction arising from commercial causes, has not been lacking, and the difficulties that have arisen have mostly been settled by our giving way. As this obliging attitude has its limits, we have to ask ourselves what force we can possibly bring to bear in order to meet the attack of the United States against our interests and to impose our will.

Our fleet will probably be able to defeat the naval forces of the United States, which are distributed over two oceans and over long distances. But it would be a mistake to suppose that the defeat of their fleet will force the United States, with immense resources, into concluding peace.

Considering the great extent of the United States, the conquest of the country by an army of invasion is not possible. But there is every reason to believe that victorious enterprises on the Atlantic coast and the conquest of the most important arteries through which imports and exports pass, will create such an unbearable state of affairs in the whole country that the Government will readily offer acceptable conditions in order to obtain peace.

If Germany begins preparing a fleet of transports and troops for landing purposes at the moment when the battle fleet steams out of our harbors we may conclude that operations on American soil can begin after about four weeks, and it can not be doubted that the United States will not be able to oppose to us within that time an army equivalent to our own.

There is nothing ambiguous or equivocal in this language. It proves conclusively that Germany was preparing to precipitate a conflict with the United States. It is seldom during peace that so offensive a purpose finds expression in such frank language as that employed by Edelsheim.

Not only is it true that Germany planned war upon the United States more than three years ago, but since the conflict began, and before Congress recognized the existence of a state of war, German military leaders declared a purpose to make the United States indemnify the Fatherland for the cost of the war on the ground of our alleged partiality in permitting American citizens to sell munitions of war to the allies. Germany realized that when the conflict with France, Britain, Russia, and Italy was over her resources would be exhausted and her industries impaired. She coveted the fertile fields, the extensive forests, the rich mines, and unlimited resources of our people, and without doubt would have undertaken to reimburse her treasury by indemnity forced from us. Her plan of despoiling the United States originated with Bismarck, who, when asked his opinion of this country, replied:

The United States is a great fat pig, which Germany will one day stick.

It is not important that you and I feel sure this Government could have repelled German invasion and successfully resisted every effort of the Kaiser to collect indemnity. The material fact is that Germany believed the United States was practically defenseless, and therefore after peace had been made with the allies she could make us pay her expenses and losses during the war.

Everyone here knows that the sale of munitions by the citizens of a neutral nation to belligerents is not a violation of the law of nations. Traffic in munitions between neutrals and belligerents has continued throughout the centuries, and its legality has never been questioned by any Government, except, perhaps, when forbidden by treaty stipulations.

Germany sold munitions to our enemies. When the United States was at war with Spain our enemies obtained their principal supply of munitions from German manufacturers. In the Boer War Germany's trade in munitions was profitable with both England and the Boers. During the Balkan War the Krupps received enormous profits from the sale of munitions to the belligerents. It was only when the British Navy had shut Germany out from American ports and deprived her of the ability to secure munitions here that Germany started in the United States a propagandism against munition making.

The Senator from Wisconsin has insisted that the United States ought now to declare the purposes of this war and the terms of peace. The answer to that, Mr. President, is that that is exactly what the Kaiser wants. The authorities of this Government now have proof that more than $27,000,000 have been spent by representatives of the German Government in carrying on that propaganda; and it is unfortunate for the country and unfortunate for the Senator from Wisconsin that he has lent himself, his great talents and his services, to the promulgation of the ideas, theories, and desires of the Kaiser.

Mr. President, not only is it true that the traffic in munitions, as conducted by citizens of the United States with the respective belligerents in this war prior to our entry into the war, was entirely consistent with the law of nations, but it would have been suicidal for the United States to have estopped itself of the ability to secure munitions from other countries in case of war with a foreign foe by declaring the policy that citizens of neutrals shall not sell munitions to belligerents in time of war. It is well known that the United States, at the outbreak of this war, was one of the smallest manufacturers of munitions. It was well known that Germany was the greatest munitions-making country in the world; and for the United States to have lent itself to this German propaganda of forbidding the sale by American citizens of munitions to the allies would have been to deny herself the right of self-defense in case of war with Germany.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has characterized as diabolical the acts of the executive department of this Government in making investigations of those who were suspected of being disloyal to the country. He has said that every private right guaranteed to the citizen by the Constitution is being invaded by the agents of the Government of the United States. Mr. President, the expenditure of millions of dollars by the German Government in the United States, the hiring of countless agents, the placing throughout this land of numerous spies, has made necessary activity upon the part of the Department of Justice and other agencies of this Government in order to protect our country and our people against the iniquitous schemes and devices of those German hirelings. It may be true, Mr. President, that in some instances unnecessary investigations have been made; but I suspect that if the Senator from Wisconsin would produce his evidence here, it would be found that those who made the affidavits to which he has referred in condemnation of his Government are German sympathizers, and some of them German spies.

Let not the Senator from Wisconsin and others be deceived. The great majority of the American people are loyal—loyal to our flag, loyal to the men in the trenches and in the camps, loyal to the President of the United States in every effort to conduct this war to a successful termination; and neither slackers, traitors, nor spies can prevent the consummation of those efforts. If I had my way about it, every spy, proven to be such, would be executed, and every German hireling in the United States would be placed in jail.

The Senator talks about the liberties of the citizen. The liberties of the citizen are imperiled as nothing else could imperil them in this conflict with Germany. The Senator from Wisconsin discloses either ignorance or indifference as to the true facts when he says that this war was brought about by a contention for the right of American citizens to travel on vessels carrying munitions. The German Government not only established a war zone 1,400 miles in length, through which passes three-fourths of all the commerce of the world, and declared that the United States could not continue her commerce in that zone, notwithstanding the fact that the laws of nations for a thousand years have made the open seas the free trading grounds of all neutrals, but Germany declared her purpose to destroy every vessel that entered that zone, whether neutral or belligerent; and in the execution of that lawless threat she sent to the bottom or attacked before the outbreak of this war more than 25 vessels lawfully bearing the American flag, with men and women upon them who were entitled to the protection of the United States. We may differ about the details of our duties as public citizens, but governments are justified principally upon the ground that they secure to their citizens their rights. An American citizen on the deck of an American vessel in mid-ocean is by the law on American territory; and every lawyer knows that when Germany fired upon our flag and killed American citizens on American vessels in the open seas she was outraging the sovereignty of the United States just as much as if she had crossed the ocean and made heard the thunder of her guns at the great seacoast ports of the United States or invaded the mainland of the United States with a Germany army.

What language can characterize the ignorance or the indifference to truth that would place this country, the soldiers in the field, the citizens at home, under the infamous charge of having gone into this war for a trivial purpose, of having gone into this war for the sole purpose or for the principal purpose of vindicating a questionable right? It was no questionable right for the American flag on an American vessel to be upon the ocean. If American commerce had been stopped, the conditions in the United States would have become appalling, and Germany would have been unable to arouse the sentiments for pacificism which talk about the war being unjustifiable and that it ought to be terminated. If Germany had enforced her decree, if American ships had stayed in port as the Kaiser expressly said and the Senator from Wisconsin impliedly says, then a bale of cotton would not have been worth as much as a bale of hay; the value of every American product would have shrunk into nothing; prosperity would have disappeared from the country.

But, sir, it is not on the ground of commercial right, however sacred and plain this may be, that the American people went to war. They went to war in part because it was the duty of this Republic to protect our citizens in the enjoyment of their peaceful pursuits, not on the sea alone but in their homes. Germany not only disregarded the law of nations and sought to destroy the commerce of neutrals and belligerents alike but she sent into the United States spies to arouse and stimulate a spirit of sedition among the people of the United States. Evidence of this is easily obtained. Millions upon millions of dollars were paid out to bribe men to betray their flag. For what purpose? To assist the Kaiser to carry out his will in America. They have prostituted the sacred and holy name of peace in this unrighteous propagandism.

I love peace as much as any man on this earth; but who wants a German peace save a German? In the name of God, is all the blood that has been shed by valiant men, women, and children, is all the blood that France has poured out on her battle fields, are all the sacrifices of Britain, Italy, and Russia to be wasted? Is Germany to be established "over all"?

If the Senator from Wisconsin had his will, if the Kaiser had his will, liberty would become a memory, honor a tradition, and tyranny the ruling power throughout this world. We pray for peace. We will make peace. When? When the army of the Kaiser is rolled back toward Berlin; when from the fields and homes of France and Italy arises the shout of victory, when bleeding Belgium arises from her desolation and cries, "Glory, glory, liberty, liberty, through the combined efforts of the forces of civilization; liberty through the power and wrath of the American people!" God pity the man who comes in the way of this wrath. God have mercy on the men who would paralyze the arm of American power in this great conflict. The American people will show him no mercy.

But, sir, Germany not only sent spies among us and filled the country with hirelings but it sent down into the sunny lands of the South countless hired agents to stimulate the negroes to rise in insurrection and destroy, if possible, the white people of the South. They sent agents into the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Cuba. They sought to lay the South prostrate beneath black domination.

It is not the fault of the German Government that this diabolical scheme failed. It is due to two causes, the fear and the loyalty of the American negro. The American negro knew that to attempt such a foolish thing meant his own destruction and the extinction of his race. But, thank God, that was not the principal cause which induced him to refuse the proffer of the German Government of its assistance in insurrection. The principal cause arose out of the fact that the American negro, North and South, is loyal to the flag of this Republic. He has vindicated his right to the blessings and benefits of our civilization. He is standing to-day loyally beneath the American flag giving up his fortune and his blood to uphold the country's honor. Germany could not induce him to rise in insurrection. What would have followed if she had been successful in that scheme? I leave it to your imagination to portray. The failure of the attempt was not due to Germany; it was due to the negro himself and his refusal to make himself a party to such treason.

But the cruel acts of Germany did not end there. While protesting friendship for us by calling upon the President to use his good offices to bring about peace, while our President was using his masterful resources and his great intellect, while invoking the power and the judgment of the President of this Nation in favor of peace, Germany, with the intention of violating her agreement for a temporary abandonment of ruthless submarine warfare, before seeking a rupture with the United States was planning for an invasion of the United States by Mexico and Japan, and actually offered to give to Mexico those sovereign States, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas, and to Japan the rich domain of the Pacific Coast States was to be parceled out.

Now, the Kaiser and the Senator from Wisconsin talk about wanting no war of conquest, wanting a guaranty from the United States and our allies that whatever the result we will neither profit by nor require Germany to make recompense, and at the same time would leave Germany to enjoy the fruits of victory if she can retain them. That may be free speech. A Senator can say it, a fool can utter it, but it is not patriotic Americanism!

If ever there was a holy war, this is one. Every wrong and outrage that human ingenuity can conceive Germany sought to perpetrate on the United States, and the longer we waited to resent it in the hope that peace might be maintained, the greater was the outrage perpetrated.

We realize that unless we recognized the state of war which she had forced upon us nearly three years ago and unless we did our best to aid the allies in defeating Germany, when peace had come to Europe, when the allies had settled back to their normal activities, Germany carrying out her plans conceived before the war began, would have demanded tribute from this Government, and then on American soil we would have had a conflict which would have excelled in its bitterness and barbarism anything that human history records.

The Senator from Wisconsin on other occasions has had a great deal to say against sending American soldiers to France. Sir, it is better for the American Army to go to France and fight there than for us to wait until the war is over and invite Germany to attack us here at home. Let him who doubts this declaration look for a moment on bleeding Belgium and prostrate Poland. Let him think of the homes that have been laid in ashes; of the beautiful structures devoted to religion and art that have fallen in ruins. Let him think of the women who have been outraged, of the boys whose hands have been cut off that they might never become warriors. Let him think of the men, women, and children who have been deported from Belgium into conditions of servitude worse than slavery. If men can find it in their hearts let them declare that the United States ought to wait until the war is over in Europe and then alone fight Germany here. But the moment they make that declaration in exercising the "right of free speech" let them move and move hastily into German territory.

Mr. President, a part of the propaganda that has been going on in this country has clustered around the declaration that the munition makers made the war. It is found in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin as reported at St. Paul. It has been heard here on the floor of the United States Senate. There never was a sillier or falser statement. The munition makers had nothing to do with bringing on this war, and any man who makes that statement discloses his ignorance or his indifference to the truth.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has treated the Lusitania incident as the sole cause of this war. That conclusion is irresistible if the only report which is available for me of his speech at St. Paul is reliable. I, of course, can not pass upon the reliability of that document, but he is quoted as justifying the sinking of the Lusitania in bold language. This to me is incomprehensible.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE "LUSITANIA."

Warfare, when conducted in accordance with the law of nations, is cruel and destructive. But German warfare is the epitome of barbarism. What language can appropriately characterize the deliberate destruction of a great passenger ship and the sacrifice of 1,500 noncombatant passengers? The Lusitania incident turned the tide of human sympathy throughout the civilized world against the German Government. One thousand five hundred noncombatant passengers, including 125 American men, women, and children, entitled by the law of God and man to the protection of this Nation, deliberately murdered without show of pity. Behold the wreck of the majestic steamer far out at sea and listen to the cries of the dying mingling with the roar of the waves and the crash of the wreck! Look upon the pallid faces of helpless mothers hugging to their breasts their innocent babes and going to their ocean graves unknelled, uncoffined, and unsung! I have no argument that can appeal to any mind which for a moment justifies such cowardly brutality. I will not waste any time in appealing for sympathy to one whose conscience can approve such outrage. I will not argue that the destruction of the Lusitania was an outrage upon civilization. If anyone here is in doubt upon that point he is a fit companion for the lustful Turk and the bloody Teuton and is unworthy of the name "American."

I wish to place in the RECORD a list of the ships bearing the American flag that were fired upon, some of them destroyed, some of them escaping, and others of them damaged. Many American lives were lost as the aggregate result. I wish to place this statement in the RECORD in everlasting refutation of the strangely foolish statement imputed to the Senator from Wisconsin that the United States went to war solely and principally on the demand of citizens for the right to ride on munition-laden vessels. I want to point him to the outrages perpetrated upon our citizens upon the seas and the cowardly injustice and treachery Germany perpetrated in carrying on her system of spies and hirelings, in seeking to incite insurrection among the negroes of the South, in trying to stimulate Mexico and Japan to make war upon this Government and promising as a result rich profits in the way of conquest. I want him to remember this statement. He can talk from now until judgment day if he wants to, but let him answer in his own conscience and in the exercise of "free speech" why he said the United States went to war at the instance of the munition makers to vindicate the right of venturesome citizens to travel on ships carrying munitions. When he made that declaration out in St. Paul, if he did make it, what was his purpose? What was his motive behind it? Men have the right of free speech, but it is the right to speak the truth, and, as suggested to me by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], to the right of free speech is attached the responsibility of truthfulness.

A man's memory may fail concerning trivial events, but when he himself prepares a speech and reads it word for word and letter for letter, when he takes a position that is questioned by a great many of his fellow citizens as disloyal, he ought to speak with some degree of caution and self-respect, and if he states a falsehood, if he leaves an impression that does injustice to his flag or to his President or to the armies which are enforcing the demands of his Government, then in humility he ought to correct it and not in defiance repeat it.

Twenty-four American ships have been attacked by German and Austrian submarines and other Teutonic commerce raiders since the outbreak of the European war and before the United States became a party to it. Of these, eight were destroyed by submarines and one, the William P. Frye, by the German converted cruiser raider Prinz Eitel Friedrich. In addition, one American ship, the Cushing, was attacked by a German airship on April 28, 1915. The list is as follows:

William P. Frye, January 28, 1915. Sunk by German raider Prinz Eitel Friedrich. Crew taken off.

Cushing, April 28, 1915. Attacked by German airship.

Nebraska, May 1, 1915. Torpedoed by German submarine.

Gulflight, May 20, 1915. Torpedoed by German submarine. Proceeded.

Leelanaw, July 25, 1915. Sunk by torpedo and shell fire.

Oswego, August 14, 1915. Fired on 10 times, but made port.

Communipaw, December 3, 1915. Fired on, but proceeded.

Petrolite, December 5, 1915. Fired on by Austrian submarine repeatedly after vessel had stopped.

Seacomet, June 18, 1915. Damaged by mine or torpedo.

Kansan, October —, 1916. Fired on by U-53, leaving United States. Struck mine after reaching other side. Six men injured in mine explosion.

Lanao (Philippine), October 28, 1916. Destroyed by German submarine.

Columbian, November 7, 1916. Sunk by German submarine.

Chemung, November 26, 1916. Sunk by Austrian submarine.

St. Helens, December 10, 1916. Attacked by German submarine.

Rebecca Palmer, December 14, 1916. Fired on by German submarine. Damage light.

Galena, December 15, 1916. Fired on by German submarine.

Sacramento, January 9, 1917. Fired on by German submarine.

Westwego, January 21, 1917. Stopped by German submarine, but allowed to proceed.

Housatonic, February 3, 1917. Sunk by German submarine.

Lyman M. Law, February 13, 1917. Burned by submarine.

Algonquin, March 12, 1917. Sunk by German submarine.

City of Memphis, March 18, 1917. Sunk by gunfire.

Illinois, March 18, 1917. Sunk by submarine.

Vigilancia, March 18, 1917. Sunk by submarine.

Mr. President, it is impossible in a brief address to marshal all the wrongs which Germany has sought to impose on this country. If there ever was a just cause for war, Germany gave the United States such a cause. A man who will not fight when his flag is repeatedly fired upon and his right to be secure on American territory is questioned, a man who will not fight to redress the wrongs which Germany inflicted upon the citizens of the United States when she sought to incite the colored population to insurrection and Japan and Mexico to invasion, a man who will not fight then will not fight even if an enemy invaded his home and ravished his daughter in his presence.

When these outrages were occurring upon the seas the President was successful in inducing Germany for a time to abandon them. Germany promised that her conduct in the future should be governed by international law; that thereafter she would not attack neutral vessels and unarmed merchant vessels or vessels of belligerents without visitation and warning in accordance with the law of nations. It was a great and masterful achievement for the executive branch of this Government to accomplish that. We felt secure when it was announced that Germany had abandoned ruthless submarine warfare. She sought, however, to attach a condition to her purpose and her plans, and stated that the United States must rectify certain wrongs committed by the British Government. The President replied to that conditional agreement that Germany must obey the law without regard to Great Britain; that this was a matter to be settled between this Government and Great Britain; and for nearly a year Germany acquiesced in that statement by the President. But on the 31st of January of the present year Germany gave notice that on the following day all limitations upon the method of conducting submarine warfare would be abandoned and that anywhere on God's great ocean a neutral or belligerent merchant vessel in commerce with the allies would be subject to destruction without visitation or warning.

Let your champions of peace, let your advocates of mercy and of justice justify, if you can, that brutal attempt to abrogate the laws which the customs of men have established after a thousand years of struggles.

When Germany made that announcement the President saw that there was only one alternative to war, and that was to arm American merchant vessels, so that wherever they went under the American flag, if they were wrongfully assailed they might defend themselves.

I have never been able to comprehend the mental processes of the men who thought that the armed neutrality bill under those circumstances was wrong or a violation of the duties of this Government. I have never been able to comprehend that. It was the only alternative of war. If the armed neutrality bill had been promptly passed, in all probability Germany would have realized, despite her expenditure of enormous sums to corrupt American citizenship and to instill the ideas of the Kaiser into our people, that the American people are loyal. Congress had the duty to give American citizens the right to protect themselves when unlawfully assailed on the high seas.

By a filibuster, by a resort to a method which formerly prevailed in the United States Senate, but which has since been abolished by the action of the Senate—by a filibuster advised on the part of the Senator from Wisconsin, who boasted of it in his St. Paul speech as reported in the document I have before me—he encompassed the defeat of the armed-neutrality bill, with almost every Senator in favor of it. Under the absurd, old, and worn-out tradition of unlimited debate in the Senate of the United States, under "freedom of speech," if you please; under the system of debate which is not debate, but the mere foolishness of useless conversation, through a filibuster the Senator from Wisconsin defeated that great measure.

Mr. President, I am glad the day will probably never return when one Senator or a few Senators can accomplish such purposes as that by an abuse of the privileges of the Senate. The right of unlimited debate merely means that any Senator who gets the floor may talk just as long as he pleases on any subject he chooses, and nobody but Almighty God can interfere with him; and the Lord never seems to take notice of him in the exercise of that function. By a filibuster the desire of the American people, the desire of the President, the desire of Congress was prevented from registering itself, and the Kaiser chuckled, for the filibuster did just as well for him as if he, the crown prince, Hindenberg, and Ludendorf had been seated on the floor of the United States Senate. The Kaiser might well have said: "We do not need to be there ourselves. We thwarted the will of the American people. We bought and persuaded enough citizens and their representatives in the United States to prevent the Government of the United States from protecting the rights of its citizens and vindicating its sovereignty."

Congress reconvened and it was apparent to everybody that war was close at hand. We did not declare war on Germany, but simply said the time has come when we must recognize a state of war that Germany has forced on us. We will not go to war, but we recognize the fact that the war has come to us. So we began a systematic preparation for this gigantic conflict. There were those in the Senate here, there were some men in the country who did not realize what the conflict meant. They seem not to realize it yet; but, sir, my opinion is that it meant and still means a test of the strength and permanence of American institutions. It is no time to talk of peace when the Hun is at our gates. It is no time to talk of peace when the Hun is boasting of his victory. The time to talk of peace is when the armies of France, Russia, Britain, Italy, and the United States are driving the German Army back across the Rhine and making Germany feel what ruthless warfare means by imposing on the German people some of the burdens which have fallen on France and Poland and Belgium.

Some have said, and the spirit of the address of the Senator from Wisconsin has been, that we are in an unholy and questionable alliance with Great Britain and France. I have been amazed at the sacrifice and the resolution with which the British people have met this contest. At the beginning of the war Great Britain was totally unprepared and that is the best proof that she was not expecting a conflict with Germany. On the other hand, for 50 years Germany had been arming and training and preparing for the great conflict. German leaders had been investigating to see how they could best strike France and Great Britain and the United States. England was resting in fancied security. When Germany invaded Belgium and France, England went to the rescue, not alone from a spirit of humanity and resentment against outrages that were being perpetrated, but with the knowledge that it was necessary to do so in order to preserve her own existence. What did gallant France do? You may read human history from the beginning until now and you will never find a record of a braver struggle than the French people have made.

I read in a magazine the story of the Count de Pellèport—who is a relative of the wife of a Member of this body—70 years old, descended in a line of nobility for 11 centuries, a democrat at heart. On the evening when war came to France he was sitting in his library. He heard the bells. He said, "I will go forth and find the cause of the alarm." He came back and said, "It is war. I am going to enlist." In other days he might have become a general.

In the earlier days of France, because of his ancestry and his well-known virtues, he would have been given leadership. But he entered the army as a private soldier of France. He said, "I am only a private. My ambition is to be a soldier in the first rank." The French Army is democratic. I would to God some way could be found by which the American Army could be made more democratic than it is; more like the French Army than it is. In the French Army the Count de Pelleport was received with distinction. He bore himself courageously until one day the officer who led a portion of his regiment fell wounded and the count took up the standard and led the soldiers to victory. They made him, not a colonel, not a general, but they made him a private of the first rank in the army of France. A few days later dashing from the trenches toward the German lines bearing the tricolor to the outer works he fell dead with a hundred bullet wounds in his body, and when they examined the wounds they said—the French author reports—they expected to find a coat of mail but only found the coarse woolen shirt of a private soldier in the army of France.

If you know anything, if you have studied history like the Senator from Wisconsin, who bears a French name, however pro-German his sympathies and teachings may seem to us, you ought to rise in pride at the name of France!

Give us a name to fill the mind
With the shining thoughts that lead mankind,
The glory of learning, the joy of art,
A name that tells of a splendid part
In the long, long toil and strenuous fight
Of the human race to win its way
From the ancient shadows into the day
Of freedom, brotherhood, equal right.
A name like a star! A name of light!
I give you France.

Give us a name to stir the blood
With a swifter flow and a stronger flood,
At the touch of a courage that conquers fear,
A name that sounds like a trumpet clear,
And silver sweet and iron strong,
That brings three million men to their feet,
Ready to march and steady to meet
The foe who threatens that name with wrong,
A name that rings like a battle song!
I give you France.

Give us a name to move the heart
With the strength that noble deeds impart;
A name that speaks of the blood outpoured
To save mankind from the sway of the sword.
A name that calls on the world to share
The burden of sacrificial strife,
Where the cause at stake is the world's free life,
And the rule of the people everywhere.
A name like a star! A name of light!
I give you France.

I am proud that, after the passing of the years, the United States, in the vindication of the rights of its citizens, in the protection of our flag and of our people from wrongs and insults by the German Government, has joined hands with the gallant soldiers of France—France who has always been our friend. In the days of the Revolution D'Estaing and Lafayette came with money and with men to uphold the cause of the Colonies; and it was through their contributions largely that victory finally came to the cause of American independence and civil liberty. Now, in this conflict we are fighting side by side with France, with Britain, with Russia, and with Italy.

Germany tried to buy Russia by the same system that she inaugurated in the United States—that despicable and contemptible system of spies, and by stimulating sedition and all shames and crimes known to human history. Germany tried to put them into effect in Russia, and for a time it seemed as if she would succeed. If there is one man in this war who has risen above the wreck of revolutions and above the clouds of battle to everlasting fame it is the Russian Kerensky—Kerensky, the youthful hero and statesman, who has raised the standard of liberty in Russia. The Kaiser, with all his gold, the Kaiser's diplomats, with all their treachery, have not been able to cause him to betray his trust.

If Russia stands and fights to the end, the war will soon be over; the world will be free and enjoying a peace which ought to endure; but if Russia fails then, men of the Senate, it means greater sacrifices on the part of the United States; it means more millions poured into the maelstrom of this great conflict—millions of money and millions of men.

But the failure of Russia, which I do not now anticipate, to bear her part in this great struggle can not bring success to the German cause, for in the end that cause is doomed. Pro-Germans in the United States, hired agencies of the German Government, those who would betray their flag and their country, and those who are foolish enough not to know their duty, had better get to cover. There is no compromise on this issue. There are only two sides to this conflict—Germanism and Americanism; the Kaiser or the President. I want to know where you stand. I heard every word of the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin, and I do not know where he stands. I read his speech as reported from St. Paul, and I do not know from it where he stands. The American people are wondering where he stands.

The hour has come for loyal Americans to assert their manhood. We do not want any half-hearted support of this flag. You had the right to question the wisdom of the war, if in your honest judgment you doubted it, but when Congress passed the declaration of war, then, instead of going about the country and leaving your place on the floor of the Senate, where duty calls you, instead of going over the country, stirring up sedition, and gathering together the discontented elements of the country and seeking to inflame them against your flag, your country, and your President; by God, you ought to stand here and support the flag and the President and help bring victory to American arms!

Mr. President, let no mistake be made. The Congress and the people are loyal to this Government. They do not regard the President of the United States as an usurper, who is trying to take over to himself the prerogatives of Congress and the courts, and as a partner in the house of Morgan and of the munition makers. If that question were left to the people of the United States for a vote to-day they would say that Woodrow Wilson, by his courage, his capacity for leadership, his calm demeanor, his fearless conduct in the hour of peril, is entitled to a place with Washington, with Jefferson, and with Lincoln.

Do not deceive yourselves with the thought that you can organize the disgruntled, semidisloyal elements of the United States and run for the Presidency on a platform of disloyalty. It can not be done. You can not even start the running, much less win. That flag stands for justice—justice at home and liberty abroad. That flag never was lifted in a nobler cause than in the present conflict with Germany. If you can not agree with this statement, for God's sake so familiarize yourselves with current events as to escape the fearful responsibility of misrepresenting your country and its leadership before the American people.

A day of judgment is coming. The duty of every citizen, whether he is an officer or a private citizen, is to support his Government. He has the right to lead a revolution—the God-given right. If I believed, as the Senator from Wisconsin has asserted, that this war was inspired for the benefit of the house of Morgan and by the munition makers, and to guarantee the right of an American citizen to sail on vessels bearing munitions, I would not support the Government. But I can not comprehend how any man, much less a Senator, can make that statement or seek to justify his questionable action on theories of that kind. History belies his statement; every circumstance known to students of current events shows that that declaration is a libel upon the Government which he misrepresents.

We have some duty, my fellow Senators, besides the duty of talking. Some Senators seem to think that there is a paramount obligation to exercise the speaking power, but there come times when men of judgment remain silent. Perhaps I have already talked longer than I am justified, but I have done my duty as I see it. I have no malice toward the Senator from Wisconsin. I am a loyal American citizen, and the fact that I happen for a short time to occupy a seat in the United States Senate has not so inflated my opinion of myself that I conceive I am entitled to disregard my duty and obligations to the people who have sent me here and to the people of this great Republic. With me the first consideration is the honor of our flag and the safety of our Nation. We are fighting in the noblest cause that can inspire human hearts with courage.

E'en now the vanguard gathers,
E'en now we face the fray,
Thou who didst help our fathers,
Help Thou our hosts to-day;
Fulfilled in signs and wonders,
In life, in death made clear,
Jehovah of the thunders,
Lord God of battles, hear.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, we have heard a great deal to-day about freedom of speech. The argument of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] upon that point, I presume, met with the approval and received the indorsement of practically every Member of this body in so far as the general principles which he discussed were concerned. Our boast, of course, is our liberty. For a hundred years and more it has been our boast that we had established a Government as a "sign of the times" for all ages; that we had shown for the first time in the history of the world that a free government could be established and maintained without liberty or license bringing about chaos.

Freedom of speech, of course—the right to speak freely upon matters concerning the people of this country—is guaranteed us by the Constitution of the United States; there is no doubt of that, and no one will question it.

The Constitution of the United States recognizes a status of government—peace upon the one hand and war upon the other. A declaration of war is not a law; a declaration of war is not necessary, Mr. President, to create a legal status of war, as seems to be the impression of the Senator from Wisconsin, judging from his utterances here and from his utterances upon the platform elsewhere, as reported to us. A declaration of war is simply notice to our own people and to the other peoples of the world that war exists, in order that they may take notice and conduct themselves accordingly. It simply means that a certain status exists as between the people of this country, as well as their Government, and the people of other countries; it means that not only are the countries themselves at enmity and in a state of war but all citizens of the respective governments are enemies for the time being of the citizens of the other government. Therefore, when we discuss the abstract question or the particular or special question of liberty of speech in time of war, we must understand it with reference to the status existing.

Mr. President, the declaration of war which was adopted by the two bodies of Congress last April, over the opposition of certain Senators here, simply declared that a state of war existed between the United States and the Imperial German Government because of certain acts of the Imperial German Government, because the Imperial German Government had declared war and was making war at that time upon the United States and the people of the United States; and that was the fact. Germany by its note to us had embargoed our commerce; Germany had said to us that we should not enjoy the freedom of the seas—a right which she maintains now is one of the objects of the great world war which she is waging. Germany had notified us that if we chose to continue as a nation of merchants, as we are, we should place a barber pole upon every ship carrying goods from our harbors to the harbors of other countries. We declared that Germany was making war upon the United States. I deny the freedom of speech of any Senator here, in view of the evidence and the facts in the case, to state the contrary.

I have criticized the President of the United States, and very likely I may criticize him again; but, having armed him with the sword for the defense of this Government, I think it is the duty of every citizen, and certainly of every official of the Government, to stand by him, carrying his buckler and his shield for his defense and that of his country, and I think that any citizen who views his duty in a contrary light must accept the responsibility for his acts.

Mr. President, we have had cited to us a speech that Abraham Lincoln made during the Mexican War. Of course, the correctness of the citation is beyond doubt. The propriety of the utterances, if we may judge them now at this late day, should be judged by the status of the country at that time and by contemporaneous history. The Mexican War was not a war of liberty, not a war of democracy, not a war in defense of this Nation against overbearing attacks. It was a war for territory brought about by the annexation of Texas to the United States. It met with serious opposition; it was discussed from the inflamed standpoint of slavery, one party opposing it on the ground that the objects of the war were to annex territory from Mexico which would strengthen the slave States of the South, and the other party favoring it. It was a war for territorial acquisition, a war for profit, the result of which was the bringing of Texas into the sisterhood of States and the carving out of the territory of Mexico of other States of the Union—New Mexico, Arizona, California, and a portion of Colorado.

A matter of that kind, I may say, in my judgment, was at that time properly discussed, and I may go further and say now, sir, that utterances in criticism of this war and of the acts of the President may be made now in the Senate or in the other House of Congress which are justifiable, but which, when made before some assemblage with no one present to challenge the correctness of the statements made would not be justifiable. I say that if the speech reported to have been made by the Senator from Wisconsin, and which is the subject now under discussion, had been made here in this Hall, such an answer, such a refutation of the statements made by the Senator would have gone out to the public, along with those statements themselves, as would have deprived the statements of any possible effect upon the people of the United States; but unanswered, made, as they were, without an opportunity for answer, unless challenged and answered elsewhere, no more dangerous doctrine has been preached, no more insidiously dangerous utterance has been heard from any source, in my judgment, than that of the Senator from Wisconsin made at Minneapolis.

Mr. President, Abraham Lincoln made the speech to which reference has been made, criticizing the declaration of a status of war existing between the United States and Mexico, and a few years afterwards Lincoln became the President of these great United States. Then Abraham Lincoln, by an arbitrary order, arrested 10 duly elected members of the Maryland Legislature, a Congressman, the mayor of Baltimore, two editors, and various citizens and confined them in military prisons in Boston, and in New York, without a warrant, without authority of law, because they were guilty, in his judgment, of seditious utterances impeding the conduct of the war which Lincoln was then waging as Commander in Chief of the forces of the United States, and instructions were issued that no writ of habeas corpus should reach those men thus arbitrarily deprived of their liberty. Time and again, in the border States, and not only in the border States but in the loyal States of the North, men were arrested arbitrarily, fined arbitrarily, and instructions were issued by Lincoln that his military commanders should not recognize the writ of habeas corpus issued by any court.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FALL. For a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, I will put it in the form of a question, Mr. President.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I can not yield. The Senator has had three hours, and I am only going to occupy the floor for a very short time. I want to treat the Senator courteously and justly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will put it in the form of a question, Mr. President, if the Senator will be kind enough to yield to me.

Mr. FALL. I will; certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Under the Constitution the writ of habeas corpus can be suspended only in case of a revolution or an invasion, and the writ of habeas corpus was suspended at that time. It is not suspended now, and it can not be suspended now. Is not that the understanding of the Senator?

Mr. FALL. No, sir. I will answer exactly, and I think I will correct the Senator.

Mr. President, the writ of habeas corpus was suspended in the State of Missouri, and it was suspended in some portions of the State of Kentucky. It was not suspended in Maryland; it was not suspended in Ohio; and it was not suspended throughout the loyal States of the Union at that time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Did not President Lincoln, in the letter which he wrote regarding the Vallandigham case, put his denial of the right of Vallandigham to any appeal on the ground that the writ of habeas corpus was, within the authority of the Constitution, suspended by the President during a revolution or during a rebellion against the Government or an invasion?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, Mr. Lincoln's answer was directed to certain petitioners who asked clemency in behalf of Vallandigham. That is the letter to which the Senator has reference. It was not a question of appeal, but a question of clemency, in the first place. The President did refer, of course, to his right to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. The President said, I presume—the fact was—that in that case he had recognized the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus by Burnside.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Exactly.

Mr. FALL. The Senator, of course, is familiar with these matters of history. Vallandigham was not arrested under orders from Abraham Lincoln, but he was arrested by Gen. Burnside. He was tried before a military court-martial. He was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary; and the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, had to pass upon the report of the court-martial and either confirm it or disagree to it. He confirmed it in so far as the finding of culpability and guilt was concerned, and he mitigated the sentence from imprisonment to expatriation to the Confederacy, and he did it despite the petition of the gentlemen in answer to which he wrote this letter.

Mr. President, on February 19 and 20 of this year we had under discussion what were known as the espionage bills—some 14 bills, consolidated. I am not going to discuss those bills now; but the general purpose was to arm the President and the courts of this country, the judicial officers and the executives of this country, with certain powers which they did not possess under the law as then existing. I supported those measures, voted for their adoption, and fought upon the floor for their adoption against the Senator from Wisconsin and those who disagreed with me and thought as he did. I said then, among other things, that I owed nothing of a personal nature to the present occupant of the White House, but that to my mind we were even then, prior to the declaration of war, faced with a graver question than was embodied in any pending negotiations between the Imperial German Government, or any other country, and this; that we were not a homogeneous people, with our 100,000,000 inhabitants here in this country; that we have millions and millions who are, or recently were, citizens of the other countries of the world, some of them now engaged in this great world struggle. My idea then was, as it is now, that such freedom of speech as was allowed to Northcliffe, to Lloyd-George, and others in Great Britain, such freedom as is allowed to a senator in France among a homogeneous people, can not be allowed to extend to the point where it constitutes license and may mean sedition in this country, with a population such as we have here. I say to the Senator, if he does not know it, that there is to-day a practical revolution going on in various parts of the country, and that there has been a true revolution recently in some districts of some of the States of this Republic, and that utterances which might be perfectly proper at one time, in my judgment are not proper at the present time. I say to the Senator that in my judgment if he or any other Senator, in exercising his freedom of speech, so exercises it as that it is evidently his intention, or that it is the natural consequence of what he utters, whether it is his intention or not, to embarrass the administration in carrying on this war, then the Senator is not exercising the constitutional freedom of speech which is guaranteed him and to which he has appealed.

Mr. President, I say this with all kindly feeling to the Senator from Wisconsin. I have believed that he was sincere, although I have generally disagreed with him in the matters which he favored during the last five years. I have given him credit for sincerity of purpose. I have believed, as I believe now, that he is in error in certain matters. That was my personal judgment. I did not agree with him upon the revenue and finance bills. I stood here and heard his denunciation of those measures, and I read his denunciation in the speeches which he made in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and one of which, at least, is now the subject of discussion.

The Senator, I think, makes this mistake: Some sincere people become convinced that they are the only honest people. Some sincere people, as the Senator from Wisconsin, conceive themselves to be justified in saying, as the Senator said, that in the passage of the revenue bill recently—where he stood, as he says, with only a little handful fighting for the liberties of the people and a just system of taxation—the actions of the other Senators who did not agree with him in his ideas of the proper method of fighting this war justified him in saying, "Shame upon the Congress of the United States which passed it, and shame upon the President of the United States, because he signed it!"

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Wisconsin, of course, must have some little consideration for me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do appreciate——

Mr. FALL. I yield for a question. I believe, however, I shall have to ask the Senator to pardon me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator permit me to make this statement? It is a very brief one.

The accuracy of a statement which I made in the speech at St. Paul has been questioned here. I had expected that I would have an opportunity to say a few words in conclusion of this debate, and at that time I had expected to be given a chance to lay before the Senate and the country the authority upon which I made the statement. I thank the Senator for giving me the opportunity to say that I shall have to avail myself of some other means of communicating the facts to the public.

I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I must of course conclude very briefly. I should like to have 5 or 10 minutes more than will be allowed me.

To leave the subject to which I have just referred and go back for a moment in order that I may catch up one or two of these broken knots, I want to call attention—particularly the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin, if I did not emphasize it to him before—to the fact that in discussing these war measures or these powers of the President, and in discussing the arbitrary acts of Abraham Lincoln, I had the two things in mind, and was actuated in voting for the war powers of the President of the United States because of the historical facts with relation to the War of the Rebellion. In other words, as the Senator has said, there is no question that when the President of the United States decides that in any portion of this Nation rebellion exists he can suspend the writ of habeas corpus. That right has been conceded him by the courts, although the Constitution itself is silent as to who may exercise the right, whether it could be exercised by Congress or by the President. Jefferson, however, made the precedent.

Mr. President, I believe in establishing civil tribunals which could and would try a Vallandigham. I believe in establishing civil tribunals which would have jurisdiction to try all offenses against this Government during this time of war, and not in relegating those matters to the arbitrary decision of a military court-martial. For that reason I voted for those measures, that the Senator himself might exercise the freedom of speech which he has demanded, and that his right to it might be guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States and enforced by a writ of habeas corpus, and might not be suspended, as was the case with Vallandigham, when he was at first sentenced to incarceration and then exiled from his country. The Senator voted against those measures which provided a civil tribunal for the trial of such cases.

Now, Mr. President, to catch up the other knot for just a moment: I voted against the Senator's proposition to tax the wealth of this country 80 per cent, or the incomes of this country 80 per cent, and for that he cries upon me, "Shame! Shame!"

Mr. President, it is simply a question of difference of opinion as to the proper way to finance this war. The Senator from Wisconsin is proceeding, as he says, in this debate upon the theories advanced by Mill and Adam Smith and other writers upon economic questions. The Senator is discussing and voting upon these matters as though we were again in Great Britain or in France or in Germany or in some other country of the Old World, with all of our natural resources developed, not an acre of timber or a pound of coal in the possession of the General Government, no resources whatsoever except purely the private wealth of the individuals. The Senator forgets that while we estimate our wealth in this country at approximately $187,000,000,000, that estimate is based upon individual wealth, upon the developed farms, upon the factories which are now open and producing, upon the sheep and the cattle which can be counted—that this is the basis upon which the wealth of $187,000,000,000 is fixed; and he votes for a system of finance as though the profits upon that wealth, and that wealth alone, were the only resources of this Government with which to meet the extraordinary expenses of this war.

I voted, sir, that the undeveloped resources of this country might continue to be developed, as they have always been developed, by the excess profits of those engaged in present industry. I voted that when these boys come home from Europe and find their positions filled here in the present business of this country, the great fields of this country might be open to them, that they might find homes, and that they might find occupations; in other words, that the business of this country should not cease simply because we happen to be in war.

Mr. President, I voted as I did because in my State of New Mexico alone the Federal Government owns, according to its own reports, 191,000,000,000 tons of coal—at 10 cents a ton enough coal to raise all the money that we have voted. I voted as I did because we have 300,000,000 acres of public domain in the United States, because we have untold billions of wealth under the ground, because we have 48,000,000 acres of coal lands belonging to the United States, forty-five millions aside from that in New Mexico; because we have in Government ownership, aside from all the privately owned coal resources of the United States, approximately two thousand billions of tons of coal belonging to the National Government.

We have untold billions of tons of iron belonging to the United States Government. We have 160,000,000 acres of forest lands belonging to the United States Government. We have in Alaska, alone, sir, an asset which I will guarantee can be placed with financiers in this country upon a basis that will pay the sinking fund and the interest upon $50,000,000,000 of war indebtedness. It is upon those resources rather than taxing the present industry of the United States, that I would rely for the final payment of this great war indebtedness. I want to say, sir, that not only can we raise and spend this $21,000,000,000 but that rather than sending word to the Kaiser that our people are growing restless under the system of taxation already adopted, we should send word to him that with the natural resources belonging to us, without taxing the people of the United States one dollar, we can carry this war to a successful conclusion if it costs us two hundred and fifty billions rather than twenty-one billions of dollars.

During the delivery of Mr. FALL's speech,

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2531) to prevent the publication of inventions by the grant of patents that might be detrimental to the public safety or convey useful information to the enemy, to stimulate invention, and provide adequate protection to owners of patents, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4897) to provide for the promotion of first lieutenants in the Regular Army and National Guard to the grade of captain, and respecting the Dental Corps of the Army and medical and dental students, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing as one document the three revenue laws, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4897. An act to provide for the promotion of first lieutenants in the Regular Army and National Guard to the grade of captain, and respecting the Dental Corps of the Army and medical and dental students, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5723. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 162. Joint resolution authorizing the expenditure of money upon lands purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

PRINTING OF WAR-REVENUE ACTS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the concurrent resolution, which has just been received from the House of Representatives, providing for the printing of a certain number of copies of the present war-revenue act and the law of 1916 be laid before the Senate for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed as one document the following three revenue laws: The act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, approved September 8, 1916; the act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1917; and the act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, approved October 3, 1917; of which 40,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 60,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the apportionment for the House of Representatives to be distributed through the folding room.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the request of a number of Senators on both sides of the Chamber, I have prepared a statement showing the aggregate appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, the estimated total receipts of the Government for the same fiscal year, the bonds and other Government obligations authorized, and also the percentage of appropriations covering the expenses of the Government to be raised by direct taxation. I ask to have the statement printed in the RECORD without taking the time of the Senate to read it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

The direct appropriations made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, total	$18,879,177,014.96
There have been contracts authorized by acts of Congress, in addition to direct appropriations, to be met by future appropriations by Congress amounting to	2,511,553,925.50
Included in the direct appropriations are the following items that will not be paid out of the appropriations authorized and for advances to foreign countries, which will be paid back to our Government with interest:
The first war-risk insurance act, later repealed	10,000,000.00
The sinking fund never set aside	60,000,000.00
Loans to foreign countries	7,000,000,000.00
Interest on loans to foreign countries	170,000,000.00
Total	7,240,000,000.00
Appropriations made	18,879,177,014.96
Deductions not direct payments for Government expenses	7,240,000,000.00
Actual Government expenses for year appropriated for	11,639,177,014.96
Revenues to be raised under existing laws:
From acts in force before this present extra session of Congress	1,333,500,000.00
From the revenue act passed this session	2,534,870,000.00
From post-office receipts (provision for expenses of the Post Office Department is included in the annual appropriations)	325,000,000.00
Total revenue	4,193,370,000.00
Appropriations for expenses of the Government	11,639,177,014.96
Revenues of the Government	4,193,370,000.00
Balance to be provided for	7,445,807,014.96
The act of Sept. 24, 1917, authorizes an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures of the Government of	3,538,945,460.00
From this it will be seen that the appropriations already made are not covered either by direct taxation or the authorization of a bond issue or other Government obligations amounting to the difference between	7,445,807,014.96
And	3,538,945,460.00
Or a balance of	3,906,861,554.96

The next Congress will no doubt provide means for meeting this uncovered amount.

	Per cent.
The percentage to be raised by direct taxation is	36.02
The percentage to be met by Government obligations	63.98
The percentages raised by direct taxation by other countries involved in the present war, after three years of continuous and bloody war, is as follows:
England	26
France	14½
Germany	14¾
Canada	8
United States	36.02

CONFIRMATION OF WILLIAM D. KYSER.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, in open session as in executive session, to make a favorable report from the Committee on the Judiciary of the nomination for district attorney in the western district of Tennessee. It is to fill a vacancy. Action should be taken upon it before the adjournment of the session. I therefore ask unanimous consent to make the report, and I also ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed in open session as in executive session, on account of the emergency, and that the President be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

William D. Kyser, of Memphis, Tenn., to be United States attorney, western district of Tennessee, vice Hubert F. Fisher, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed. The President will be notified.

IDA COTTRELL HODGSON.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, of course the Senate can readily understand that in the course of these interruptions the thread of my discourse is very much knotted.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. Another knot, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I know he will not object when he knows what I am about to ask.

Mr. FALL. I am sure the Senator from Wyoming would not ask for anything that did not meet my approval.

Mr. WARREN. It is simply for the family of an old employee of the Government who has died. I ask that this bill may be taken up and placed upon its passage.

Mr. FALL. I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 5833) granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am very anxious to favor other Senators, but I have exercised a great degree of patience, I think. I will yield to the Senator from Oregon, but I should like now to give notice that I do not care to be interrupted again.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The President has just sent to the Senate the names of a number of officers promoted under the law that has just been signed by him—Gen. Pershing, Gen. Bliss, Gen. Crowder, and others provided for under the law—and I should like to ask, as in open executive session, that these nominations be confirmed.

Mr. FALL. Unless there is objection from other sources, there will not be from myself, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to considering these nominations as in executive session? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed. The President will be notified.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to report from the Committee on the Judiciary a nomination which the Department of Justice is very anxious to have passed upon?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, of course these nominations are more important than any other matters that could possibly come before the Congress or be considered by the people of the United States. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider, as in open executive session, the nomination which is at the desk.

The SECRETARY. Emmet R. Jordan to be United States marshal for the District of Alaska, division No. 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of this nomination as in executive session?

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MARTIN and Mr. SMOOT appeared, and

Mr. MARTIN said: Mr. President, the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress appointed for the purpose of informing the President that the work of the session has been concluded and that Congress is ready to adjourn unless he has some other communication to make has performed that duty, and the President has informed us that he has no further communication to make to Congress.

THANKS TO THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will yield to me for a minute?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I yield for a vote of thanks to the Vice President.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have the pleasure of sending to the desk a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 150), as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Mexico will yield to me—this will take only a moment.

Mr. FALL. I will conclude in a moment. The Senator will have time if he will allow me to proceed. However, I will yield now, if it is necessary.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 151), as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY, president pro tempore of the Senate, for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which he presided over its deliberations during the present session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

ADDRESS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I suppose the Senator from New Mexico will yield to the Chair for just a moment.

The present occupant of the Chair wants to thank the Senators of the United States for the resolution just adopted, and for the patience and forbearance with which they have dealt at many times with my irascible conduct. I want to assure them that the outbursts that now and then have taken place from the Chair were not real in character. They were simply intended to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that they did have a presiding officer—not one that perhaps they wanted, but one that an ignorant electorate had thrust upon them.

I part with you, and I part with this session of Congress, with mingled feelings of pleasure and of sadness—pleasure in the fact that the proceedings of this session have been practically harmonious and practically unanimous; with a feeling of sadness in that I believe it has become necessary for the American people to engage in a great war. That is a necessity that always saddens every sober man and every man who has a kindly heart. But for myself I may be permitted to say that I think it will be my duty, whenever I am called upon to say anything, to voice my belief in the justice and necessity of this war.

I have been requested by the Secretary of the Treasury to ask that the several Senators, as they go to their homes and address the people upon the duties and responsibilities, the rights and privileges of American citizens and upon the rightfulness of this war, will call the attention of the people to the fact that this war must be fought finally out of the dollars and cents of the American people, and to urge upon the American people the duty of subscribing for this liberty loan.

I wish you all, Senators of the United States, long life, health, happiness, and that greatest consolation which can come to any human being—the consolation of finding out what the right is, and of daring to stand for the right regardless of how much it may cost either you individually or the American people in blood and treasure.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On October 5, 1917:

S. 309. An act authorizing the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, to convey to the city of Port Angeles certain lands;

S. 2434. An act authorizing the counties of Cass and Itasca, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between said counties;

S. 2435. An act authorizing the counties of Itasca and Cass, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said counties;

S. 2623. An act defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe;

S. 2710. An act granting the consent of Congress to Webbers Falls Railroad Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River between the towns of Webbers Falls and Gore, in the State of Oklahoma;

S. 2878. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Waccamaw River;

S. 2922. An act to amend the laws relating to the denominations of circulating notes by national banks and to permit the issuance of notes of small denominations, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918; and

S. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of October salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session.

On October 6, 1917:

S. 2437. An act to provide for the acquisition of an air-station site for the United States Navy;

S. 2774. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Gilmer-Pittsburgh Coal Co. to construct a bridge across the Little Kanawha River;

S. 2203. An act for the establishment of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

S. 2883. An act making further provision for the allotment of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, and for other purposes; and

S. 2938. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River, in Poinsett County, Ark., at or near the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 11 north, range 6 east.

S. 2527. An act authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army;

S. 2531. An act to prevent the publication of inventions by the grant of patents that might be detrimental to the public safety or convey useful information to the enemy, to stimulate invention, and provide adequate protection to owners of patents, and for other purposes;

S. 2663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River;

S. 2916. An act to amend sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, relating to the jurisdiction of the district courts, so as to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State;

S. 2947. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of El Paso, Tex., to construct a bridge across the Rio Grande River within or near the city limits of El Paso, Tex., such construction to be made with the consent and cooperation of the Republic of Mexico;

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, October 6, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast been our refuge and our strength, a very present help in trouble, from the beginning of our Republic, continue, we pray Thee, to uphold, sustain and guide us, in the present crisis which has been thrust upon us. And now, O God, our Heavenly Father, as the extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth Congress is about to pass into history, grant that its work may be well pleasing in Thy sight and redound to the good of mankind. Let Thy blessing be upon the Members of this House, its officers and employees, to keep them and their dear ones in health and strength, that they may come together at the appointed time, fully equipped to take up the arduous duties which wait upon them. And Thine shall be the praise. "The Lord bless you and keep you; the Lord make his face shine upon you and be gracious unto you; the Lord lift up his countenance upon you and give you peace," now and evermore. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMUNICATION FROM SECRETARY OF TREASURY—LIBERTY BONDS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a telegram from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated from Madison, S. Dak., which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Now that Congress is about to adjourn and the Members will return to their respective homes, may I not beg you to invite each and every one of them to speak to their constituents upon the liberty loan and to urge every citizen to invest his available means in the bonds of our Government, the safest investment in the world, and at the same time help provide the means to equip, support, and sustain our gallant soldiers and sailors in this righteous war? Warm regards.

W. G. MCADOO.

The SPEAKER. I think I can assure the Secretary of the Treasury on the part of the House that the Members will not only invest their own money in these bonds as far as they are able to do so but get everybody else to invest. [Applause.]

INTERNATIONAL PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE OF COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, which ought to have been laid before the House some time ago. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 24, 1917.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to my letter of May 4 last, communicating to you the invitation extended by the secretary general of the International Parliamentary Conference of Commerce to Congress to participate in that meeting, which was held in Rome May 1, I now have the honor to inform you that a telegram has been received from the American ambassador in Paris, in which he states that the conference is desirous that the United States send delegates to the coming meeting to be held in Paris from the 11th to the 14th of October, and requests to be informed what decision has been reached by Congress.

Since the receipt of the telegram above referred to a second message has been received from the American ambassador in Paris in which he states that he has been advised that Belgium, England, Italy, Japan, Portugal, Roumania, and Serbia will be represented.

The ambassador is further advised that England is to send a delegation from the House of Lords and the House of Commons; Italy to be represented by Mr. Tittoni, some time Italian ambassador at Paris, and by Mr. Ferrari, who was former minister of state. It appears from Ambassador Sharp's message that discussions of a private character will be held with the presidents of the tariff commissions, and should the United States conclude to participate a solemn session will take place in the senate in honor of the American delegates.

The coming International Parliamentary Conference will be presided over by Mr. Doumer, who is minister of state in the French cabinet.

According to the statement of the secretary general, the conference was founded in the year 1914, at the suggestion of the commercial commission of the House of Commons, under the patronage of the Belgian King, before the declaration of war, and is purely an economic organization and quite distinct from the political congress in behalf of which Mr. Franklin Bouillon is now in the United States for the purpose of extending an invitation to both Houses of Congress.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

The SPEAKER. The communication is referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed.

COMMISSION FROM JAPANESE DIET.

The Speaker also laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State, which, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 26, 1917.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, for your information, a copy of a dispatch from the American chargé d'affaires at Tokyo, Japan, together with copies of the inclosures therewith, reporting that on the 18th instant a party of five members of the lower house of the Japanese Diet would sail from Yokohama for the United States for the purpose of studying general political, social, and economic conditions in this country.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant, (Signed) ROBERT LANSING.

Inclosures: Copy of dispatch No. 827, September 4, 1917, from the American chargé d'affaires at Tokyo and copies of the inclosures therewith.

033.9411–95.

ADDRESS OF JOSEPH W. FOLK.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made at Memphis, Tenn., before the Cotton States Exchange Merchants' Association convention, by the Hon. Joseph W. Folk. It is a patriotic address and is brief.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech by the Hon. Joseph W. Folk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the address referred to:

ADDRESS OF JOSEPH W. FOLK BEFORE THE COTTON STATES MERCHANTS ASSOCIATION CONVENTION, MEMPHIS, TENN., AUGUST 21, 1917.

"The American people are united as never before in a stern and resolute purpose. They were slow to arouse, but in the great heart of the Nation there is steadily awakening that inherent loyalty to American ideals that has carried this Republic triumphantly through every crisis thus far encountered. We have before us a gigantic task, and a task upon the accomplishment of which depends all we have hoped for and striven for during the century and a half of our existence.

"No good American can question the justice of our entering the war with Germany, unless he be ignorant of why we did so. We have viewed for years the preparations for war being made by Germany, little dreaming that they might concern us, though occasionally there was apprehension as to the apparent ambition of the German rulers to be to the modern world what the Roman rulers were to the world of their time. When the day came for which Germany had been so long preparing, she suddenly hurled her tremendous military forces at the adjoining nations. Americans read with amazement of the ruthless violation of the rights of neutrals and the reckless disregard of treaty obligations on the part of Germany, but the war in its beginning seemed remote from our affairs and not necessarily to affect American rights. There were advocates of each of the contending nations among us, and a strict neutrality was maintained. The cruel treatment of the conquered and enslaved Belgians excited our sympathy and aroused our resentment, but there was no certainty then that these acts had the approval of the German rulers, so the American Republic remained neutral, and the American people hoped against hope that America might not become involved.

"As events followed events, and the frightfulness of the German military policy became more and more evident, those among us who sympathized with the German cause were little by little alienated. There was still an undercurrent of hope that we might not be drawn into the terrible conflict. President Wilson endeavored in every way possible, consistent with the national honor and dignity, to avert the disaster of war. On May 27, 1916, he urged the warring nations to state their peace terms, and pledged that the United States would become a partner in any scheme of lasting peace. The answer of Germany was evasive and unsatisfactory. Then came the sinking of the Lusitania and the wanton murder by drowning of hundreds of noncombatant American men and helpless women and children.

"This act was so conscienceless and inhuman, so contrary to all the rules of civilized warfare, that a shudder of horror ran throughout the American Republic, and the few remaining sympathizers with the German cause saw they could no longer continue their friendship for any nation guilty of such deliberate acts of brutality and savagery. The demand came from end to end of the Nation to declare war against this monster which was running amuck among the nations. The President, however, was patient. He hesitated to lead the Nation into the awful vortex of war, and endeavored to save the national honor without that dire necessity. He wrote a note of protest to the German rulers. They promised they would sink no more merchant ships without warning, and for a time it was thought that the crisis might pass, but it was only a hope to those who realized the German purpose of world domination. The President calmly waited, ignoring the malignant criticism and bitter attacks of some of those who insisted that we could no longer honorably remain out of the conflict. As late as January 22, 1917, the President addressed the Senate urging a plan of lasting peace among the nations through international arrangement. A few days thereafter it became known that on January 16, 1917, the German rulers had sent a secret note to Mexico and Japan attempting to unite them in a war against the United States, and promising to give Mexico in turn a part of the United States. Then Germany notified our Government that it would no longer keep its promise not to sink merchant ships without warning. By plain implication it admitted that it had given this promise merely to gain time for preparation for a warfare of hideous frightfulness. What was to be done? Every effort of diplomacy had been exhausted. American ships were being sunk without warning, the American flag was being insulted and fired upon, American men and women were being butchered, the mailed fist of Germany's war lord was being shaken at American institutions. German spies infested our country, endeavoring to incite discontent, strikes, and even civil war. It was plain that the German autocracy regarded this Republic with contempt, and its entrance or nonentrance into the war as a matter of indifference. National honor and national safety demanded that something should be done. Submission to such wrongs would have been unpardoned national cowardice. Only one thing could be done, all other means having been exhausted. The American people then realized that if the German autocracy should overcome the European allies our turn would be next. We had to fight to save our honor, to save our national existence, and to save democracy throughout the world, for democracy and autocracy can not exist side by side. A state of war was recognized by Congress, and thus reluctantly we were brought into the world conflict after the President had done everything that could fairly be done to avoid the catastrophe. Now that we are in the war we see, with clearer vision, that it was inevitable that we should go in for it is our war as much as the war of England or France. It is a war to preserve our rights and our liberties as much as theirs.

"It is now evident to all thinking Americans that Germany must be conquered or else Germany will conquer us along with the rest of the world. There have been many fights for freedom since the beginning of history, but they were merely local, while this is universal. There have been many wars for the liberty of a race, while this war is for the liberty of all mankind. Other wars have been waged to free one people, while this war is not only to keep ourselves free but to make free humanity of every race and of every creed. The outcome will determine whether the world will be all democratic or all autocratic, whether government of the people and by the people shall obtain throughout the earth or shall perish everywhere. We are at war with Germany because there is an irreconcilable conflict between the ideals of this Republic and the dominating purposes of the German autocracy. If our ideals do not prevail, then the German autocracy will prevail over us. We are fighting Germany because of outraged Belgium, invaded and enslaved; because of France, unjustly and barbarously assailed and attacked; because of Russia, just emerging into the light of democracy and just freed from the shackles of tyranny; because of England, from which came our laws and civilization, and whose early entry into the conflict prevented that victory for German arms which would otherwise have been certain, thus saving us from the terrors of German militarism. We are fighting Germany because the success of Germany would mean the end of freedom here and everywhere. America can not remain free if Kaiserism wins. If Germany should triumph over our European allies, we would have to battle single-handed with a victorious Teuton autocracy, determined to conquer and subjugate the world.

"For 40 years Germany has been building up a military machine, the central thought of which has been world domination, and this terrible world calamity of blood and misery is the result of this aim of the German autocracy.

"Germany's method of warfare, in the sinking of merchant ships without warning, in the drowning of helpless women and children, in bombarding unfortified cities, in lurking like assassins beneath the waters and in the air, ready to strike and murder the unarmed, the unsuspecting and the helpless, has evidenced a savagery and brutality such as the world has never known before. Humanity will find it difficult to forgive, and history impossible to forget. Germany is the outlaw among the nations, tramping under foot every obligation of international law, threatening every ideal dear to the hearts of freeman, and the world will not be a safe place for liberty until the German autocracy is overthrown and crushed forever.

"We would have lost the respect of mankind and our own self-respect had we failed to take up the gauntlet so insolently thrown in our face by the German rulers. We are fighting for our own freedom and for the freedom of all men during all the years to come. It takes fighting to make the people free and more fighting to keep the people free. We want no conquered territory; we desire no indemnity. The mission of America in this war is to free mankind by enthroning justice and brotherhood in the hearts of men everywhere. We are fighting Germany in order to secure the permanent peace of the world, which is impossible as long as the German military system is allowed to exist, for there can be no enduring peace until further criminal aggressions against the other nations by the German autocracy have been rendered impossible. The same reasons which impelled us to enter the war must force us to keep up the war until its objects have been accomplished, for an inconclusive peace now would merely mean a death struggle later on between American ideals and an unconquered German autocracy.

"A truce now would be compromise, and there can be no compromise between liberty and tyranny. A truce now would be surrender, and surrender would be defeat. James Russell Lowell wrote these words in the long ago, and they come to us in the present crisis with a new and deeper meaning:

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
* * * * * * *
Hast thou chosen, O my people, on whose party thou shalt stand,
Ere the Doom from its worn sandals shakes the dust against our land?
* * * * * * *

Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record
One death grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne,—
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

"Before we entered the war Americans had a right to be neutral as between other nations. Now that we are in no American can be neutral. The American who is neutral now is guilty of treason to the Republic. The American who is not for his country in this war must be counted as against his country. Whatever our internal differences may have been, in such a time as this we must be one people, loyal to a common country and devoted to a common flag. Any man or woman unwilling to render whatever service he or she may be called upon to give in this great hour is unworthy to be an American citizen.

"Millions of America's sons have answered to the Nation's call. They should have the full support of heart and soul and spirit of all American men and women; for in the name of America and in behalf of America they are going forth to battle in order that American honor may be sustained, American freedom preserved, to make the world safe for the common man and to make international justice supreme. The withholding of such support by any individual or organization is disloyalty to the Government and treason to the flag. In this crucial test of the fiber of the American spirit the future historian, I believe, will record the full fidelity of a great people to the principles of liberty and justice which America's sons are upholding on land and sea.

"The man in the White House who is guiding the destinies of this Republic in these troublous times with such a clear head and steady hand should be upheld by all who claim to be Americans. If I interpret American sentiment correctly, no President in our history has had the American people so solidly behind him as the people are behind President Wilson to-day. Supporting the President, and giving him inspiration, are the mighty hosts of American freemen, willing to serve and to sacrifice for the honor and safety of the Republic.

"This is the supreme hour in the life of this Republic and of the world. A new economic and social order is emerging in every land and a new internationalism is being produced by the blood and suffering of mankind. The ending of the great war in the only way it can rightly end will mark the beginning of a new epoch of world cooperation for the advancement of the common good. The public will no longer be the people of one section or of one nation, but all mankind, and the principles of humanity will then be applied between nations as they have long been applied between individuals. And why not? The inventions of the past few years that have annihilated time and space, and brought distant parts of the earth in touch with each other, have created new obligations in the relations of the nations. The civilized countries are nearer together in point of time and communication than were the States of this Union a century ago. No nation can live to itself and for itself alone. The time of the hermit nation is past. What each nation does affects in some degree the people of all other nations. These new conditions make it appropriate that the rights of nations throughout the earth be recognized and enforced by the common will through federated action. If there shall be born from the agony of Europe's battle fields an irresistible demand for some international arrangement to maintain the permanent peace of the world, the sacrifices of blood and treasure will not have been in vain.

"Men now living may see the day when the world will be ruled by right instead of might, by justice instead of selfishness. Men now living may see the time when the ideal of public right will be supreme throughout the world. Out of the black clouds of war that now envelop the earth may come a greater realization of the necessity for an international court of arbitration, with power to enforce its decrees. Then will dawn that day foretold of old, following the last great battle of the world, when there will be peace on earth and good will in the hearts of the children of men. The mission of America is to educate the world to this desired consummation. To fulfill this mission there must be loyalty and devotion to the ideals of America among the people of America. It is the mission of America by practical example to enlighten the world not only as to the rights of men but as to the duties of men toward their fellow men.

"The democracy that we are fighting for is the religion of brotherhood among men; the religion that says, 'Thou shalt not lie; thou shalt not steal'; the religion that demands the application of the Golden Rule in public and private life everywhere; the religion that does not array class against class, but preserves the rights of all, by causing each to respect the rights of the other; that equalizes conditions, not by dragging down those who are up but by lifting up those who are down; that does not attack wealth honestly acquired, but wages unending war against conditions that create poverty; that protects property rights, but recognizes the fact that property rights should never be inconsistent with human rights; that seeks more government by the people, not less government by the people; that gives to each man an equal opportunity to live and to labor upon the earth that God has given to all, and to enjoy untrammeled and unrestricted the gains of honest toil; the religion that means more of service and less of selfishness.

"The capacity of a people for self-government is to be determined not by the extent of a nation's dominions, but by the happiness and welfare of the average individual. It is the average man for whom America stands and for whom this Republic has become the torchbearer of liberty for all mankind. We may not attain the ideals of democracy any time soon, but we can strive for them, with the assurance that this endeavor will lead us up the heights of achievement, and at last we may come to the summit, where there shall shine unobstructed the light of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Then the standards of the nations will be grouped in everlasting friendship, and above all will be our flag, with its ideals realized.

"She's up there, Old Glory, no tyrant-dealt scars,
No blur on her brightness, no stain on her stars;
The brave blood of heroes hath crimsoned her bars.
She's the flag of our country forever."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 4897) to amend section 10 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 730. An act granting certain coal lands to the town of Kaycee, Wyo.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 99) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within one year from the date of entry into the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 149.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses having completed the business of the present session are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 5723) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the words "of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election" as the same appear on page 30, lines 26 and 27, and lines 1 and 2, on page 31.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 99. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the entry of distilled spirits into bonded warehouses under bond, conditioned for the export of such distilled spirits to some foreign country within one year from the date of entry into the United States;

H. R. 6363. To provide for the service of officers of auxiliary naval forces on naval courts; and

H. J. Res. 116. For the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy.

FORFEITURE PROVISION OF LAND LAWS.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the committee and take from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration the bill S. 2918.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2918. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2918) providing that the forfeiture provision of land laws shall not apply in the case of persons in the military or naval service during the present war.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, yesterday afternoon, when this bill was called up for consideration under unanimous consent, it was objected to. Now, what is there about the bill to-day that is different from what it was yesterday?

Mr. MAYS. The objection was made yesterday, I will say to the gentleman, because there had been no formal action by the Committee on the Public Lands of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that the only objection?

Mr. MAYS. That was the only objection made at that time, except some suggestions of amendments that ought to be made, to which the Members interested in the bill have consented. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] offered an objection for the time being, and we have had a conference in the Committee on the Public Lands of such members as could be gotten together.

Mr. MADDEN. How many were here?

Mr. MAYS. Five members of the committee were present.

Mr. MADDEN. I am going to object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the resolution just brought from the Senate, correcting the text of the war-risk insurance bill, I wish to have acted upon immediately so that the bill can be enrolled.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of it?

Mr. SIMS. I have not got it. It is at the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a Senate resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 5723) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the words "of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured, or be otherwise made at his election," as the same appear on page 30, lines 26 and 27, and lines 1 and 2 on page 31.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, if there is no objection, I ask that the House concur in the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate concurrent resolution.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Speaker's desk a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina presents a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 172.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker, to join a similar committee to be appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The SPEAKER. Is that a House resolution?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Here is a Senate resolution already passed.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then the Speaker can just appoint the Members.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman's resolution has not passed.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then I call up the Senate resolution. I should think, however, that the House resolution is the proper one.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Do not both the Houses pass separate resolutions?

The SPEAKER. I believe that is correct. The question is on agreeing to the House resolution.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as members of the committee Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. GILLETT.

IDA COTTRELL HODGSON.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5833.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5833. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5833) granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a private pension bill, is it not?

Mr. BRAND. No; it is not a pension bill.

Mr. WALSH. Is it a gratuity?

Mr. BRAND. It is a six months' allowance or gratuity. It goes to every beneficiary of any dead soldier—private or officer—of the Regular Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired, is hereby allowed an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Frederick Grady Hodgson was receiving at the date of his death.

SEC. 2. That said Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired, as aforesaid, be paid out of the Treasury of the United States a sum of money or an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate said Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, was receiving at the date of his death.

SEC. 3. That the payment of the amount of money hereby allowed and authorized to be paid to said Ida Cottrell Hodgson is authorized to be made from the appropriations for beneficiaries of officers who die while on the active list of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the question of fixing the price of coal and the implements used in its production.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the subject of fixing the price of coal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a résumé of the war activities of the several departments of the Government, prepared by the Committee on Public Information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing some matter sent in by the Committee on Public Information as to the activities of the various departments of the Government in the war. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a patriotic resolution adopted by the Oklahoma State Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing certain patriotic resolutions. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I did not hear by whom these resolutions were adopted.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. By the State Federation of Labor at Oklahoma City.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

MEDICAL AND DENTAL SURGEONS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 4897, with Senate amendments, and move to concur in the Senate amendments. That is the bill amending section 10 of the national-defense act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4897, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4897) to amend section 10 of the national-defense act, approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to concur in the Senate amendments. Is there objection to considering them?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, let them be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what is the effect of the Senate amendments?

Mr. DENT. The only substantial effect of the Senate amendments is that they create a Dental Corps. The Senate practically adopted the House bill, which the gentleman will recall—the bill authorizing appointments in the Medical Corps without having had five years previous service as first lieutenant. That was the construction given to the national-defense act. The Senate adopted the House bill with this amendment. The Senate puts in the words "first lieutenant," whereas the House bill just had "lieutenant." The material amendment of the Senate creates a Dental Corps and gives to the Dental Corps the same corresponding rank and grade as the Medical Corps under the jurisdiction of the Medical Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the substance of the amendment under consideration?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that is the amendment that is now under consideration?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In listening to the amendment I understood that it also extends exemptions to dental students under call, the same as to medical students.

Mr. DENT. It does.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am sure all of us have received a great number of letters from students in dental colleges, and that is the purpose of the amendment now to be adopted?

Mr. DENT. That is one purpose. I will state to the gentleman that the Dental Corps now has no standing corresponding to the Medical Corps.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is to allow dental students to complete their college courses?

Mr. DENT. That is one of the purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to say that I think this is a very important bill, and that it ought to become a law. In war time there will be a great many calls upon the Dental Corps for oral surgery, so that it seems to me of vital importance that there be a Dental Corps corresponding to the Medical Corps. Then, further, a dental surgeon now, however lucrative his practice may be, when he goes into the Dental Corps as now constituted, must wait for several years before he can be more than a lieutenant. This simply places these dental surgeons upon the same footing as are the doctors.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that this Dental Corps is not merely for the emergency, but for all time.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand it is only for the emergency.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether the creation of this Dental Corps is merely for the emergency?

Mr. DENT. It is permanent.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I misunderstood.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought it was to dignify the Dental Corps the same as the Medical Corps.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it ought to be. I think this ought to be permanent.

Mr. STAFFORD. What salaries will these members of the Dental Corps receive?

Mr. DENT. Salaries according to their rank.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the highest rank a member of the Dental Corps can attain?

Mr. DENT. The rank of a major.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this subject been considered at all by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. DENT. It has; and my information is that the Surgeon General's Office are not opposed to this legislation. They objected to it being on the House bill, for fear that bill would lose out in the closing hours of the session. That was the only objection that the Surgeon General had, but as an independent measure I understand from his office that they have no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the matter ever been formally brought to the attention of the House Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. DENT. It has, time and time again, but no formal action has been taken.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been only a few years since the Dental Corps had any sort of standing whatever in the Army, and it has become more and more important.

Mr. DENT. Under the present law a dental surgeon must serve 24 years before he can become a major.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is certainly a very questionable practice, in the closing hours of a Congress, to create a Dental Corps for all time, without the subject ever having been considered by a committee of the House, and never having even received the formal indorsement of the Surgeon General of the Army. The only assurance we have from the chairman of the committee is that he thinks the Surgeon General is not opposed to it.

Mr. DENT. I know he is not.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no question about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object for the time being.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. DENT. Then I move to take the bill from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not do that, because it places a charge upon the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. DENT. Then I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that, because the Senate has not yet passed the adjournment resolution.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has passed the adjournment resolution.

The SPEAKER. When?

Mr. KEATING. About 10 minutes ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no official knowledge of that fact. No message has been received. We are not running on grapevine information here. [Laughter.]

The SERGEANT AT ARMS. Mr. Speaker, a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to House concurrent resolution 25, providing for the adjournment of Congress at 3 p. m. to-day.

MEDICAL AND DENTAL SURGEONS.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table House bill 4897, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] 20 minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will not be defeated because the Senate has tacked on this amendment in the closing hours of this session of Congress. This bill passed the House on June 25 last. Neither the House nor the Committee on Military Affairs is responsible for the delay in the passage of the bill by the other body. If this bill fails of passage it means that many officers lately in the National Guard, who were in the service as captains, who had the rank of captains in the National Guard, will have to serve in the Army of the United States after being called into the Federal service only as first lieutenants, because under the construction of the national-defense act every man in the Medical Corps has to have at least five years' previous service as a first lieutenant before he can receive the rank of captain.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Members of the House should understand that the provision regarding the Dental Corps is not by any means the only provision in the bill, and if the bill is refused a passage at this time the other provisions of the bill will be lost as well as the dental provision.

Mr. DENT. That is the point I am making. I said in the beginning that I hoped the bill would not be defeated because the Senate had tacked on an amendment creating a Dental Corps. I can not see any harm in that provision creating a Dental Corps.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. GORDON. What is the report of the Surgeon General of the Army with reference to the necessity of a Dental Corps as compared with the Medical Corps?

Mr. DENT. The Surgeon General, like every other medical man, considers that the Medical Corps is more important than the Dental Corps.

Mr. GORDON. Has he not said that there is a demand in the service for only one-sixth of the number of dentists as compared with medical men?

Mr. DENT. I do not remember the proportion, but probably the gentleman's memory is more accurate on that point than mine; but under the law as it now stands there are seven medical officers and one dental surgeon for every 1,000 men. That is in the Hay bill.

Mr. GILLETT. And how does this change the law?

Mr. DENT. Under the present law dental surgeons are appointed and under the jurisdiction of the Surgeon General of the Army. There is no such thing as a separate dental corps. This changes it so as to create under the Medical Department a Dental Corps.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Would this increase the number of dentists in the Army?

Mr. DENT. Not at all; not as provided in the national-defense act.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. The number would remain the same.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. How would it affect the number of officers in the Medical Corps?

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman mean whether it would increase the number? It would proportionally, according to the increase of the Army, but that could not be helped.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. KEATING. It has been suggested to me that one proviso in the amendment might be construed to apply to dentists in the Navy—the provision that no dentist shall be commissioned who has not been confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. DENT. I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to that. It has been called to my attention by several Members of Congress over the phone. I took occasion to read the RECORD, and I can not see how by any possible construction that effect could be given to the language.

Mr. KEATING. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. The act originally provided for the appointment of captains in the Medical Corps. An amendment was offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] providing for the creation of a dental corps, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] offered an amendment to that amendment that no dental surgeon shall be recommissioned until confirmed by the Senate. The Pomerene amendment relates exclusively to the dental surgeons in the Army, and therefore the amendment to the amendment relates to the surgeons in the Army and could not by any construction include surgeons in the Navy.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. What is the rank for dental surgeons now in the Army under the present law?

Mr. DENT. They are ranked as lieutenants, captains, and majors. A dental surgeon can not become a captain until he has had at least five years' service as a first lieutenant. A major has to have 24 years'.

Mr. DENISON. Are there no captains and majors in the Dental Corps?

Mr. DENT. I think there are no majors.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there are some majors.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. There are no majors; but six captains.

Mr. DENISON. Will the rank of these officers be changed by the provision of this act?

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman mean will they be raised to a higher grade?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. DENT. They will not; it creates a separate corps and gives the dentists the corresponding rank of the medical department.

Mr. DENISON. Will the man at the head of the corps have a higher rank?

Mr. DENT. Not at all; he will not have to have the previous service.

Mr. DENISON. Will the compensation of the dentists in the Army be increased by this act?

Mr. DENT. I do not see how it can possibly be so.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The amendment provides that the rank and pay and promotion and allowance of officers in the Dental Corps shall be of the corresponding grade of the Medical Corps. Would not that indicate that there might be in the Dental Corps a rank higher than major, that they might rank as high as any man in the medical department?

Mr. DENT. I have not read that carefully. I wish the gentleman would repeat that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Who shall have the rank, pay, promotion, and allowances of officers of corresponding grades of the Medical Corps.

Mr. DENT. I presume it would. I was mistaken about that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not think they have been created yet, but it might provide for the creation of colonels.

Mr. DENT. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, here we have an instance of the worst possible practice in parliamentary procedure, namely, the passing of legislation in the closing minutes of the Congress which neither a committee of the Senate nor a committee of the House has formally considered. A simple bill introduced into the House in May last and passed on June 25 changed the national-defense act merely in one minor particular, so as to permit those attached to the Medical Corps of the Regular Army and the National Guard to be eligible to promotion to a captaincy upon such examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War. It was represented, and properly represented, that many doctors in the National Guard who held the rank of lieutenant were not receiving sufficient compensation, and that it was wrong for them to be held back and retained in that position of lieutenancy when they were capable of filling the grade of captain. This bill goes over to the Senate, and, as we all know, because of conditions existing in the Senate important amendments are often hurriedly introduced from the floor of the Senate. One of the amendments adopted changed the Army reorganization act, an act which was as thoroughly considered by a master mind of military affairs, a man who knew all of the details and who framed that act not merely for times of peace but also for an army in time of war. That act made no provision whatever for the creation of a Dental Corps. It did create a Medical Corps. The Senate has attached an amendment providing for the creation of a Dental Corps, which has only one purpose, namely, to raise the grades of men now assigned to these various positions in the Army so that they may receive higher pay and rank. Following the profession of medicine and surgery is one thing. It is necessary at all times, even in times of peace, to have a well-organized body of eminent surgeons and pay them proper salaries so that as the years go on they will be retained in the service rather than resign; but that same argument does not apply to a Dental Corps. There is no such necessity for having high grades apply to these men who are dentists.

I can not conceive of any worse practice than this. One member of the Military Affairs Committee, who gives matters as much attention before his committee as any man can, asks questions of the chairman of the committee which show that he is not as fully informed about the particulars of this bill as he would like to be. I refer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

How can other Members who have not the technical knowledge necessary to follow this legislation pass intelligently upon this amendment? If the rules were not suspended, this amendment, because it makes a charge on the Treasury, would have had to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. There is no urgency about this proposition. We will be in session again within two months. Even if the provision which was sought originally to correct conditions in the Medical Corps should be held in abeyance for two months it would not be as long as the Senate has been holding it up, because this bill passed the House on June 25. The Senate did not consider in all of these months there was any urgency even in that particular. We can correct that condition when the House meets again by passing a proper provision. When you adopt this practice of allowing some interested Senator in some project, without even the recommendation of the head of a department, to tack on an important amendment and have it ushered over here and submitted on the spur of the moment, without even the committee or any other Members of the House having time to consider its merits, you are passing legislation in a very loose way, and of a character which I for one will protest against as long as I am here. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I am inclined to think that many of us would concur in the criticisms that have been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] with regard to the fact that this amendment has been brought in so late in the session. However, I think the criticisms that are made upon the substantive parts of the bill are not well-founded. This matter has been under consideration both in the House and the Senate. It has received the consideration of the Committee on Military Affairs. It has the approval of the Surgeon General's Department. There is nothing asked that is extraordinary in its nature or character. We must have these dental officers. They are already provided for. The only question raised here is as to whether or not they shall occupy the anomalous position of being a part of the Surgeon General's Department, a part of the medical staff, or whether they shall have a distinctive position which shall still be under the Surgeon General's Department, but which will be separately recognized as a dental department. That, it seems to me, is entirely a matter that ought to be approved by the House, but that is not the most serious question. If we vote down the passage of this bill it will not only kill that provision but it will kill the whole bill. Certainly the provisions of this bill are important enough now that they should be passed at this session. It is an emergency act. Its provisions are important, and we should pass it at this time. I presume there has not been a single bill passed to which objections could not be made.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. In just a moment. But we are not given, Mr. Speaker, to making criticisms that we are not justified in concluding are vital when opposing necessary war legislation. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman says that this is an emergency measure and was so important that the House passed it on the 25th of June, and the Senate held it up until now.

The SPEAKER. Neither gentleman is in order in criticizing the Senate.

Mr. TOWNER. I said if it was in order.

Mr. GORDON. This is giving the House's opinion of the Senate's judgment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but the rule is that gentlemen must not reflect on the Senate or Senators.

Mr. TOWNER. I think, Mr. Speaker, we have no justification now in delaying the passage of this bill, and I hope that the objection raised will not be considered as of sufficient merit or weight to prevent the passage of this bill. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I do not like this way of enacting legislation myself. Now, I did not intend, Mr. Speaker, to criticize the Senate. I was simply calling attention to the fact that in their judgment this bill, which we passed on the 25th of June, was not of such very great and pressing importance in the prosecution of this war, or they certainly would not have held it three or four months, until the closing hours of a session, when they could tack this on under suspension of the rules. Now, it has been said, it has been reported, that the Surgeon General has no objection to this amendment. If that report is correct we have received no communication from the Surgeon General upon that subject. We are creating brigadier generals and colonels in this Congress at a rate that has never been known before in this or any other country, and I tell you, gentlemen, it is time to call a halt on such legislation. As has been said, if this legislation is so important that we have got to create a Dental Corps and place it upon the same basis, with the same number of colonels and brigadiers as the Medical Corps of the Army has, it seems to me that we ought to have a formal communication from the Surgeon General of the Army upon that subject to lay before the membership of this House. I think this bill had better be defeated than to allow it to go through with this rider upon it at this time. Congress will meet again on the first Monday in December, and if this legislation is important and urgent, Congress can then enact it; and I do not think we ought to create here a corps, provide for a great lot of high-salaried officials, and undertake to place the Dental Corps upon the same basis as the Medical Corps of the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin expect to use some more time?

Mr. STAFFORD. I may; but I am willing to allow debate to close now.

Mr. DENT. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LINTHICUM). The question is on suspension of the rules and agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the rules were suspended and the Senate amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. DENT. I make a point of order that that comes too late.
Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair has not even decided.
Mr. LANGLEY. The Chair announced that the ayes had it.
Mr. STAFFORD. Upon the presentation——
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw the demand?
Mr. STAFFORD. On the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, I withdraw the demand.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended and the amendments are concurred in.

LAND FOR USE OF ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which he sends to the Clerk's desk, and which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 162) authorizing expenditure of money upon land purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

Resolved, etc., That section 355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to the expenditure of appropriations for the Ordnance Department of the Army now available for the purchase of land and for improvements upon such land.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a second.
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kentucky has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois has 20 minutes.
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, section 355 of the Revised Statutes provides that, before land shall be purchased or money expended in improvements on such land, the title shall have been certified to by the Attorney General of the United States and the consent of the State to the acquisition of the land shall have been given.
That is the sum total of the effect of section 355 of the Revised Statutes. Now, in the consideration of a number of matters heretofore, this Congress has waived the requirements of that section, and we had believed in the passage of the deficiency bill that we had taken care of such cases where it was necessary. But there has come to my attention this morning the fact that there are a number of purchases of land that have already been authorized to be made that could not be made without great delay if the requirements of this section were not waived. The resolution as drawn will not enlarge in the slightest degree the power of the Government to buy land or make any money available to buy land which is not now available, but it does permit moneys which have been appropriated for the purpose of particular pieces of land for particular purposes to be expended, and the land acquired and the buildings erected on it, without waiting for the certification of the Attorney General or the permission of States. Most of the States have passed general statutes touching such matters, in compliance with section 355, but some of the States have not. And in order to prevent delay this joint resolution is now presented.
Mr. TALBOTT. One moment. You have in mind the proving ground——
Mr. SHERLEY. No, I have not; because the proving-ground provision has already been taken care of by language carried in the deficiency bill, which is now a law. And I will say, to relieve any apprehension the gentleman has in mind, there is no contemplation in any way of taking Kent Island.
Mr. TALBOTT. I am not talking about Kent Island. I am talking about something else.
Mr. SHERLEY. We have made provision for the acquirement of land without regard to section 355 for proving grounds by express enactment.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman just what the power of the Ordnance Department is under the deficiency bill to acquire land?
Mr. SHERLEY. No power in the world, except where moneys have been concretely appropriated to acquire land.
Now, I will give the gentleman an illustration of the situation that is confronting the Government now. Appropriations have been made for the acquisition of certain land near New York, and for certain other land near Norfolk, in connection with the building of storage warehouses for ordnance material. Also, we passed a law in regard to the purchase of land for the establishment of the nitrate plant. Now, without the enactment of this joint resolution that money can not be expended until there has been both a certification by the Attorney General and action by the State in which the land is situated agreeing thereto. This resolution does not broaden the power of the department to spend money for land but simply waives those two requirements of the section referred to.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman in his explanation go one step further? He has made reference to Kent Island, which he said will not be taken for the purpose of a proving ground. Complaint has come from another section in the vicinity, where certain industrial plants are established, and where the people are employed at canneries, and things of that kind, in very fertile territory.
Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman in this way: This does not involve in any way, shape, or form the expenditure of any money in connection with the proving grounds. And for this reason, namely, that when we carried a provision of $7,000,000 for the purchase of proving grounds and improvements, we carried a provision similar to this, which is already the law on the statute book, and was one of the items in the urgent deficiency bill passed the other day.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. I will.
Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can understand why you should request to waive the granting of the right by the States, but why do away with the certification of the Attorney General?
Mr. SHERLEY. That is one of the requirements of section 355.
Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman think it is very important before paying out public money for real estate that you have the opinion of the Attorney General as to the title?
Mr. SHERLEY. I just as leave, and a little bit rather, have the opinion of the lawyer who really makes the examination of the title. The certification of the Attorney General is of necessity a matter of form.
Mr. GORDON. But it is an official opinion.
Mr. SHERLEY. It is an official opinion, based on the opinion of the attorneys of the Government who examine into it. The district attorneys will examine into it or the attorneys of the War Department. We are not going to buy land without title.
Mr. GORDON. If this is adopted, they can buy land without any title at all.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SHERLEY. I will.
Mr. LINTHICUM. As I understand, the deficiency bill we passed a few days ago made sufficient provision for proving grounds without certification?
Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, sir.
Mr. LINTHICUM. There can be no delay in obtaining proving grounds now by the Government?
Mr. SHERLEY. Not by virtue of that section.
Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 20 minutes.
Mr. MADDEN. I am in sympathy with the passage of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and my only interest in the case was that he might be given an opportunity to explain the details that have already been explained. So far as I am concerned, I have not any disposition to take up any further time of the House.
The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.
The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was agreed to.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend just a moment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement of the activities of the Shipping Board and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement on the Shipping Board activities. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of waterways, and also to include a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—Mr. SMALL, of North Carolina—on the establishment of transportation by water, from the Secretary of War, and his reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of waterways. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the antislacker proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the antislacker proposition. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the causes of the war and to incorporate some patriotic resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on what caused the war and to insert some patriotic resolutions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the present war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of the present war. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I was directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to make a report on a bill. By inadvertence the number 1681 was embodied in the report. I now ask unanimous consent to withdraw report No. 196 to make certain corrections.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to withdraw the report referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. OVERMYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a resolution adopted by the Fremont (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce asking for the expulsion of Senators STONE, GRONNA, and LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The House has nothing to do with the Senators, anyway.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of land legislation during this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the marketing, handling, and grading of grain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of marketing and grading grain. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE (H. REPT. NO. 201).

The SPEAKER. Now the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] is recognized. The gentleman submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of the special committee of five Members of the House of Representatives to inquire into the allegations and charges made by J. THOMAS HEFLIN, a Member of Congress from the fifth congressional district of Alabama, appointed on October 4, 1917.

Your committee, appointed to inquire into the allegations and charges made by J. THOMAS HEFLIN, Member of Congress from the fifth district of Alabama, on the floor of the House on September 21, 1917, and also to inquire into the allegations or charges made in an alleged interview or statement alleged to have been furnished by the said J. THOMAS HEFLIN and printed in the Washington Post of September 22, 1917, respectfully ask leave to report as follows:

The investigation made by the committee has necessarily been hurried, due to the fact that the resolution authorizing the appointment of your committee to make the investigation was introduced early in the afternoon of Thursday, October 4, 1917. Afterwards, on the same afternoon, a resolution was passed by the House fixing the hour of adjournment at 3 o'clock on the following Saturday.

The resolution authorizing the appointment of the committee and vesting them with authority is as follows:

"Be it resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a select committee of five Members of the House, who shall make inquiry into the allegations and charges made by J. THOMAS HEFLIN, a Member of Congress from the fifth district of Alabama, on the floor of the House on September 21, 1917, which is, in part, as follows:

"'I do not know what Members of Congress, if any, have been influenced by this mysterious German organization. If I were permitted to express my opinion I could name 13 or 14 men in the two bodies, who, in my judgment, have acted in a suspicious manner by the introduction of resolutions or bills or by speeches in the Congress or out of it, that leads to the conviction that they are not loyal to this Government in the hour of its peril—they ought to be investigated, and if found guilty, they ought to be expelled from the House and the Senate of the United States.'

"Also as to the allegations and charges made in an interview or statement alleged to have been furnished by the said J. THOMAS HEFLIN and printed in the Washington Post of September 21, 1917, as follows:

"'I have heard a story that there is a gambling room in Washington where pro-German and peace-at-any-price Members of Congress get their pay by being extraordinarily lucky at cards. I demand that this matter be investigated and that the guilty Members be expelled from Congress in disgrace. I believe that some of this money has reached some Members of the Congress. I know I could name 13 or 14 Members of the House and Senate who have acted in a very suspicious manner.'

"Said committee shall report to the House before the adjournment of this session of Congress the result of its inquiry and its recommendation as to the action which should be taken by the House touching any person or persons involved in or affected by or making these statements and charges."

Pursuant to this instruction, on the afternoon of October 4 the committee held a preliminary meeting to determine the scope of the inquiry, which meeting was continued to the morning of October 5. After careful deliberation your committee determined that the main question submitted for its investigation was whether the charges made by Mr. HEFLIN in his speech or alleged interview against Members of Congress involved the imputation of corrupt motives or the receipt by them of any portion of the alleged German corruption fund. For this reason your committee invited Mr. HEFLIN to appear, and he was closely questioned as to the meaning he conveyed or intended to convey by these charges. In the first place, he was questioned as to the accuracy of his reported interview in which it was specifically charged that Members of Congress had participated in gambling, as a result of which they received money from the German Government, or acted in a suspicious manner in that connection.

Mr. HEFLIN emphatically denied that he had made such a statement, and asserted that he had never, at any time or place, publicly or privately, made any charge that any Member of Congress had been influenced in any vote or action by the receipt, directly or indirectly, of any part of this or any other fund. He stated that he did not charge this, and did not intend to charge this, either in his speech on the floor of the House of September 21, or in any statement which he made to newspaper men which was alleged to have been reported in the Washington Post. With respect to the newspaper interview, however, Mr. Stuart Godwin, Washington representative of the International News Service, and Mr. Andrew Eldred, Washington representative of the United Press, appeared, at their own suggestion, and declared to your committee that Mr. HEFLIN had been correctly quoted, as they both heard his statement and reported it for publication.

After being questioned as to whether he had any proof of corruption by money of Members of Congress, Mr. HEFLIN most emphatically stated that he did not have any proofs of the receipt of money by Members of Congress and that he was unable to furnish or procure any such proofs.

On September 28, 1917, Frank L. Polk, Acting Secretary of State, wrote to Hon. EDWARD W. POU, a Member of the House from North Carolina, as follows:

"MY DEAR MR. POU: In response to your inquiry over the telephone to-day, addressed to the department, I beg to inform you that the State Department has no evidence that could in any way connect a Member of Congress with the payment of money by the German Embassy in its propaganda activities.

"I take the liberty of quoting a statement issued by the Secretary of State on September 22, which indicates his opinion on this subject:

"'If there is any misunderstanding, I wish to say very emphatically I do not see how the Bernstorff message in any way reflects upon Congress or any Member. Apparently, it was the purpose to employ agencies to influence them, of which they would have no knowledge, and in case they were influenced would be entirely innocent. I do not know what the organization was. This exposé is apropos of German methods of peace propaganda, and there is no intention of casting suspicion on Members of Congress.'

"Believe me, my dear Mr. POU,

"Yours, very truly,

FRANK L. POLK,
"Acting Secretary of State."

On the above statement of Mr. HEFLIN, taken in connection with the letter from the Secretary of State's office, your committee is of the opinion that there is no justification for and no evidence upon which to base a further investigation of the question of the corrupt receipt of money by Members of Congress.

This question being disposed of, nothing remains for your committee to investigate but Mr. HEFLIN'S charges that he believes certain Members of Congress have acted in a suspicious manner by the introduction of bills or resolutions, or in speeches made in Congress or out of it.

It is apparent that such an investigation would necessarily consume a great deal of time and involve considerable expense, no provision for which has been made in the resolution under which your committee is acting. Therefore it is apparent that it is utterly impossible for your committee to make a full and fair investigation of this phase of the question within the time limit.

While your committee makes no recommendation in the premises, we beg to state it as our opinion that in so far as Mr. HEFLIN'S charges impute or might fairly be construed as imputing dishonest or corrupt motives to any Member of Congress, notwithstanding the fact that he now denies any intention of conveying any such imputation, his conduct in that respect is subject to criticism.

But inasmuch as the serious question of disloyalty to our country on the part of some Members of the House has been raised by Mr. HEFLIN, in the opinion of your committee the direct and parliamentary course of action would be in the institution by him of proceedings for expulsion from Congress of those whose loyalty he challenges.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY A. BARNHART.
W. W. VENABLE.
ARTHUR G. DEWALT.
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH.
JOSEPH WALSH.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the report of the committee just read expresses the unanimous findings of the members thereof, although, in justice to some of them it does not fully meet their personal opinions. On one hand it was believed that the report does not go far enough in its findings and, on the other that it goes too far. But the committee was handicapped by lack of time and means to make such an investigation as the resolution directed, and I think every Member of this body will concede this. But we made a preliminary investigation of sufficient scope to prompt the report we have made, and hope it will be accepted.

So far as the charges that Members of the House having been bribed, as was inferred by those who heard the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and as reported by the press, the committee was promptly advised by Mr. HEFLIN that he had no intention of giving out such an impression, had never heard of any such bribery, and, of course, had no proof. He also denies that he gave out the report that Members of Congress won money easily at a slush fund German poker room in this city, and so this incident at once became a question of veracity between Mr. HEFLIN and the newspaper men who interviewed him. That left your committee at a standstill, and the Members of the House and the country will have to draw their own conclusions.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. I will not yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I should like to have the gentleman yield if he will.

Mr. BARNHART. With all respect to the gentleman from Illinois, I will not yield. But as to the matter of loyalty of Members of Congress, Mr. HEFLIN informed the committee that he believes he has evidence to corroborate his charges, which consists of speeches and resolutions, in and out of Congress, newspaper clippings, letters from constituents of certain Members, and opinions of some eminent men. However, the committee is not continuing, Mr. HEFLIN said he did not have his evidence immediately ready and could not have for some time, there is no provision in the resolution for defraying the expenses of such an investigation, hence we could only find and recommend on the brief outline of the situation before us.

Therefore, as the close of the session limited the possibilities of complying with the requirements of the disloyalty feature of the resolution, and as there are neither facts nor time available for a fair and full presentation and discussion of the matter, Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the committee to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion for the previous question, for I should like to make a statement. The gentleman has not correctly stated my position. I am ready to start with the investigation now.

The SPEAKER. Wait a minute. The gentleman from Alabama will have to get unanimous consent in order to make any remarks. That is the rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. I trust that the gentleman will be fair enough to withdraw the motion for the previous question in order that I may make a statement, because the gentleman's statement does not correctly quote what I have said or state my position.

The SPEAKER. That is within the power of the gentleman from Indiana, and he moves the previous question.

Mr. BARNHART. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee.

The question being taken, the report was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF FOREIGN ARMY OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER. The other day the House passed a bill to defray the expenses incurred by officers and enlisted men of foreign armies attached to the Army of the United States. It turned out that this feature had already been carried in the general bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] the other day asked unanimous consent that the proceedings on this particular bill be vacated. Inadvertently the Chair had signed this bill, and, without objection, he now scratches his name off from it.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 162. Joint resolution authorizing the expenditure of money upon lands purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 5833. An act granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon food and foodstuffs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on foodstuffs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUBLICATION OF INVENTIONS.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Patents from the further consideration of S. 2531. This is a bill similar to a bill now on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Patents, and for the present consideration of S. 2531. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 2531) to prevent the publication of inventions by the grant of patents that might be detrimental to the public safety or convey useful information to the enemy, to stimulate invention, and provide adequate protection to owners of patents, and for other purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York to state to the House the special object of discharging the Committee on Patents for the purpose of considering this bill at this time?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. We are considering the Senate bill. The House Committee on Patents reported a similar bill, which is now on the House Calendar.

Mr. MADDEN. What does this bill do?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. The purpose of the bill is stated in the title. It is drawn by the Patent Office at the suggestion of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the secretary of the Munitions Board. The purpose of it is to keep secret an application for a patent whenever in the opinion of the Commissioner of Patents the publishing of the application might be of benefit to the enemy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I realize the necessity of passing this Senate bill without amendment. Otherwise, I think the last paragraph should be amended so as to make more clear the intendment of the committee. I do not think the committee intends for a moment that, in case this patent is denied to the patentee during the pendency of the war, the patentee, upon the issuance of a patent, will be able to obtain compensation from the Government, in case it uses the patent, for damages by reason of the patent being withheld and the patentee prevented from using it during the pendency of the war. I call the gentleman's attention to the last paragraph:

When an applicant whose patent is withheld as herein provided and who faithfully obeys the order of the Commissioner of Patents above referred to shall tender his invention to the Government of the United States for its use, he shall, if and when he ultimately received a patent, have the right to sue for compensation in the Court of Claims, such right to compensation to begin from the date of the use of the invention by the Government.

I take it that this is not to give any right of compensation from the Government because of the deprivation of the right to use the patent during the war period, or for anything except the use by the Government.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. He is to have no compensation unless the Government decides that the application shall be kept secret.

Mr. STAFFORD. And no compensation from the Government, except for its use of the patent.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. None whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wanted that clearly stated, in case that ambiguity should ever be presented to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever during a time when the United States is at war the publication of an invention by the granting of a patent might, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Patents, be detrimental to the public safety or defense or might assist the enemy or endanger the successful prosecution of the war he may order that the invention be kept secret and withhold the grant of a patent until the termination of the war: Provided, That the invention disclosed in the application for said patent may be held abandoned upon it being established before or by the commissioner that in violation of said order said invention has been published or that an application for a patent therefor has been filed in a foreign country by the inventor or his assigns or legal representatives, without the consent or approval of the Commissioner of Patents or under a license of the Secretary of Commerce, as provided by law.

When an applicant whose patent is withheld as herein provided and who faithfully obeys the order of the Commissioner of Patents above referred to shall tender his invention to the Government of the United States for its use, he shall, if and when he ultimately receives a patent, have the right to sue for compensation in the Court of Claims, such right to compensation to begin from the date of the use of the invention by the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH, a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 5269) was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield for me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York the House stand in recess until 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York the House stand in recess until 2.50 p. m. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Reserving the right to object, I wish to state that I am anxious to submit a resolution after the gentleman from New York closes.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman's resolution will be objected to if it is for the extra month.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am going to move to suspend the rules and pass it.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman can not get recognition for that.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will take my chance on it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that my colleague, Mr. ROGERS, was expecting recognition. He is not in the room at present.

Mr. SLOAN. I want to say that I would like to have about two minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall occupy the whole of the time, but I will ask to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I am probably late with the appeal I intend to make now at the end of this most important session. Lawyers may differ as to the necessity of suspending the Constitution, but there can be no dispute that even in times of war common sense ought not to be suspended. Some of our greatest statesmen are the worst sinners in that respect. The supreme ruler of all the jungles, Theodore Roosevelt, declared more than once that whoever dares express any opinion which is not in harmony with his present opinion should be deported, lynched, crippled, mutilated, and eaten alive. This policy seems to be advocated by a number of big men who have lost all sense of proportion.

I am not in a facetious mood, and I do not like to be introducing frivolous resolutions, but I almost feel like introducing a resolution that Congress should make an appropriation for night schools to teach the various members of chambers of commerce who are now demanding the expulsion of Members of Congress for the courage they show in honestly expressing their views, to teach those chambers of commerce the elements of American democracy. [Applause.]

We are working ourselves into a frenzy before a single shot has been fired at the enemy. What will we do later, when the crippled, wounded, and mutilated will return from the trenches?

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that the war has shown—the one silver lining in the dark cloud—and that is the great loyalty of the American people. [Applause.] The war came after a campaign conducted with the implied promise that there would be no war. Nevertheless, the people have accepted the decision of the law-making body of the country and abide by it. No one will contend that conscription was popular. It had never been resorted to in previous wars except in the last extremity. Still the people, in their loyalty, in their submission to law, have yielded. When you deal with a people of such profound loyalty, when you deal with a people with such a devotion to law, when you deal with a people so thoroughly acquiescing in the principle of majority rule, the only rule possible in a Republic, all attempts to suppress freedom of speech, freedom of thought, and a full discussion of vital issues are acts of unpardonable oppression.

Things are becoming unbearable. In order to make the world safe for democracy, a very charming slogan, we have permitted to go unpunished one of the most abominable acts in the history of this country—the deportation of twelve hundred men by a lawless crowd speaking in the name of law and order in the State of Arizona. We have been too busy to take it up. This outrage was committed three months ago. The men are still in exile. They dared oppose a powerful corporation. We have tolerated the lynching of a man in Butte, Mont., because he stood for the rights of the laboring people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washingon. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, did not that man who was lynched in Butte persist in saying night after night, from a soap box, that soldiers were nothing but scabs in uniform?

Mr. LONDON. Yes; but if the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] is willing to punish careless and foolish words by death nobody else would, particularly in the American Congress. No matter how foolish a remark may be, our laws and statutes provide a penalty, but that penalty is not death. The penalty of death, the penalty of lynching, can only be advocated by savages, by men who have lost all sense of right and wrong, and a Member of Congress should be the last person in the world to attempt to condone the infamous crime of lynching.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did not this more or less mad man know that when he went one bit further each night he most certainly would bring serious consequence upon himself if he abused and defamed the soldiers of the United States?

Mr. LONDON. I do not know whether that man was mad.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I say he was a half-mad man.

Mr. LONDON. I do know that the men who commit the crime of lynching are criminals, are a dastardly crowd, whether they consist of business men, corporation lawyers, or other tools of a corporation.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion, while he is on this subject of lynching, of the proclamations of the governor of Illinois, of the governor of Minnesota, and the governor of Wisconsin recently withdrawing the right to peaceable assembly from citizens in those States.

Mr. LONDON. These gentlemen have suspended not only the Constitution, not only common sense, but they have suspended the decalogue. They have suspended every law of reason. Here we have this illustration of a Member of Congress trying to justify lynching on the floor of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. No; I shall not yield any more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman must not charge me with defending that crime. I am saying that he knew what the consequence would be. This man defamed the soldiers, and he knew what the consequence would be, and if he got it he knew he was going to get it.

Mr. LONDON. Why, I tell you I can rightly say that the gentleman is an advocate of lynching.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; I am not.

Mr. LONDON. And I am quite sure the lumber interests of the State of Washington approve the attitude of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. LONDON. No; I shall not yield any more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LONDON. Nothing seems to be easier than to designate men as I. W. W.'s in order to put them outside of the protection of the law. It is the easiest thing now for corporations to suppress efforts of workers to improve their condition by denouncing their leaders as I. W. W.'s. Pleading for world democracy, we have permitted a state of affairs where dozens of women are imprisoned right here within the shadow of the White House, where they are subjected to every sort of oppression. I know that the average American revolts against cruel treatment of a woman, but it is war psychology, and we are all more or less war mad, and we tolerate these things. I hope the President of the United States will do the gracious thing at the close of this session of Congress and open the doors of the prison for these women, who have suffered more than they bargained for. That is not a popular statement, I know.

Appealing to the social democracy of Germany to organize a revolution in Germany so as to save the world, we are suppressing socialist literature in this country. With the so-called espionage act as a pretext, they have suppressed a number of newspapers. We have made the Postmaster General the main reservoir of wisdom in the United States. We have made every assistant district attorney an expert upon internationalism, politics, economics, and the guardian of the people's liberties.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. No; I will not yield. We are destroying the freedom of the press. Mind you, in Europe, in every country, there is the fullest possible discussion of international relations.

In France cabinet after cabinet fell. In England there is not a man now in the Government who was there at the beginning of the war. The same, to a great extent, is true in Germany and in Austria. In Russia there was a revolution. Everywhere the people were permitted to talk, to discuss, to argue, to analyze, to scrutinize, to ask questions, to dream aloud, but here, in the name of democracy, we prevent them from discussing international relations. Here the Postmaster General is chief regulator of thought. War psychology, going mad. If the war lasts long enough, we may be justified in becoming mad, but it is too early now I respectfully submit.

The attempt to stifle the Socialist press is particularly inexcusable when one considers the importance of the Socialist movement as a permanent factor for international peace. In all countries of the world they have been, and are now, the foremost champions of an enduring peace.

The refusal by the Government of the belligerent nations to permit the holding of the International Socialist Conference at Stockholm was a blunder for which the full price has not yet been paid.

Nothing had such a demoralizing effect upon the democratized army of Russia than this refusal.

The program of the German Socialist minority which appears in a special cable to the New York Times of July 10, 1917, and which had been submitted to the Dutch-Scandinavian committee at Stockholm in advance of the conference, the holding of which was subsequently prevented, shows clearly the Socialist program for international peace. I give it in full:

In its peace views, as in its general policy, the German Independent Social Democratic Party proceeds from the common interests of the international proletariat and development of society. These interests demand immediate peace.

In the peace to be concluded we demand an international arrangement for general disarmament as being the chief means for strengthening the debilitated States. General disarmament is the only way to break any militarist supremacy and to obtain a lasting and peaceful understanding between the nations.

We demand the fullest freedom for international trade and intercourse, as well as the unlimited right of migration. We condemn all economic barriers and all economic struggles between States. All disputes between States must be settled by compulsory international arbitration.

We demand international treaties to make workers secure against impoverishment, especially as to women and children.

Political rights for women we regard as a social necessity. Equal rights should be granted to all the inhabitants of every country without regard to tongue, race, or religion. This would also mean securing to national minorities the right to declare their national life.

National and social liberation can not be achieved by the Governments at war; it can only be done by democracy. Democratic control of foreign policies will prevent aggressive measures. Secret treaties must be abolished, and all State treaties must be made dependent upon the assent of parliaments.

Though not regarding State boundaries as inviolable, we condemn the war and its prolongation as a means of regulating boundaries. Regulation of frontiers must be conditional upon the assent of the populations concerned and not an act of force. With all firmness we object to the violation of any nation in any form.

From the beginning of the war we have consistently demanded peace without annexations or indemnities, based upon material self-government.

It is not our affair to draw up a program covering all the questions to be dealt with in the peace settlement, but in regard to the questions raised in the discussions now going on we declare the following:

Reestablishment of Serbia as a self-governing and independent State is our absolute demand. The uniting of the Serbs in a single national State, and its combination with the other Balkan States in a republican Balkan federation we regard as the best way of removing the Eastern question as a cause of war.

To admit the right of Russian Poland to national independence but to deny that same right to Prussian and Austrian Poland is contradictory.

We condemn the prolongation of the war as a means of settling the question of Alsace-Lorraine. The population of Alsace-Lorraine, which in 1871 was annexed against its will, can obtain peace no sooner than by a direct and free vote to express its wish as to what State it shall belong.

The full independence and economic self-dependence—that is, freedom from economic interference—of Belgium is inevitable. In fulfillment of the German Government's promise at the beginning of the war the Belgian nation has to be compensated for the damage caused by the war, and especially for the economic values that have been taken away. Such repayment has nothing to do with various kinds of indemnities which simply mean the plundering of the vanquished by the victor, and which we therefore reject.

As opponents of any policy of conquest and foreign dominion, we reject, as we have always done, the policy of colonial conquest. Possession of any colony without its own self-administration is nothing else than possession of an unfree people, and, like slavery, is incompatible with our principles.

A peace treaty would be made secure only when there was a single international force to watch over it. We do not regard international government officials as such a force, but rather the international Socialist proletariat. Only when an international (force) is erected, independent and powerful, and the proletariat everywhere lends it its full force through keeping control over the governments and maintaining peace, will there come in the future a state of mutual confidence between the nations instead of a contest in armaments.

The proletariat in every country must now do its all to bring the war to an end. To attain this aim the independence of the Socialist Parties in relation to their imperial governments must be presupposed. Every government must be challenged to give unconditional adhesion to an international peace program. Credits are to be refused to any government which refuses this program or answers evasively or does not declare itself ready to enter upon peace conversations on the basis of this program. Such a Government must be fought in the sharpest manner.

The world will yet hear from the Socialists.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I think I have leave to extend my remarks, which has been previously granted.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LONDON. Leave was granted before.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5723. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes;

H. R. 4897. An act to provide for the promotion of first lieutenants in the Regular Army and National Guard to the grade of captain and respecting the Dental Corps of the Army and medical and dental students, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5833. An act granting six months' pay to Ida Cottrell Hodgson, widow of Frederick Grady Hodgson, deceased, colonel, United States Army, retired; and

H. J. Res. 162. Joint resolution authorizing the expenditure of money upon lands purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

BILLS, ETC., PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 4897. An act to provide for the promotion of first lieutenants in the Regular Army and National Guard to the grade of captain and respecting the Dental Corps of the Army and medical and dental students, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5723. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5646. An act to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 5648. An act to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5918. An act to authorize the President to organize provisionally as Field Artillery or Infantry, and to use as Field Artillery or Infantry during the existing emergency, such regiments of Cavalry as he may designate; and

H. J. Res. 162. Joint resolution authorizing the expenditure of money upon lands purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

PRINTING REVENUE LAWS AS A DOCUMENT.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following concurrent resolution and ask its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed as one document the following three revenue laws: The act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, approved September 8, 1916; the act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1917; and the act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, approved October 3, 1917, of which 40,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 60,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the apportionment of the House of Representatives to be distributed through the folding room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this concurrent resolution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where does it come from?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I would tell the gentleman from New York that Mr. KITCHIN and myself have been discussing the question for several days. The gentleman from North Carolina has not had an opportunity to prepare the resolution, and he asked me to do so.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are included in these?

Mr. KITCHIN. The three revenue bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 26.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed as one document the following three revenue laws: The act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes, approved September 8, 1916; the act to provide increased revenues to defray the expenses of increased appropriations for the Army and Navy and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1917; and the act to provide revenues to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, approved October 3, 1917, of which 40,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 60,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the apportionment of the House of Representatives to be distributed through the folding room.

LIABILITY OF ALIENS TO MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 115, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask unanimous consent that the preamble, which has been stricken out by the Committee on Foreign Affairs before reporting to the House, be omitted in the reading.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution, leaving out the preamble, which was stricken out by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 115) requesting the Secretary of State to open diplomatic negotiations with certain Governments with a view to obtaining their approval and sanction for action by the United States permitting the inclusion in the armed forces of the United States of such citizens of the countries of such Governments as are within the United States.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to open diplomatic negotiations with the Governments of the several countries at war with a country with which the United States is at war with a view to obtaining their approval and sanction for action by the United States looking to the imposition upon such citizens of those countries as are within the United States of the liability to and performance of military service in the armed forces of the United States during the continuance of the present war between the United tates and Germany, and to report to the Congress of the United States as soon as practicable the result of such negotiations.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] as tellers.

The House divided, and the tellers reported there were—ayes 58, noes 0.

So a second was ordered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This resolution as introduced contains various whereases.

The SPEAKER. They have been stricken out.

Mr. STAFFORD. As reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs it strikes those out. Whatever action we take in the House on the committee amendments I assume the bill as read is the bill under consideration. My inquiry is, Is the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts merely to suspend the rules and pass the bill as reported from the committee?

The SPEAKER. It is to suspend the rules and pass the matter which has just been read by the Clerk. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio has 20 minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution calls upon the Secretary of State to open diplomatic negotiations with the Governments of the allies, with a view to the inclusion of their subjects who are in this country in the armed forces of the United States. The so-called Chamberlain bill, Senate joint resolution 84, which passed the Senate early last month, was a much more drastic proposal than this. The Chamberlain bill looks to the inclusion in our armies of all subjects of all countries other than enemy countries except in the event that treaty rights protect them from the obligation to render such service. That bill after being passed by the Senate came before the House Committee on Military Affairs. The Secretary of State appeared before the committee about 10 days or two weeks ago and in a very forceful statement, which is now available to the Members, gave as his opinion that the passage of the Chamberlain bill might easily involve the United States in very serious diplomatic difficulties. He called attention especially to the unwisdom of legislating so as to include in our armies subjects of neutral countries.

I remember that he used this expression that "our relations with neutral countries are not precarious but are irritating." And the clear import of his statement before the committee was that the passage of the Chamberlain bill would seriously embarrass the State Department in its negotiations with foreign powers and in its handling of international matters. Under those circumstances the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously voted to take no affirmative action upon the Chamberlain bill at this time. That is the status of the alien-slacker situation in so far as the Chamberlain phase of the legislation is concerned.

Mr. GORDON. The action of the committee, I will say to the gentleman, was a little bit broader than he states. You heard the testimony of the Secretary of State before our committee, did you not?

Mr. ROGERS. I did.

Mr. GORDON. And did he not say in that statement which he made that no legislation upon the subject of drafting aliens was desired by the State Department at this time?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not recall that he made that broad statement.

Mr. GORDON. I recall it very distinctly.

Mr. ROGERS. His appearance before your committee was limited to the Chamberlain resolution, on which he had been summoned to appear.

Mr. FIELDS. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] is absolutely correct in his statement of what the Secretary of State said.

Mr. ROGERS. Of course the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Kentucky were both present, and they know the situation from their point of view as well as I know it from mine. But bear in mind that Mr. Secretary Lansing was appearing before the committee only on the Chamberlain resolution.

On the 1st day of August the House Committee on Foreign Affairs had favorably and unanimously reported a resolution in the exact form which was just read at the Clerk's desk, and which I have now moved to be passed under suspension of the rules. That precise resolution had been indorsed by the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Polk, in a formal communication which he sent to Mr. FLOOD, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I will read that letter:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 28, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: Referring to your letter of July 16 in regard to H. J. Res. 115, introduced in the House by Mr. ROGERS, and to the department's telephone communication to your clerk of July 25 to the effect that this resolution, together with other bills on the same subject, had been laid before the President for his consideration, I beg now to advise you that the President informs me that of the bills before the Congress relating to the enlistment or drafting of alien residents in the United States H. J. Res. 115 (or S. J. Res. 83, which appears to be identical) seems to him most appropriate in the circumstances, as, in his opinion, the matter is properly a subject for negotiation with the countries concerned.

Very sincerely, yours, FRANK L. POLK.

HON. HENRY D. FLOOD,
House of Representatives.

In that letter we have not only the explicit approval of this precise resolution from the Acting Secretary of State in a formal communication, but also the approval of the President of the United States. After the hearing of Mr. Secretary Lansing before the Committee on Military Affairs, to which allusion has been made, I sought an interview at which both Mr. Lansing and

Mr. Polk, who had written this letter as Acting Secretary of State, were present. They authorized me to state that they had no objection whatever to the passage of this resolution. If any gentleman in this House doubts that statement, I ask him to go to the telephone, call up either of those gentlemen, and be convinced for himself.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This resolution, in fact, declares by Congress the very thing that the Secretary of State has assured us he is doing. Is that the fact?

Mr. ROGERS. I think that is a fair statement, and I think the only objection to this resolution which can possibly be advanced is that it is not especially important, because substantially what will happen if it is passed will happen if it is not passed.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But it does not contravene in any way the work of the department? In other words, it does not bother them in their work?

Mr. ROGERS. If it does anything at all it strengthens the hands of the department in negotiating with the friendly nations for the inclusion of their citizens in the Army of the United States.

Now, let us see what this resolution does, and its passage is of great consequence. I think the suggestion made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] is important. The resolution enables the State Department to proceed with its negotiations with the full knowledge that the House of Representatives is in accord with these negotiations. That will be important. Why? The Secretary of State told the Committee on Military Affairs that the results of these negotiations with the friendly countries would probably be successful, and that they would probably require an amendment of the draft law so as to take advantage of the arrangements thus made. If that is true——

Mr. GORDON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield just now. The gentleman has 20 minutes.

And if that is true, the enabling amendment to the draft law will be necessarily passed by both branches of Congress. I submit, therefore, that it is of consequent importance that the Secretary of State should know that the House of Representatives is in harmony with the action which he is taking and will take in order that he may feel himself empowered to proceed with the full knowledge that his action will probably have the approval of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not the Secretary of State, as a matter of fact, doing now what the resolution of the gentleman proposes that he shall do?

Mr. ROGERS. The Secretary of State is doing it in a measure now. I understand that he has been proceeding for over two months in a somewhat general way. The gentleman from Illinois comes from a great State that has a great alien population. The alien-slacker injustice is not a thing that can go on forever. I think the House of Representatives ought to show that it has an interest in remedying it. There is an enormous growing call on the part of many of the States and many of the sections of this country for legislation of this sort.

In deference to the wishes of the Secretary of State the Committee on Military Affairs has reported no legislation "with teeth in it." But is the House to remain silent? Is the House to adjourn sine die this afternoon without showing the slightest appreciation of the importance of this problem and its anxiety to cope with it as best it can? It may be that we can not go very far. But, Mr. Speaker, I insist that in honor to ourselves and to the sections of the country which are aroused over the manifest unfairness to our own citizens resultant upon the general exemption of aliens, we ought to go as far as we honorably and patriotically can.

Here we have a measure which has the approval of the President, which has the approval of the Secretary of State, which has the approval of the Acting Secretary of State, which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and which certainly can not be objected to on any conceivable ground. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves 10 minutes.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, the most that can be claimed for this joint resolution is that it does not amount to anything. [Laughter.] That is, it is not effective; it simply requests the President of the United States to negotiate about drafting aliens into our Army; and of course that involves the drafting of American citizens into foreign armies.

Now, I do not know, but the only practical result of the adoption of the resolution, I suppose, is that it will be used for home consumption with the electorate. But the Secretary of State testified before our committee that he was doing the very thing that this resolution asked him to do, and he stated very distinctly to the Committee on Military Affairs that no legislation on the subject of drafting aliens was necessary or desired at this time.

Now, I have very strong views myself on the subject of drafting aliens. I do not believe you have any right to do it. Every Secretary of State, including James G. Blaine, Thomas F. Bayard, and men like them, have notified foreign Governments in every single instance where there was a controversy, that under no circumstances would this Nation permit foreign nations to draft American citizens into their military service.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Do I gather that the gentleman would not be in favor of including allied aliens in our armies, even if those countries specifically by treaty authorized their inclusion?

Mr. GORDON. No; I would not.

Mr. ROGERS. You would not approve of including them even if the countries were quite willing to have them included?

Mr. GORDON. Certainly not. What are you going to do with the political refugee that left one of those countries because he did not like their form of government, who came over here and has not been naturalized? Are you going to conscript them into the military service? What are you going to do with other foreigners who apply for naturalization and can not meet some educational test that we impose? Down in my country they are imposing very strict conditions on the naturalization of aliens, and I think there ought to be proper conditions imposed. Are you going to conscript a man into our military service who is an alien, and who tried to become a citizen and could not? Of course the aliens are like the Indians, not taxed, and minors, who have no votes, and therefore the demand is to force them into the Army. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What did the Secretary of State say to the Committee on Military Affairs on this subject as to the power of Congress?

Mr. GORDON. He said Congress had no power to conscript an alien into the military service. That is what he said, and of course he is right about that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not this resolution recognize that fact?

Mr. GORDON. No; it denies it. That is my objection to it. If you already have any lawful authority to conscript them into the military service, why do you want to have the Secretary of State get the consent of some potentate in Europe to do it? That is my objection to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not the function of the Secretary of State to negotiate treaties with our allies, so that the aliens of those countries who are slackers here can be mustered into the American Army?

Mr. GORDON. There may be American slackers in those countries. Would you allow an American citizen to be conscripted in a foreign army?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes—to be fighting alongside of my son.

Mr. GORDON. He would not be fighting alongside of your son. He would be fighting alongside of foreigners.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He would be fighting in the same cause.

Mr. GORDON. I do not think you have considered this question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr FITZGERALD. Suppose an American citizen has gone into one of these allied countries to avoid fighting in the American Army. Would you object to his being compelled to fight in the French Army or in the English Army?

Mr. GORDON. I would object to any American citizen being conscripted to fight in a foreign army on the same ground that Secretary Bayard and Secretary Blaine put it. That is what the War of 1812 was fought about.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was a different situation. Here we are compelling our young men to fight.

Mr. GORDON. Do not blame that on me. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not blaming it on you.

Mr. GORDON. Very well.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am sincere in asking the question. Suppose some of our citizens who would be eligible under the draft law, in order to avoid being drafted should go to Canada or to France or to England?

Do you not think it would be proper for this country to consent that in order to prevent their escaping their obligations to the country, if they were unwilling to fight alongside of their own fellow citizens, under the flag of their own country, they should be compelled to fight in a common cause for their country under an alien flag, with aliens? [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Here is my answer to that: I would consent to legislation which would bring those men back here to perform the obligations which the law has imposed upon them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would make them fight under some other flag for the same purpose. I would not want to compel them to come back and fight under their own flag.

Mr. GORDON. Of course you are getting into deep water when you undertake to pass a law authorizing foreign Governments to impose compulsory military service upon American citizens. You are establishing an exceedingly dangerous precedent, and one that will arise to confront you forever after, and the Secretary of State said that in substance before our committee.

Mr. PLATT. I want to know if the gentleman was not opposed to the drafting of American citizens into our own Army?

Mr. GORDON. Of course I was.

Mr. PLATT. That is the whole thing.

Mr. GORDON. Being opposed to drafting them into our own Army, I certainly would not favor legislation that would permit them to be drafted into a foreign army.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is not the solution of the problem this, to give them a chance to fight in this Army or go home where they belong?

Mr. GORDON. Of course gentlemen can solve this question offhand here without difficulty. You have an unquestioned and an undoubted legal right to expel from the United States, under certain limitations, aliens domiciled in the United States. That you have a legal right to do. But our Government protested at one time very strongly to the Russian Government because it expelled an American citizen who was resident in Russia, and did not give him an opportunity to close up his affairs, but required him to leave the country rather suddenly. Now, what situation have you here? You pass a law which will expel European aliens from the United States. You are driving them right across this submarine zone. They can not be convoyed. We have no means of providing a convoy for them. I do not think under international law you have a moral right to drive those men across the sea at a time like this without affording them any protection.

Mr. MAGEE. I want to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MAGEE. Aliens, as I understand it, under the selective-draft act, have been included in the quotas of the different cities in the country.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; unfortunately they have, in many States.

Mr. MAGEE. And the population of many of those cities has been greatly overestimated.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MAGEE. The population of my home city of Syracuse was estimated, I think, at 197,000, while the actual population is about 157,000.

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MAGEE. Now, I will ask the gentleman if, in the quota drafted under the selective-draft act, those aliens have not been eliminated?

Mr. GORDON. No; they have not. That is the great injustice of the operation of this law as it is executed. There ought to be legislation that would base military service upon the population liable to military service.

Mr. MAGEE. Perhaps the gentleman did not understand me. They have been counted in making up the quotas.

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MAGEE. But when the men are actually called, as I understand it, the aliens are eliminated from the call.

Mr. GORDON. Of course. They are exempt under international law. You can not lawfully conscript an alien into the military service of the United States.

Mr. MAGEE. Now, the point I call attention to is this: It seems to me it is a great injustice first to overestimate the population of a city, then to include in the quota of that city the aliens, and then when the call is made, to exclude them from the quota; because in many manufacturing cities like my own city most of the American boys are called.

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MAGEE. The result being that the aliens are left at home, because they have not been included in the draft.

Mr. GORDON. No.

Mr. MAGEE. And they take the places of our boys who are sent abroad.

Mr. GORDON. For you have no lawful authority to force aliens into the military service. But that being so, would you include them, anyway?

Mr. MAGEE. That is what I think we ought to do, to give an expression of our opinion in accordance with the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and place ourselves on record upon this subject. [Applause in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER. The people in the galleries are here as the guests of the House. It is against the rule for them to display their assent or dissent by applause or otherwise, and if there is any more of it the Chair will have the galleries cleared.

Mr. GORDON. The last question propounded here would seem to indicate that all this resolution is wanted for is just for home consumption. I look upon it as a more serious matter than that. When the Congress of the United States requests the President to enter into negotiations with a foreign nation, with a view to drafting aliens, of course those negotiations would include drafting American citizens in those countries. I take it that no American administration would have the impudence to ask a foreign Government to permit this Government to draft their citizens and subjects into our military service, without at the same time offering to allow our citizens to be conscripted into their military service.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does not the gentleman know that there are no more Americans over in Europe; or if there are any, this country has offered the money to pay their way home? And if they are there under those conditions, they ought to be forced into those armies if they do not come home?

Mr. GORDON. Forced into foreign armies?

Mr. ROBBINS. What protection are they entitled to? They are not native Americans?

Mr. GORDON. That is the gentleman's opinion. I do not agree with him. We have American citizens domiciled in various countries, representing business concerns in the United States. They are over there on business.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does the gentleman know of any such?

Mr. GORDON. Plenty of them. I do not know of a foreign nation, that has any civilization, in which there are no representatives of American business concerns.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am speaking only of those with whom we are at war.

Mr. GORDON. Well, nobody proposes to draft our enemies into the military service; no sane man would seriously consider doing that. You would not want to draft the nonnaturalized Germans into our service, would you?

Mr. ROBBINS. There are American citizens residing in Germany.

Mr. GORDON. One of the principal grievances of the civilized world against Germany is that they have conscripted Belgians for nonmilitary service. I do not want any conscripted aliens in our Army. Personally I do not want anybody but American citizens in the American Army, unless they come in voluntarily.

Gentlemen seem to think that the way to make an army is by machinery. It is all involved in the draft, which a good many gentlemen regret that they ever voted for. They think you can make an army out of aliens, even our alien enemies. Well, you would have a strange mixture of men fighting for this country if you did it. There has been a tremendous amount of misinformation disseminated through Congress on this subject. They say the aliens are here, and they ought to fight for the flag. What flag? An alien does not owe any allegiance to the American flag. An alien has no such obligation as a citizen of this country has.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Does the gentleman from Ohio think these men ought to enjoy the privileges of an American citizen, have all their protection at the expense of the public, and not take the responsibilities and burdens that go with it?

Mr. GORDON. That illustrates the very point I want to make. Of course, I do not believe that aliens should enjoy all the privileges of an American citizen, and, as a matter of fact, they do not enjoy any privileges peculiar to the citizenship of the United States.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Do not they enjoy every privilege except that of voting?

Mr. GORDON. No; they have no privilege of citizenship. Of course they pay taxes, and they are allowed to live here, but they can not sue in your courts on many questions.

Mr. DALLINGER. Oh, yes.

Mr. GORDON. Is that so? Mr. Speaker, there is unquestionably a very great need of instruction in this House before we legislate upon this subject. [Laughter.] Let me call your attention to the fact that the only way you can put aliens in the military service and keep them there is because they can only appeal to this Government through their own governments. They can not appeal as individuals because the Government will not recognize them, and in many cases the courts are closed to them.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman favor legislation authorizing or permitting a foreign nation, through their properly accredited military representative, to come over here and draft the aliens into the foreign army?

Mr. GORDON. Unquestionably. Although I voted against the draft law, the fact that we passed it would seem to me to justify or require such legislation. As a matter of fact, we have passed legislation along that line.

Mr. WALSH. It does not permit a draft, it permits recruiting.

Mr. GORDON. I do not know as I would allow them to be drafted.

Mr. WALSH. What is the gentleman's objection to drafting them?

Mr. GORDON. I will tell you. Some of them are not subject to draft at home. They come to this country and they are aliens. Now, are we going to authorize a draft of those aliens when they are here by our permission? An alien can only come into a foreign country by permission, and every alien is here by the express authority of this Government. Now, that would be a funny way to treat a guest, to undertake to conscript him into the military service when his own country does not do it.

Gentlemen forget the obligations that we owe to these people who are here. I do not believe that we have any moral right to drive these people back across the submarine zone and subject them to the risk and hazard of losing their lives.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is perfectly willing to have American citizens subjected to that danger of the submarine zone.

Mr. GORDON. No, sir.

Mr. WALSH. He prefers that they should encounter the danger, while aliens shall stay here in peace and quietness.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is mistaken; there is no analogy between the two cases. Aliens in the United States are here by permission of this Government. We have an unquestioned legal right to expel them from the country, but we should exercise that right with due regard to the circumstances and conditions, exactly as we contended that the Russian Government should exercise it in reference to American citizens. You talk about aliens fighting our battles; why should aliens fight the battles of a country of which they are not citizens?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman speaks about the duty that we owe aliens. Does he think that we owe them any further or greater duty than we owe to our own people?

Mr. GORDON. We owe to them a different duty than we do to our own citizens.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman think we owe a duty to protect them more than we do our own citizens?

Mr. GORDON. No; we do not owe them so much.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If they live in this country, should they not be subject to the same law of conscription as our own people?

Mr. GORDON. Certainly not, and for this reason: They are under no obligation to fight for the United States. A man who is not a citizen of this country is not under any legal obligations to take up arms in prosecuting its wars. There is no civilized country on the face of this earth that ever contended it could demand and require military service from the citizens of other countries.

The only reason for which I rose to discuss this bill, Mr. Speaker, is because I want to appeal to the membership of this House during the coming vacation to consider carefully the question that has been discussed here since this joint resolution has been under consideration.

A great many men have said hastily that of course aliens have the rights and privileges here and ought to be required to perform the same duties for the country that citizens do. That statement, when made by an intelligent person, of course is made without due consideration. Aliens are under no such obligations as citizens. We went to war with Great Britain in 1812 because she insisted upon conscripting in her navy former Englishmen. England based her contention upon the doctrine, once an Englishman always an Englishman, and that they could not expatriate themselves. That was the main reason for the War of 1812. If you will read the dispatches in the archives of the State Department upon this subject, you will find that such Secretaries of State as Thomas F. Bayard and James G. Blaine have thundered against the proposition that any foreign country could ever lay hands upon an American citizen and put him into their military service.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to wait upon the President and inform him that the House was ready to adjourn, and ask him if he had any further communication to make, have, in company with a like committee on the part of the Senate, performed their duty. The President directs us to inform the House that he has no further communications to make.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has given out a statement about the work of Congress at this session, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be read at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a statement of the President about the work of Congress be now read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT.

OCTOBER 6, 1917.

The Sixty-fifth Congress, now adjourning, deserves the gratitude and appreciation of a people whose will and purpose I believe it has faithfully expressed. One can not examine the record of its action without being impressed by its completeness, its courage, and its full comprehension of a great task. The needs of the Army and the Navy have been met in a way that assures the effectiveness of American arms, and the war-making branch of the Government has been abundantly equipped with the powers that were necessary to make the action of the Nation effective.

I believe that it has also in equal degree, and as far as possible in the face of war, safeguarded the rights of the people and kept in mind the considerations of social justice so often obscured in the hasty readjustments of such a crisis.

It seems to me that the work of this remarkable session has not only been done thoroughly but that it has also been done with the utmost dispatch possible in the circumstances or consistent with a full consideration of the exceedingly critical matters dealt with. Best of all, it has left no doubt as to the spirit and determination of the country, but has affirmed them as loyally and as emphatically as our fine soldiers will affirm them on the firing line.

LIABILITY OF ALIENS TO MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time given me I desire to call attention to the situation that exists in my own county of Westmoreland, Pa. There we have 26,940 men registered for military service under the selective-draft law, and of these 9,570 claimed the right to exemption upon the ground that they are aliens. More than 33 per cent of the population of my district, therefore, will escape military duty because they are foreign born and have not taken out naturalization papers; but an investigation by the sheriff and the exemption board showed that more than about 95 per cent of these men have been here the required length of time and could have taken out citizenship papers if they had so desired. That indicates that these men are living in our country, not, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] says, without the right to acquire and own property, but, on the contrary, they have every right that an American citizen has to own and acquire and sell property, and they are to-day standing on the streets when our men are marching off to war, and are smilingly saying that they are going to get the jobs of the young American men who are going to war. This is an outrage upon American citizens, and it is up to this Congress to pass some law to remedy that evil.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a bill introduced for consideration known as H. R. 5667, reported from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, entitled "A bill to provide for the deportation of certain aliens, and for other purposes," one that is exceedingly important and should be considered and either enacted in the form it is presented by the House committee or else amended and passed.

It appears that this bill aims at an existing evil, which is exceedingly pressing throughout the country. Under the selective-draft law, which is entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," which was approved on the 18th of May, 1917, it is provided in section 3 as follows:

Third. To raise by draft as herein provided, organize, and equip an additional force of 500,000 enlisted men, or such part or parts thereof as he may at any time deem necessary, and to provide the necessary officers, line and staff, etc.

And by section 2:

Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens or male persons not alien enemies who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 21 and 30 years, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act. Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof, and credit shall be given to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof for the number of men who were in the military service of the United States as members of the National Guard on April 1, 1917, or who have since said date entered the military service of the United States from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision, either as members of the Regular Army or the National Guard.

Under this section of the bill unnaturalized residents of the United States are exempt from the selective draft, and while the quota of the number of soldiers to be furnished is based on the population, which includes aliens, yet when it comes to furnishing the actual soldiers, these aliens escape responsibility and the burden falls upon the native and naturalized Americans. That this process of selection and this method of assigning quotas to the several States and subdivisions thereof is unfair is apparent from an examination of the law; but a concrete statement from my own district, composed of the counties of Westmoreland and Butler, Pa., will demonstrate the unfairness of the application of the selective-draft law.

In the county of Westmoreland, Pa., there were registered on June 5, 1917, 26,940 men within the military age eligible to the selective draft, made up as follows:

White male citizens	16,789
Black male citizens	485
Total	17,274
White male aliens	9,570
Alien enemies	96
Total	9,666

Of these aliens 40 per cent are subjects of Austria, with whom we are not at war. Thus in my native county more than 35 per cent of the registered male citizens subject to military duty under the selective-draft law are exempt and the quota must be filled, not from 26,940, but from 17,274 men, which imposes a great burden on the native and naturalized Americans.

In Butler County there were 1,626 aliens within the military age not subject to draft. These aliens, most of them having resided in the United States the required length of time to become citizens, had they taken out their papers when they were first eligible to do so, would have been citizens of the United States, but the majority of them do not intend to take out naturalization papers. They believe by not becoming citizens, and not voting, that they escape the burdens of taxation, which they do, and they prefer that situation to the duties, obligations, and pleasures of citizenship.

That such conditions can not be tolerated and allowed to exist is very plain to every patriotic American citizen, and it is the duty of this Congress to remedy this unbearable situation.

This has resulted in great dissatisfaction among the Americans who have been drafted, all over the country, and it is only the belief that Congress will correct it that has kept down the feeling that is so strong against this inequality of the burdens imposed upon American citizens by the selective-draft law.

This resolution is entitled:

Joint resolution requesting the Secretary of State to open diplomatic negotiations with certain Governments with a view to obtaining their approval and sanction for action by the United States permitting the inclusion in the armed forces of the United States of such citizens of the countries of such Governments as are within the United States.

It is now asserted that it ought not to pass because the Secretary of State is negotiating with foreign countries to correct this situation. The bill above referred to was reported on the 4th of August, over two months ago, and so far as we are now advised, the State Department has made no noticeable progress toward solving this difficulty.

The objection that is made against this resolution is that it will interfere with treaty obligations, and that if we impress citizens of foreign nations with whom we are not at war and may even be our allies, into the military service of the United States, such nations might also impress our citizens residing within their territorial limits into their military service.

I think it should be admitted that the citizens of every country engaged in this war wherever they reside are entitled to take part in it and assume their fair share of its burdens. If they are not willing to fight under the American flag, they should be compelled to go back and fight in their own country and under their own flag, and alien enemies residing within the jurisdiction of the United States should be interned and compelled to earn their support in some civil employment, just as we seized the alien enemy ships of Germany when the United States declared war against Germany. This would be no hardship on the citizens of Italy, France, England, or Russia. They are our allies in this great war. They will be benefited by our winning this war, and they certainly should be compelled either to fight in the armies of the United States and commingle with our troops or be placed in separate regiments and commanded by separate officers of their own nationalities, over whom the American officers should exercise authority, or else they should be deported to their native country, to which they owe allegiance, so that such countries might impress them into the military service.

It is unfair to draft our own native American boys into the military service and to permit one-third of the men who are of the draft age and capable of rendering military service, and who reside within the United States, to escape by simply stating they are "not citizens." The effect of this has been to require two-thirds of the population to furnish the full quota of soldiers for the Army, and in some small communities every American has been taken and only foreigners remain. In other communities where a large per cent of the Americans have been taken the foreigners remain to fill their good positions and to enjoy the blessings of comfort and peace while the American boys fight the war.

This situation, created by the existing treaties, is intolerable. Mr. Speaker, the resolution only requests the Secretary of War to take up negotiations so that when we return here in December we can promptly pass a law, let us hope, in time for the next draft that will compel these "slacker aliens" to enter the armies of the United States and bear their full share of the burdens of this war.

A singular condition was disclosed by the various exemption boards throughout the country, who made examination into the facts, as to how many of these slacker foreigners are justly entitled to be exempted. That is, how many of them had been in the country long enough to become naturalized, if they had promptly applied to the courts for that purpose, and it has been disclosed that over 90 per cent have been here sufficient length of time. Therefore it is very apparent that these men are intentionally evading the duties of citizenship, and especially military service. I contend that no government is so impotent as to be required to permit this evil to be unchallenged and uncorrected.

The whole theory of the selective-draft law is that it will muster the entire strength of the Nation for military and industrial purposes; that the entire man power will be utilized for national defense between the ages of 21 and 31. But apply this law as it now stands and over one-third of the population escape all obligation, civil as well as military.

This situation has become acute, and has been accentuated and emphasized by the departure of the American boys for the training camps and permitting the foreigners to remain at home. The feeling is intensified, and it is only the belief that Congress will remedy this critical situation that has, in a measure, satisfied our people and lulled them into waiting for such congressional action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it appears that the State Department has prevented the enactment of any law on this subject, and now opposition is raised to even the passage of this resolution, the purpose of which is only to strengthen the hands of the administration in taking up diplomatic negotiations to correct this evil; and we are compelled to go home to our constituents without having done anything and without any consolation to give them except the fact that the State Department is negotiating, or proposes to negotiate, as it presumably has been ever since war was declared, to correct this evil. For my part, I think this is unsatisfactory. I think this resolution should pass, and I think, further, that some law should have been enacted that would have permitted the United States to compel every alien resident of the United States, if a citizen of an ally country, either to enter our armies or be deported, and every alien enemy to be either confined or compelled to enter some industrial pursuit where he would have been kept from plotting against or committing overt acts against the United States.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfair to permit foreigners to live in the United States, enjoy our free schools, acquire property, be employed and receive liberal wages, accumulate a competence, and yet escape all the obligations of government that are imposed upon our own citizens. Such conditions are simply intolerable.

International law does not require that any such burdens be imposed upon the United States, and we have a high authority to the effect that no such discrimination ought to be allowed in favor of aliens. I quote:

> Since compulsory military service to a foreign country can always be avoided by timely departure from it, there appears to be no reason why, in itself, it should necessarily form any exception to the general rule that a government may, if it chooses, require the same support, whether personal or pecuniary, of aliens whom it permits to reside within its borders, as it requires of its own citizens. Discrimination against aliens is doubtless contrary to the trend of modern civilization, but there is no foundation in international law for requiring discrimination in their favor. (American Society of International Law, vol. 5, p. 223.)

This seems to be a fair statement of international law and it is founded on principles of equity and justice. It certainly would be no hardship to enforce this proposition against the alien residents of the United States at this time. It would subject them to the same burdens and duties that are now imposed by law upon our own citizens. In fact, Mr. Speaker, these foreigners ought not to expect to remain in the country and escape military service and by their presence create dissatisfaction among the people at home and discontent in the ranks of our soldiers at the front. In fact, I think it is most conducive to dissatisfaction in the ranks of our soldier boys to have them march away with a crowd of alien slackers standing along the streets witnessing their going, then know that they will turn back and fill their places in the industrial life.

Congress certainly has power to legislate for the "general welfare," and this seems to have been one of the grounds upon which the Supreme Court rested its decision in the following case:

> The right to exclude or expel aliens, or any class of aliens, absolutely or upon certain conditions, in war or in peace, [is] an inherent and inalienable right of every sovereign and independent nation, essential to its safety, its independence, and its welfare. (Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S., 698.)

During our Civil War foreigners fought in the armies of the United States with great distinction; in fact, whole regiments of German, Irish, and other nationalities were enlisted, and when the question was raised by the British Government their minister was instructed that—

> There is no rule or principle of international law which prohibits the Government of any country from requiring aliens resident within its territories to serve in the militia or police of the country or to contribute to the support of such establishment.

These authorities go directly to the point that we have a legal right to impress foreign alien residents within our territory into the military service. The principle goes even further, Mr. Speaker, because we certainly have a right to expel a foreigner whose conduct makes him an undesirable resident, and we can enforce that authority at all times and against all nations. The right has been unchallenged, and ought to be accepted as settled law applicable to this situation. One further citation of authority, Mr. Speaker, is sufficient to sustain the soundness of this contention:

> Treaties and declarations by which a Government stipulates for its citizens a right of sojourn, of acquiring real property, of carrying on an industry on foreign territory, ought not to be interpreted as involving a renunciation on the part of the other contracting power of its right to expel aliens whose conduct should make it desirable. (Diplomatic Protection of Citizens Abroad, Borchard, p. 49.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to further cite legal authorities to establish the soundness of the position that the United States, under existing law, has a right to impress these foreigners into the military service or to deport them out of the country, but we can apparently well do neither. Hence, it is necessary for us to legislate to correct this evil and compel some action that will relieve this critical situation. This resolution merely proposes to aid the State Department in its diplomatic negotiations.

We have already granted the right to our allies to come into the United States and establish recruiting stations, and, if possible, induce citizens of their country residing within the territory of the United States, who are not citizens, to volunteer in the military service of such allies. England alone has established such stations, but few have volunteered. Therefore it is apparent that some legislation must be immediately enacted to correct this evil and catch the alien slackers.

Mr. Speaker, we have come to a time in this war when legislation on this subject is imperative.

The laws of our country should be amended so that aliens, upon entering the United States, should be required to declare their intention, whether they are coming here for the purpose of permanent citizenship or merely a temporary residence. If for temporary residence they should be required to register, indicating the time and purpose of their stay in the United States. If for permanent residence they should be required to make such declaration, to obtain a knowledge of the English language and of our form of government, and at the expiration of a year should be examined, and if they prove undesirable they should be deported; if not, at the end of two years they should be required to take out naturalization papers, and at the end of five years to become full citizens; but after one year, if their residence is to be permanent, they should be liable to military service, the payment of taxes, and the other burdens of government such as is imposed upon citizens residing within the limits of the United States. This would impose no hardship upon foreigners who come in good faith to become citizens of this great Republic.

Mr. Speaker, for those who desire to come here and become part of us we still have a most earnest welcome. Our institutions, our country, and all of the liberties of our great freedom is theirs, merely for the coming here and becoming citizens of our country. No burdens will be imposed upon them that are not already carried by the native born or the naturalized. Political liberty, religious freedom, unbounded opportunity is open to them and to their children. To all such this country ever will be a haven and a home; but to those who seek to avoid responsibility, to shirk the burdens of our country, light though they be, we can not extend the welcome hand.

Mr. Speaker, this session of Congress is closing. It is the most memorable one that ever assembled in the Capital City. Within the limits of its six months' life it has passed more laws fraught with importance, not only for the citizens of our country but for the world, than any previous Congress. I myself have voted for all the measures that the administration desired or asked for as essential in the prosecution of this great war. I have forgotten party politics. I have acted only from motives of patriotic impulse. I have stood always for that which I believed to be for my country's good. I endeavored to sustain the President and the administration in every policy deemed proper and necessary for the prosecution of this great war to a speedy and successful termination. Every law that would contribute to the comfort of our soldiers I supported most earnestly. I believe the American people are stirred by patriotic fervor by this war. They are willing to make any sacrifice necessary to win a complete victory. America is sending its soldier boys to the battle fields in Europe, because by so doing we are defending our rights and battling against our assailant—the German Kaiser and the military oligarchy that supports him. A victory for American arms means that hereafter and in the future American ships, under the American flag, can sail the high seas free from assassination by submarines, and that American lives will be secure on sea and on land.

Let us not adjourn without passing some law that will correct this yet uncorrected evil of the alien slacker in our midst.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] complains that persons do not understand socialism. Perhaps not; but who is there who can distinguish the 57 varieties of socialism? Why a Socialist should defend the I. W. W. is more than I can understand. It is not so many years ago that the Socialist Party was wellnigh disrupted by a fight in the national convention between the "reds" and the "yellows"—that is, between the direct actionists and the more peacefully inclined. But many Socialists continue to make the troubles of the I. W. W. their troubles. They continually bring up this case of Little, who was lynched in Butte, Mont., a while ago. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] has just referred to it, and has charged me with defending that crime. Now, Mr. Speaker, I neither defend nor approve lynching or mob law anywhere. But I have taken the floor to repeat some observations made by me at the time of that unfortunate act. I said then that responsibility for the lynching of Little could be charged to the Federal Government. I repeat it. The demise of that unfortunate, half mad, fanatical man was at the hands of infuriated citizens. Why? Because he stood on a soap box night after night in that city and denounced the soldiers of the United States. Called them scabs in uniform. Urged citizens to spit at the soldiers and belittle them. Why did he do that? Because he wanted to bring on a riot. He wanted to create class hatred. He went the limit. Perhaps he wanted to be a martyr to the revolution he and his kind are engaged in fomenting—a revolution which is to be of "blood and iron," as certain radical Socialists tell you in their newspapers and speeches. Little was a member of the general executive board of the I. W. W. He was one of Haywood's right-hand men. He was not so mad that he did not know what he was doing. He was sane enough to know that if he was sufficiently vicious in his street speeches he could bring on a riot. He did bring on a riot. He was the victim. He was lynched.

And then his followers complained bitterly that one of their number had become a victim of riot and mob law. Mr. Speaker, invariably they claim the protection of the very laws they themselves are breaking. That is one of their ways of promoting class hatred and discord, and hoping to bring on the revolution of which they are always prating.

Now, who was to blame for the lynching of this man at Butte? The Federal Government itself. Simply because it did not act quickly enough in suppressing soap-box sedition in Butte and elsewhere.

The responsibility lies at the door of the Federal Government. Little had preached sedition from a soap box for weeks. He had said everything he could think of against the Government of the United States. Nightly he referred to those in military service as "Uncle Sam's scabs in uniform."

The officials stood around and listened to Little and wondered what they were going to do about it. They even wrote letters to the Department of Justice in Washington, asking for advice. Little's speeches were anarchistic, treasonable, and seditious. City and State authorities said that it was a matter for the Federal Government to handle, and the Federal Government passed it right back to the States and cities, saying, "Handle your own riots."

Mr. Speaker, you and I and all of us deplore lynch law. It is a blot upon civilization and is never invoked where constituted authority acts vigorously and swiftly. When such authority is lax the people are likely to take affairs in their own hands. This is proved by the Butte tragedy. Such action should never become necessary, but history tells us that it is done whenever constituted authority falters and indulges in correspondence instead of cutting all red tape and precedent and nipping impending trouble in the bud.

The point that I make is that interference by the strong arm of the law should never be delayed to the stage where either a citizen or a disturber loses his life. The law is all right and omnipotent. Only its execution is at fault. Since the lynching at Butte the Government has acted. The Department of Justice has shut down on treason, and on sedition, and on conspiracy, and on enemies of the Government, foreign and domestic. Thus we may hope the Butte occurrence will not be repeated at any place in the United States. The Post Office Department has, under the law, refused to circulate newspapers that preach damnable treason; that teach slimy sedition; that urge on those who would hurt this Government of ours. Who shall say that these departments are not acting for the best interests of this great Government? There can be but one answer.

Mr. Speaker, if seditious publications were permitted to continue there would be many other crimes such as the lynching of that man out at Butte. To have continued the circulation of such printed stuff as I have seen in the office of the Postmaster General, clipped by the yard from these red revolutionary newspapers, would have caused lynchings and mob law everywhere. Under the law which refuses mail privileges to such publications Postmaster General Burleson does not become a dictator; he becomes a magistrate. The law empowers him to act, and all who know that sterling American know that he will act with discretion but with firmness.

The man who was lynched in Butte could not have stood on a soap box in New York or Philadelphia, or here in the Capital City, night after night for three weeks, belittling and defiling our marching soldiers, without being lynched. True, he and his kind did that very thing in time of peace and received the plaudits of their misguided followers and no complaint was made by the authorities. But we were at peace then. Now we are at war. And every one of us has to give up many claimed rights for the general good of the whole Government.

Have we been generous as to free speech and a free press? Why, we have been generous beyond the danger point. Because of her abuse of the right of free speech Emma Goldman should have been deported. She is a revolutionist. Her lieutenant, Alexander Berkman, also. He is a revolutionist; and he is a Russian.

Why not send Berkman back to Russia and let him help his own countrymen settle their revolution? That might occupy him for the rest of his lifetime. It took France 82 years, or from 1789 to 1871, to permanently establish a stable government after the French had overthrown Louis XVI.

Revolutions do not end in a minute. The French beheaded Louis XVI in 1793. They established a directorate. It was as feeble as the Russian Government is now. Napoleon came to the front, established a consulate, absorbed that, and became First Consul. Then came the Empire, followed by its collapse, and the imprisonment of Napoleon at St. Helena. Then the Bourbons returned to power. In 1830 Louis Philippe was made king, not of France but of the French. He lasted until 1848—18 years—when the second Republic was established. That lasted three years, and then Louis Napoleon became Emperor, and he lasted 18 years. Then the Commune, followed by the third Republic, the latter permanent and successful, and now fighting to the death for its territorial rights.

So, my friends, those who preach revolution in this country had better give a little study to the matter, and they had better be citizens before they prescribe rules for us. And they had better postpone their attempts to put their theories into practice until we get through with the business at hand. Now, then, I do not assail socialists in general. Thousands of them, like Russell and Lunn, have come out strong for this Government just as it is in this crisis.

Treason is punishable by death. Only at the risk of his life should any person be permitted to say or do anything that imperils the success of our course in this war. Our boys who go to the front have a right to expect and demand loyalty behind them. Our country must not only ask it; our country must and does demand it.

I do not pick out the I. W. W. aggregation for particular assault, while others go scot free. The Federal Government has exposed the I. W. W. Its leaders have been jailed. Patriotic union-labor organizations of my section and all other sections have repudiated it. I do not find it advantageous to call every man who does not think as I think an I. W. W. No; I go further than that. I declare that every man who is not for the Government is against it. Minor differences must give way. The President must be given full military power. Undivided Americanism must show in every one of us. Save the country, and then we will settle our differences in a greater and freer America than we have ever dreamed of.

Oh, my friends, the time has come when the American people must be fully aroused to the vast proportions of the task they have undertaken in this war. We are not only fighting the greatest and most effective military organization ever gotten together in the history of the world, but we are constantly engaged in a struggle against an insidious and vicious German propaganda in our own country as well as in neutral countries friendly to us, the slimy tentacles of which extend down to the very foundation of the Government itself.

We must prepare ourselves not only to meet and defeat the enemy upon the field of battle, but we must meet and defeat him in the dark passageways of intrigue and espionage, where frequently, in the guise of a friend, he seeks to assassinate the patriotic impulses and sentiments of the people and to poison their minds against their own Government.

My friends, free speech must not be used as a mask for such as these, neither shall a free press become a poisoned arrow. Free speech remains to us—and always shall—but free sedition is marked for destruction. A free press remains, but the free right to preach treason is gone.

In spite of the startling revelations recently made by the State Department and the Department of Justice, few of us have a real conception of the vast scheme of plotting, conspiracy, and intrigue going on in the United States under various forms, many of them clumsily attempting to hide their cloven hoofs and foul purposes under the snowy plumage of the dove of peace.

Thus does the ravisher of Belgium make war and attempt to undermine the liberal governments of the world. This is Germany, whose vaulting ambition is not confined to the territory of the entente, but who has fixed its greedy and avaricious eyes upon the vast wealth and wonderful resources of this country, realizing, as it does, that the shadow of this giant Republic of the West is cast across its pathway only before complete world domination can be theirs.

And yet there are people in this country who sympathize with the cause of Germany, and many others who are lukewarm to the cause of the democracies opposed to her! Before war was declared there might have been some excuse for division among us. Patriotic citizens may have disagreed as to the wisdom of plunging the United States into the mighty maelstrom of the European struggle. But now that war has been formally declared by our Government there is no place for the patriot except squarely under the flag of his country and behind its Commander in Chief in the supreme struggle before us. If he occupies any other place, if he raises his voice in any other cause, he is giving aid and comfort to the enemy, which is treason to your country and my country—the United States of America!

We must be one for all and all for one, and we shall see in the end the grand old Stars and Stripes triumphantly planted upon the heights of victory, there to stand as freedom's beacon light forever. [Applause.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the same period of time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I have a communication from one of the district members of one of the exemption boards of Ohio stating that under the present working of the conscription law there will scarcely be a single American citizen left subject to the draft in certain districts in Ohio, and all that will be left will be aliens not subject to the operations of this law, and that the palpable injustice of such operation is producing a bad state of mind. He asks that something be done to relieve the bitterness that that situation is creating. I wrote him that the only thing I saw in the way was the diplomatic situation, and that this resolution was introduced to relieve that. I have letters of similar tenor from members of the local boards. There is a widespread dissatisfaction over the operations of the law in this regard. I hope that this resolution will pass.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Ohio is a well-informed man, and he understands that the Secretary of State is now doing, and has been for some time doing, the very thing that this resolution requests him to do, does he not?

Mr. FESS. I understand that he is making an effort to that end.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think it is fair to the Government, to the Secretary of State, to let the impression go by that there is nothing being done. The Secretary of State is now doing the very thing, and has been for some time, that this resolution requests him to do.

Mr. FESS. This resolution can not interfere with the Secretary of State, but will be of some advantage to him, it seems to me, in the expending of it. The gentleman knows I would not vote to embarrass the State Department in any of its problems, but I am sure this resolution will help rather than hinder the work of the department.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield a quarter of a minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SHOUSE].

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. And the same period of time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make another speech; but for the possible benefit of some Members who have come in since this debate began, I want to call attention to just one thing, and that is that there is no opposition to this proposal at all except from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON]——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. ROGERS. I do not yield.

Mr. GORDON. Well, the gentleman will let me correct him?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not yield.

Mr. ROGERS (continuing). Except from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], who is wholly out of sympathy with the idea of including in our Army a single alien, who is wholly out of sympathy with my insistence that these aliens must be required to do something in return for the privileges of American residence. Gentlemen, that is the crux of this resolution—whether you believe in requiring the aliens within the United States to do their duty to the United States or whether you are content to let them step in and take the jobs left vacant by the American boys who are on their way across the sea and into the trenches of Europe.

Mr. GORDON rose.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not. The only way by which we can show our opinion upon that point is by passing this resolution. This resolution has been unanimously approved by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It has in its terms been approved by the President of the United States; it has in its terms been approved by the Secretary of State of the United States; it has in its terms been approved by the Acting Secretary of State of the United States, and it can not, I submit, be objected to by any reasonable man. It puts the Congress of the United States and the House of Representatives in the position of taking an interest in this alien-slacker problem, which is one of the most vital questions before the United States to-day. It does not commit the United States in any way whatever. It calls upon the Secretary of State to report back to the American Congress the results of his deliberations. It strengthens his hands in his negotiations and it tells the people of America that we are not satisfied to have conditions continue as they have been continuing, to have the aliens profit at the expense of our American boys. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, it is now within 15 minutes of the hour fixed by the joint resolution for the moment of adjournment. It is evident from the situation that a quorum of the House is lacking——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No!

Mr. ROGERS. A roll call being necessary and the time being inadequate for calling the roll, and my preference, and I am sure that of the House, being that we should not be in the midst of a roll call when the hour of 3 arrives, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings on this bill up to the present time be vacated.

The SPEAKER. Withdraw the joint resolution; that is the easiest way.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the joint resolution.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take a recess until two minutes of 3 o'clock p. m.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article on the "Constitution of a World Court," by A. S. Hough, of Jacksonville, Fla.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the article referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until two minutes before 3 o'clock.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soil-products exposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of soil products. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the legislation of this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the legislation of this session. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of soldier mail.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of soldier mail. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] has informed me that he wants the privilege of extension of his remarks on the revenue bill. He was called out of the city and could not get back here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] be permitted to extend his remarks on the revenue bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of this extra session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the work of this extra session. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the work of the session. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado also makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President announced approval of the following bills and joint resolutions:

H. R. 5918. An act to authorize the President to organize provisionally as Field Artillery or Infantry, and to use as Field Artillery or Infantry during the existing emergency, such regiments of Cavalry as he may designate; and

H. J. Res. 162. Joint resolution authorizing the expenditure of money upon lands purchased for use of the Ordnance Department of the Army without reference to section 355 of the Revised Statutes.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks that the House stand in recess until 2 minutes of 3 o'clock. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 2 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 2 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The SPEAKER. We have two clocks here, and neither one of them is right. [Laughter.] I go by my watch.

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I congratulate you on the ending of the most important session of Congress in the history of the Republic. The amount of business that we have transacted is absolutely amazing and stupendous. I think every Member of this House has contributed all that was in him to the support of the Government of the United States in this great emergency. [Applause.] So far as I have been able to observe—and I have observed very closely—partisan politics has been temporarily banished from this House. [Applause.]

I think every man has given the utmost of patriotism to his service here. I doubt very much whether any other Congress from now until the day of judgment will ever vote as much money in one session as we have voted; I hope not. [Laughter.] Every dollar that the departments have asked, or the President has made it appear they needed, they have got, and the Sixty-fifth Congress has deserved well of the country.

This House has been very fortunate in one thing, and that is the general good health of the Members and the very few deaths that have occurred. I served in one House when we had only 359 Members and lost 17 Members, and 3 of them were dead in the city at the same time. We ought to thank God for His blessings in that regard.

And now, the hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, at which time we were to adjourn, I adjourn this House, in this the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, sine die, with the hope that God will have us all in His holy keeping during the recess. [Applause.]

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter in reference to the meeting of the International Parliamentary Conference of Commerce to be held in Rome, Italy, October 11 to 14, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 377); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a copy of a dispatch from the American chargé d'affaires at Tokyo, Japan, together with copies of the inclosures therewith, reporting that on October 18, 1917, a party of five members of the lower house of the Japanese Diet would sail from Yokohama for the United States for the purpose of studying political, social, and economic conditions in the United States (H. Doc. No. 378); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3135) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Ariz.," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 199), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASTINGS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 906) making an appropriation to Stuart, Lewis, Gordon & Rutherford in payment of legal services rendered by them to the Creek Nation, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 200), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 6489) to renew and extend certain letters patent; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LONERGAN: A bill (H. R. 6498) granting an increase of pension to Butler George; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6499) granting a pension to Mary C. Kelsey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6500) granting a pension to Rose L. LaValley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 6501) granting a pension to Estefano A. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Miss RANKIN: A bill (H. R. 6502) granting a pension to John F. Smoot; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6503) granting a pension to Mary A. Walter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6504) granting a pension to Lizzie M. Baker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6505) granting a pension to Lucinda Harrington; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 6506) granting a pension to Alice J. Farmer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: A bill (H. R. 6507) granting an increase of pension to Charles Hammelman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, the action of Congress to-day, when written into the history of this country, will constitute the most momentous page of the annals of the United States of America since that memorable Fourth of July in 1776, when the Liberty Bell in Philadelphia announced the birth of the Nation.

Unborn generations of the children of men will feel the effect of what we do here to-day, and it is because of my firm belief that the action now proposed will be wholly evil in its effect on those future generations as well as disastrous to the welfare of our country to-day that I am compelled to vote against the measure declaring war.

It is a source of profound regret for me in a crisis like this to dissent from the views of the majority; it is still more a matter of regret for me to voice my disapproval of the attitude of the administration, but it is my solemn duty to do both.

The call to "stand by the President" may be a clarion call to many, but a higher, more potent voice tells me to "stand by the people."

Ever since I have been a Member of Congress my actions have been guided by three motives—the dictates of my conscience, my love for my country, and the wishes of my constituents. Sometimes one of these motives has been the strongest, but in the present instance the dictates of my conscience, my love for my country, and the wishes of my constituents, expressed in thousands of letters, telegrams, and petitions all impel me to vote, work, and speak insistently against this proposal to drag our country into the maelstrom of this ghastly world war.

I am comforted with the thought that in other periods of stress in this country greater men and better men than I have refused to "stand by the President," and that there is ample warrant for the exercise of independent opinion may be shown in the following extracts from the speeches of Abraham Lincoln and Thomas Corwin.

Abraham Lincoln refused to stand by his President. Even after war had been declared and our soldiers were fighting in Mexico he said of President Polk, speaking as a Congressman, on January 12, 1848.

I more than suspect that he is deeply conscious of being in the wrong; that he feels the blood of this war, like the blood of Abel, is crying to heaven against him. That originally having some strong motive to involve the two countries in war, and trusting to escape scrutiny by fixing the public gaze upon the exceeding brightness of military glory—that attractive rainbow that rises in showers of blood; that serpent's eye that charms to destroy—he plunged into it and has swept on and on till he now finds himself he knows not where.

Thomas Corwin, foremost among all the illustrious sons of Ohio, orator, lawyer, Congressman, Senator, governor, ambassador, and Cabinet member, like Abraham Lincoln did not believe he should "stand by the President" save when he thought the President was right. In the very midst of the Mexican War, in one of the most notable speeches of all time, the great Ohioan denounced President James K. Polk. And to-day the verdict of history is that Corwin was right and patriotic, and Americans are ashamed of the unholy war Polk got the country into.

In his speech of February 11, 1847, Corwin said:

If it be my duty to grant whatever the President demands, for what am I here? Have I no will upon the subject? Is it not placed at my discretion, understanding, judgment? Have an American Senate and House of Representatives nothing to do but obey the bidding of the President? With these doctrines for our guide, tell me, tell the American people, what is the difference between your American democracy and the most odious, most hateful despotism, that a merciful God has ever allowed a nation to be afflicted with?

We are asked to go into the war in the sacred name of liberty. I am impelled to recall the famous sentence of Madame Roland at the foot of the guillotine in the bloody days of the French Revolution when she said, "O Liberty! Liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!"

For, Mr. Chairman, I assert with the most absolute conviction that not a single nation involved in the war in Europe is to-day fighting in the cause of liberty. Great Britain is fighting to keep control of the seas and Germany is disputing that control. France is fighting to regain Alsace and Lorraine. Russia is fighting to gain Constantinople and the control of the Balkan States, and the smaller nations are in the fight to get what crumbs may fall their way, and back of all is the probability that the dynasties of Europe, feeling their thrones shaking, were not unwilling to head off the coming triumph of democracy by giving the common people this bloody work to keep them busy.

The arrant nonsense that England is fighting in the cause is so ridiculous that it hardly requires an answer; but, in all seriousness, I would like any student of history to mention a single instance in history where the English Government ever fought for liberty. Was she fighting for anyone's liberty in Dublin during Easter week a year ago? Is she fighting for liberty in Greece to-day? Was she fighting for liberty when she strangled the Boers?

No, a thousand times no! Mr. Speaker, America's place is not on the bloody battle fields of Europe to-day. Our duty is to keep the sacred fires of liberty burning here. When the war is over we will have our work to do in helping the cause of democracy throughout the world, and we will be able to do it with a better grace if we keep out of entangling alliances with any foreign nation. Let me quote here a letter from George Washington to Patrick Henry:

[From a letter to Patrick Henry, dated from Mount Vernon, Oct. 9, 1795. See Ford, "Writings of Washington," Vol. XIII.]

My ardent desire is and my aim has been (as far as dependent upon the executive department) to comply strictly with all our engagements, foreign and domestic, but to keep the United States free from political connections with every other country, to see them independent of all, and under the influence of none. In a word, I want an American character that the powers of Europe may be convinced that we act for ourselves and not for others. This, in my judgment, is the only way to be respected abroad and happy at home, and not by becoming partisans of Great Britain or France create dissensions, disturb the public tranquillity, and destroy, perhaps forever, the cement which binds the Union.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

In connection with this subject I can not do better than insert the following extract from an editorial in the New York American, one big newspaper, at least, that is not controlled by the Tory propagandists:

Europe is a seething volcano, which may explode at any time and which surely will explode in the near future. Europe's thrones and Europe's Governments and Europe's ruling classes and Europe's institutions are all rocking on to their fall.

A series of rapid revolutions is sure to change the whole face of political and social Europe, and within a year or two—it may be within two or three months; no man can tell—Europe will see only everywhere victorious democracies, which have cast out their Governments and their old institutions of government.

If we enter this war now as the champion of existing Governments, we can only delay the triumphs of democracy.

Instead of being the one Nation to which all the new democracies will turn their eyes for counsel and help, we will simply be in thier eyes the discredited ally of the Governments and the military and social castes they have violently flung away from them.

Senators and Representatives, it does seem almost madness to entangle our great democracy in alliances with Europe's Governments at the very time when it is apparent to every foreseeing and thoughtful man that Europe's peoples are about to destroy and to cast out these same Governments.

We do most earnestly believe that our true policy now is to keep clear of any alliance, to keep clear of entanglement in Europe's warfare, and simply to maintain an attitude of armed neutrality until Europe's inevitable revolutions have done their sudden work and the new democratic Europe, with which we can negotiate the peace of the world quickly and certainly, has emerged from this deluge of blood and agony.

Senators and Representatives, let us arm our merchant ships, let us provide for them the convoy and defense of our Navy, let us arm our whole Nation for its own defense, and there let us stop and rest on our arms and wait during the few months that will inevitably see the war destroy itself if we remain aloof and refuse to inject new vigor into its wasted fires and energies.

It seems to us, Senators and Representatives, almost madness to entangle our Nation in the alliances and wars of governments that are so insecure and that appear to be so near their doom and their extinction.

It seems to us that the voices of self-interest and of duty to ourselves and to the whole world unite to counsel caution and contentment with the defense of our ships and a complete aloofness from Europe's fast-dying struggle, to the end that whether that struggle concludes in exhaustion or in a frightful explosion of revolutionary forces, we may then be free from any entanglements, free to use our huge wealth and resources, not in adding to the universal wreck and horror but in succoring the miserable and wretched millions, and so crown our Nation with the gratitude of mankind and win the acclamations of the ages to come.

Senators and Representatives, we have tried to speak soberly, decently, straightforwardly, without passion and without malice, with charity toward all; and most certainly we have spoken with a deep sense of devotion to the land of our birth and of our fathers' birth, and with a profound sense of the gravity of this hour and of the dangers and perils that beset the Nation.

May that Providence which has so long guided us and our fathers in ways of righteousness and justice and peace strengthen your hearts and give you wisdom and courage to exercise your great authority for the welfare of mankind and the happiness and security of your people.

God keep and defend the Republic, and give all of us this day wisdom to see the right and to do the right.

I wish also to insert here a "plea for the clarification of the issues," which is an illuminating document:

PLEA FOR CLARIFICATION OF THE ISSUES.

AN OPEN LETTER.

NEW YORK, March 23, 1917.

To the PRESIDENT:

We earnestly press upon you that when Congress convenes you lead and clarify public opinion, now not only confused, but intentionally misled and in conflicting directions.

We urge that you analyze the international situation for the benefit both of Congress and of the public at large, expressing the national desire to keep alive international law, and to make effective protest against ruthlessness and lawlessness.

We beg you to set forth the significance of the conflicting policies publicly urged upon Congress, that in making decision it may clear its purposes to itself and to the public. For instance, if war should come, what of the following questions: Should the United States form an alliance, informal or formal, with the entente allies, or enter the war without any understanding with them, or how should it proceed? Should this country enter the war to establish the right of neutrals to defend by force of arms their commerce with belligerents? Should this country enter the war for the purpose of underwriting foreign bonds, as is now urged by officers of the Federal reserve bank? What, precisely and clearly, is the purpose of war, if war comes, and on what terms would we consent at any time to a settlement?

We recall that last summer, when millions of your fellow citizens could see no outcome of the Mexican crisis except war on Mexico—on the innocent and the guilty alike—you announced that that was the long way and the wrong way to settle international issues, making mere might the basis of settlements, arousing hatreds, and leading the citizens of the nation against which war is declared to feel it an imperative patriotic duty to defend their fatherland.

We believe that the same principles hold good in the present crisis, and we look to you in earnest hope for their realization.

JOINT COMMISSION OF INQUIRY AND CONCILIATION.

In view of the fact that the great contribution which the United States can make to civilization during the present war is the championship of neutral rights and the advocacy of an international organization of guarantees of future peace, a policy in accordance with the best American ideals and the prime achievements of American diplomacy, including those of the administrations of Presidents Washington, John Adams, Lincoln, and Wilson, we respectfully urge upon the President, the Congress, and the people of the United States of America the steadfast adherence to that policy.

In pursuance of this policy we urge the President to offer to appoint two joint high commissions of inquiry and conciliation with Great Britain and Germany, respectively, for the purpose of agreeing at least upon a modus vivendi, perhaps upon the basis of the declaration of London, until the end of the present war, which shall conserve neutral rights.

The essence of neutrality is impartiality—an impartial assertion of neutral rights and an impartial observance of neutral duties. The joint commissions of inquiry and conciliation are a legal, American, and preeminently successful means of maintaining our neutrality.

MEDIATION.

The United States agreed with other nations at The Hague that it could never be deemed an unfriendly act for a nation to offer mediation either before or during a war. In accordance with this convention the United States has itself proffered its good offices to the belligerents during the present conflict.

The rumor now comes that a neutral nation is offering mediation in the issue between the United States and Germany, and that the United States Government is contemplating the summary refusal of the tender.

We submit that such a refusal on the part of the United States would be inconsistent with principles for which this country has stood. Should an offer of mediation be tendered, therefore, we urge that it be accepted.

CONFERENCE OF NEUTRALS.

The United States has, through its President, attempted to stand as a representative of international rights. Individually it has suffered no greater infringement of its rights than several other neutrals, yet it has already resorted to more drastic measures than any nonbelligerent by breaking off relations and arming its ships. Before it takes any further step, either in defending its prestige or in assuming to establish international law and represent neutral nations, it should call a conference of neutrals to clarify and, if possible, unify the neutral attitude toward the illegal methods of all belligerents.

CONSEQUENCES OF ENTERING THE WAR.

Statistics show clearly that to send a considerable army to Europe would involve such a drain on our food resources as to plunge us into the famine conditions of Europe. The popular idea that war producing an embargo on the exportation of foodstuffs would lower prices here is the precise contrary of the real result to be expected. The idea that war would bring any real prosperity to the country at large is a cruel illusion, even though doubtless some individuals or industrial groups might profit for a time.

If, on the other hand, the United States should adopt the suggestion of certain financial leaders and use money only, not armies, we should find ourselves as a nation merely an appendage to the financial system of London and New York City, there being already bonds, sold and unsold, covering thousands of millions of dollars awaiting indorsement by the Government of the United States.

A member of the Federal Reserve Board is quoted as saying: "As banker and creditor, the United States would have a place at the peace conference table, and be in a much better position to resist any proposed repudiation of debts, for it might as well be remembered that we will be forced to take up the cudgels for any of our citizens owning bonds that might be repudiated." We believe that to make war for the purpose thus expressed would be a betrayal of every noble tradition of American democracy. It would make of the Republic a sort of assistant sheriff for the collection of bad debts of peoples bankrupted by war.

To undertake to protect by force any part of the European war debt involves the protection of the entire debt and tends to encourage war for the extension of loans. It is not or will not be the mere matter of the two and a half billions of loans already made in Europe by American financiers, nor the further billions contemplated for that purpose, but the seventy-five to one hundred billions of which they would be a part, most or all of which would have to be protected, if any of it be protected. Thus the control of the world would be put into the hands of the unseen empire of finance.

REFERENDUM.

We hold:

First. That the vesting in Congress of the sole power to declare war should not in any way be rendered formal or illusory.

Second. That there should be no declaration of the existence of a state of war without a vote of Congress to that effect.

Third. That Congress should neither declare war, nor declare the existence of a state of war, without considering the result of a previous advisory popular referendum.

And now, Mr. Speaker, one last word. We have all heard a great deal during the war about the military junkers who forced this war upon unwilling plain people abroad, and I think we have lost sight of the fact that right here at home we have a worse class. Perhaps the military junkers in Europe had something to do with forcing the people into war, but at least they are brave enough to do some of the fighting themselves. We have our junkers here, and they are doing their best to push our plain people into the war and they will stay far enough from the firing line when the tussle comes, for they are monetary junkers, with the dollar mark on their breast; the munition mongers, the kept editors, the subsidized professors, the whole hireling crew who have been inflaming the minds of the people so that their pockets may bulge still more with the earnings of blood. At their behest we are told that we shall use all of our resources to aid one set of belligerents. In plain words, this country is to indorse the notes of bankrupt nations and assume the bloody debts of nations on the verge of insolvency. And into whose pockets will the plunder go and who will pay the bills? The answer is easy. The Powder Trust, the Armor Plate Trust, the munition makers, and all of the other unscrupulous gang of corporate grafters that have been robbing the people for years now scent possibilities of graft that stagger the imagination. And the same people will pay the bills.

The mechanic, the farmer, the small tradesman, the laborer will do the fighting, do the bleeding and dying, and then pay the bills.

The poor man's wife will bear men children, work in a factory to support them, and then give them to the money junkers to send to slaughter while she keeps on working in the factory to pay the bills.

In the name of the common people of America, I enter my solemn protest. In the name of the mothers of fighting men I insist that the men who call the tune shall pay for the music. I have introduced a resolution which I shall append to my remarks, and if we are to assume the debts of bankrupt nations let those who profit by the malodorous transaction foot the bill. If you are going to conscript the young manhood of America to fight in the trenches beside the minions of foreign kings, then let us conscript the ill-gotten wealth of the war-breeding gunmen of finance and save at least our children and children's children from a burden they do not deserve to bear.

APRIL 4, 1917.

The following estimate was arrived at from figures given in the Financial Chronicle and from statements recently made by Mr. L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware & Hudson Co. and by the National City Bank of New York.

Debts which must have been contracted by Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and their associates in order to finance the purchases of their European customers since the beginning of the war:

Visible merchandise balance in favor of the United States from July 1, 1914, until Feb. 28, 1917		$5,700,000,000
Paid for by—
Net gold imports	$950,000,000
Repurchase of American securities held abroad	1,550,000,000
Buying of foreign issues	2,400,000,000
		4,900,000,000
Leaving still to be settled		800,000,000

three-fourths of which about represent the unpaid for balance of the war business handled through Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and their associates, necessitating private debts of $600,000,000, which the American people are now being asked to assume. In addition, there may be in the hands of Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and their associates considerable amounts of unplaced foreign loans—possibly more than $400,000,000—forcing on them the contraction of still further debts, which it is also now proposed to liquidate with the money of the people.

Should not those who contracted these huge debts—$1,000,000,000 or more—carry their burden rather than the small taxpayer?

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 37) to prevent the possibility of private profit being made out of war.

Resolved, etc., That the following measures be taken to prevent the possibility of private profit being made out of war:

First. A graduated income tax levied by Congress upon all annual incomes above $5,000, which shall amount to conscription of all incomes in excess of $100,000 a year.

Second. Immediate conscription by the Government of all railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and their operation by the Government for public service without private profit.

Third. Immediate conscription by the Government of all natural resources, including mines and oil wells, and their operation under the Bureau of Mines without profit.

Fourth. The Government shall deal with the workers in any conscripted industry through the organizations formed by the workers, with due safeguards for the rights of unorganized workers. This will protect both the Government and the workers.

Fifth. Immediate conscription and operation by the Government of all food-storage warehouses for the service of the American people, and the passing of a law making speculation in food supplies an act of treason under the Articles of War.

Joint Resolution Relating to Federal and State Taxation of Incomes and Inheritances.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK L. GREENE,

OF VERMONT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 3, 1917.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Vermont, relating to Federal and State taxation of incomes and inheritances.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution relating to Federal and State taxation of incomes and inheritances.

Whereas the Federal Government is encroaching more and more upon the sources of revenue heretofore reserved for purposes of State taxation; and

Whereas this encroachmert is felt particularly in the case of income and inheritance taxes, both of which forms of taxes are in danger of being dried up as sources of State revenue; and

Whereas in both these fields of taxation there exists a line which separates the taxable units that equitably and logically may be left solely to State taxation from the units logically belonging to the broader Federal jurisdiction; and

Whereas the establishment of some reasonable line of division, giving to the States sole taxing authority below such line, and to the Federal Government sole taxing authority above such line, would cure much of the trouble existing because of conflict of jurisdiction between States; would relieve the tension between Federal and State governments; would result in great economy in the administration of the tax; and would relieve the growing dissatisfaction on the part of the taxpayer resulting from irritating and expensive duplication of accounts and reports and double taxation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That we respectfully urge action by the Congress of the United States and the legislatures of the several States to the effect that the Federal income and inheritance tax law be amended so that upon acceptance and compliance by the different States, the Federal tax will be withdrawn upon incomes and estates which reasonably and logically should be reserved for purposes of State revenue; and be it further

Resolved, That concerted and uniform action on the part of the States is of such vital importance that we recommend the holding of a congress of the States to consider the subject of Federal encroachment upon State sources of revenue, with the object of adopting and urging upon the Congress of the United States a definite policy in the segregation of State and Federal revenue; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the State be authorized to appoint one or more delegates to represent Vermont at such conference; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forthwith transmitted by the secretary of the senate to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, a copy hereof to each Member of Congress from the State of Vermont, and a copy to the president of the senate and to the speaker of the house of representatives of each of the State legislatures in session at this time.

Resolution Indorsing Universal Obligatory Military and Naval Training.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE F. O'SHAUNESSY,

OF RHODE ISLAND,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island.

The resolution is as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
JANUARY SESSION, A. D. 1917.

Resolution indorsing universal obligatory military and naval training.

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island hereby declares that it is in favor of universal obligatory military and naval training under the directions of the Federal Government; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to send a certified copy of this resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, PROVIDENCE.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved by his excellency the governor on the 28th day of March, in the year 1917.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Rhode Island this 31st day of March, in the year 1917.

Resistance to the War Waged Upon Us by the Imperial German Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to print I herewith incorporate a resolution adopted by the city of Newnan, Ga., in the district I have the honor to represent. I have many similar communications from the district, and all burn with patriotic fervor, while deeply regretting that the German Kaiser has seen proper to make war upon us. I take pride in the fact that not one anti-American nor treasonable communication has reached me from that district. They all recognize the truth and patriotically face the inevitable. They all are as heartily determined in their conviction that this Government should take such steps as will make the Imperial German Government as sorry for having perpetrated aggressions upon us as we are that such aggressions compel us to defend our country and our rights.

The Senate joint resolution contains two essential propositions. One is the statement of an obvious fact—that war exists by the unprovoked aggressions of the Imperial German Government. The other part is the determination to end that state of war as soon as possible. When a man knocks you down and stamps you you do not take time to debate whether or not you will have a fight with him. You either fight or run immediately, if you are able to do either. Under the repeated and barbarous assaults of the Imperial German Government the alternative is presented to us as to whether we shall run or resist. We are able to resist with success and honor. If we tried to run, we would be disgraced and disappear from the face of the earth. The American people agree with our President that we will not choose the path of submission and run.

The only way to end this aggression and end the war is to fight; and if we are to fight, it would be unwise to place any limitations on the methods or extent of our fighting. We must fight so as to end the war and make the Imperial German Government suffer for its aggressions and refrain for all time to come from repeating them. The way to fight, as I understand it, is to fight just as hard as we can and everywhere it is necessary to fight, and that is what we will do. If we can not end their barbarities otherwise, the sons of the wearers of the blue and the gray will repeat the exploits of Gettysburg and Chickamauga and other fields of glory and go through the German lines with bayonets.

We know that in war some must be killed; but American skill and courage will reduce the mortality as much as possible and end the war as quickly as possible by fighting to win.

The cry that the President was elected on the platform that "He kept us out of war" is unfair and misleading. It is true he kept us out of war for two years by the most masterly diplomacy known to mankind, and he would have continued to keep us out of war but for the fact that desperation and barbarity inspired duplicity and made it impossible to carry on diplomacy with the Imperial German Government, a Government whose word is worthless and who, because of deceit and infamy, can not carry on a diplomatic negotiation with us; and the President, after repeated and futile efforts to persuade the Imperial German Government to a course of truth and honor, severed diplomatic relations with that faithless dynasty.

As much as our people regret the existence of the war, it would be foolish and suicidal not to recognize the fact that the Hohenzollern government is now and has been for some time waging ruthless and relentless war upon us. American valor and American skill will make the Hohenzollern rue their barbarous assaults upon our prosperity, peace, safety, and honor.

NEWNAN, GA., April 4, 1917.

Hon. W. C. ADAMSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE: Inclosed you will find copy of resolution passed by the honorable mayor and aldermen of the city of Newnan at their last meeting, held Monday, April 2.

Very respectfully, J. P. SHACKELFORD, City Clerk.

Whereas Congress has been convened in extra session to consider measures of national defense against the unlawful and reprehensible aggressions of the Imperial German Government; and

Whereas the efforts of the United States of America to persuade said Government to respect the rights of the Nation and people of said United States have failed; and

Whereas the rights of the Nation and people of said United States can only be protected and maintained by armed intervention:

Resolved by the mayor and aldermen of the city of Newnan in regular session assembled, That Congress be, and is hereby, urged to take immediate action to protect the rights of the Nation and people of said United States against said aggressions.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Representative in Congress, Hon. WILLIAM C. ADAMSON, a copy be furnished the Newnan Herald, and be spread upon the minutes of this body.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EZEKIEL S. CANDLER, OF MISSISSIPPI,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I submit the following telegram received by me to-day:

COLUMBUS, MISS., April 4, 1917.

Hon. E. S. CANDLER,
Care Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions adopted by the people of Columbus and Lowndes County, in mass meeting assembled, introduced by E. R. Sherman.

Resolved, That we, the citizenry of Columbus and Lowndes County, Miss., in mass meeting assembled, feeling that we have endured the flaunts, aggressions, and murderous attacks of Germany long enough, do proclaim that we whole-heartedly and without reservation indorse the President in his appeal to Congress for a declaration of war; that we urge and demand the Congress to take affirmative and unanimous action on that declaration at once; that we hold inviolate and sacred the honor of our country above every other earthly consideration, excepting along the sanctity of the home; and we herewith severally and collectively pledge ourselves to respond according herewith to our ability to any call that our country in this hour of its need may make; that we urge an active, aggressive, and ceaseless warfare by land and sea, in the air above, and in the waters beneath until the last stronghold of militaristic autocracy shall have been put down and in its stead there be established through all the world, in the words of the immortal Lincoln, "Government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

P. W. MAER, Chairman.

The Daughters of the American Revolution passed resolutions indorsing the President and his course at their meeting in Tupelo, as did the Woodmen of the World at their meeting at Laurel, Miss. I shall vote for the resolution pending and thereby help to send the message to the nations of the world that we will protect our flag, our citizens, our property, and American rights, liberty, and civilization against unlawful assault, insult, and attack.

Resolutions of American Citizens of German Ancestry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES F. REAVIS,
OF NEBRASKA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to have printed the following resolutions, unanimously agreed to at a mass meeting of American citizens of German ancestry, held in the city of Lincoln, Nebr.

It is unnecessary for me to add anything beyond the fact that the tone of these resolutions fully justifies my confidence and my pride in my constituents.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States has heretofore severed diplomatic relations with Germany; and

Whereas there is now grave danger that the United States may become involved in a war with Germany; and

Whereas we, the German-Russians of Lincoln, Nebr., a people of Teutonic blood and of Russian nativity, who migrated to the United States of America and became citizens thereof in order that we may secure liberty for ourselves and our posterity, feel that our allegiance to the United States of America places upon us the duty to aid the Government of the United States in securing to its citizens all that is necessary to make liberty real and genuine: Therefore be it

Resolved by the German-Russians of Lincoln, Nebr., in mass meeting assembled, That we will uphold the President of the United States in any stand that he may take to secure to the citizens of the United States a liberty that is real and genuine; and be it further

Resolved, That in the event that the United States of America becomes involved in a war with Germany we, the German-Russians of Lincoln, Nebr., will faithfully and fully fulfill the allegiance that we owe to the United States of America, and that we will perform such services, either military or otherwise, and give the Government of the United States of America such aid that will secure to the citizens of the United States of America a liberty that is real and genuine.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted at a mass meeting of the German-Russians of Lincoln, Nebr., held at Lebsack's Hall, March 30, 1917.

SPEECH
OF
HON. JOHN R. CONNELLY,
OF KANSAS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in the four years that I have been a Member of this body I have seldom felt it my duty to explain any vote that I have cast here. I shall not do so at this time with the purpose of apologizing for the vote that I shall cast upon this resolution at the close of this debate. I have no apologies to make. I cast the vote with the full knowledge that by some it will be severely criticized and the motives that prompted it will be brought into question. It is for the purpose of giving expression to some of the sentiments that have impelled me to cast this vote, rather than to make apologies, that prompt these remarks. In all the years that have come to me, I have never approached the discharge of a duty with quite the same feeling of weighty responsibiliy as now weighs upon me when the time approaches to cast my vote upon this resolution. This is one of those times that comes to men but seldom, when a diversity of council, honest in its expression, leaves no well-marked path to guide him in his actions. At such times there are always three great monitors to which he may go to direct and guide his way. Those three monitors are his own heart, the welfare of his constituents and country, and the approval of his Maker. I know that I have consulted the guidance of these monitors with an honesty of purpose that has been sincere. I am not unmindful of the wrongs that my country has suffered at the hands of the Government that we are soon to count our national enemy. I am not unmindful of the further fact that our beloved President has been patient and long-suffering. I am not saying that under ordinary circumstances the honor of our country would demand that we take the step that this Congress before its adjournment to-day will take.

I have not been able to believe, however, that the circumstances under which this great provocation has come have been of the ordinary kind. Those nations which have been locked in the deadly grip of a fratricidal war have, in their zeal to win over their enemies, one and all forgotten at times the rights of neutrals and the limits of international law. Germany has been much the worse of these offenders, but all have at times done us wrong.

There is in my heart no rancor for those who believe that the limit of patience has been reached and the time has come to resist with all the force of a nation these wrongs that have been so many and so flagrant. I have no sympathy with those who refuse to accord to others at this trying hour the same measure of patriotism that I claim has guided and directed me. I know others have searched their hearts and have come to another conclusion than the one that I have reached. They have been inspired with high and patriotic motives. I love my country, and when this step is taken I shall take my place beside those whose judgments have led them to a different conclusion than the one that I have reached and help in every way that I can to uphold the hands that will conduct this war and bring it, as I know they will, to a successful conclusion. This vote, however, affords the last chance of men who believe as I do that we could further forbear without the loss of honor to express that belief. When that vote is taken there is but one place for the man who loves his country, and that is by the side of those who will march and fight and die, if need be, for the glory of our flag. I shall take my place there, and with a full faith in the righteous and the ultimate success of our cause, shall do my part to represent a great people who have until this time been divided in opinions but from this hour shall be one in purpose. I have cherished the hope that in some way this Nation, the last great power upon this earth that is to this time at peace with all the world, might have the blessed privilege to minister to the bleeding people of Europe and lead them again into the paths of peace. It may be that He who directs and guides the destinies of men and nations may, in His infinite plans, have another way to bring this about than the one that I had hoped and prayed for. If this is to be, my head and not my heart has been at fault.

Believing as I do that though the wrongs we have already suffered are great the line where honor demands action has almost, if not quite, been reached, I have determined that if in this hour I shall make an error, it shall be on the side of mercy and charity rather than on the side of vengeance. It shall be with the belief that in voting against this resolution I am listening to the voice of Him who centuries ago spoke to a mad and turbulent world and said: "Thou shalt not kill."

War With Germany.

REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE B. FRANCIS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Speaker, I represent a constituency in the Borough of Manhattan, in the city of New York, which is overwhelmingly in favor of peace at the present time. When the roll is called upon this resolution to declare that a state of war now exists between this Nation and Germany I would be in accord with the prevailing wish of my people if I should vote "no."

I shall, however, vote "aye."

My reasons are simple. This Congress is about to pass this resolution for war by an overwhelming majority. My vote against it would in no way affect the result. It would be unavailing as an effective protest. On the contrary, my vote would only be made the basis of an unwarranted assault against the good name of the voters of my district.

My constituency is to a large extent of German descent. I can testify with pride and confidence that they are to a man loyal Americans. I know they will loyally support the decision of this Congress. I trust their patriotism absolutely.

I can not, however, control the hostility of the press against them.

They have been the object of malicious attack for not only months, but years. Their loyalty has been falsely questioned even in high places. If I should vote against this resolution to-day my vote would be seized upon by these maligners as proof positive that my constituents were, through me, attacking the President, seeking to betray America, and to aid the cause of a foreign enemy. Once again would a riot of slander be hurled against these loyal Americans.

I shall vote "aye" on this resolution, confident that my people have known my desire to express their views, confident that they will approve the motives that control my course, and shall await a further and more effective time to renew their plea for peace.

In the meantime we must stand together for the increase of our Army and Navy and for thorough preparedness.

Resolution of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY Z. OSBORNE,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 3, 1917.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a brief resolution from the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce on the subject of the pay of officers and enlisted men of the naval and military service.

The resolution is as follows:

[Telegram.]

Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was adopted by the board of directors of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, who request that you introduce it and have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"Resolved by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, That we urge the President and Congress of the United States to make such a substantial increase in the pay of officers and enlisted men of the naval and military service that the same may be an adequate basis of remuneration, in view of the fact that their labor is entitled to as much consideration in the open market as supplies and munitions of war."

War With Germany.

REMARKS

OF

HON. COURTNEY W. HAMLIN,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, no man will vote for this resolution with a keener sense of its tremendous and far-reaching importance than will I.

These last several days have been sad days for me. I have a horror of war because I love my fellow men, but I know that there come times in the lives of all nations when men must fight not only to maintain their own rights but also the rights of the generations which are to follow.

This Republic, which was baptized in the blood of our patriotic forefathers, is a sacred heritage to us to be handed on down to our children. It came to us honored and respected by all the nations of the world, and it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we are to-night to determine by our votes whether we will pass it on to succeeding generations, with its flag flying proudly to the breezes, or whether we, by our action, shall compel that flag to pass on down drooping in humiliation and disgrace.

Through five wars our flag that stands for freedom, justice, glory, and power has gone through the smoke, grime, and clamor of battle. Ah, many times its folds have been bathed in the blood of its valiant defenders, but, thank God, it has never yet trailed in the dust nor borne the stains of humiliation or cowardice. We are now at the parting of the ways. Germany has thrown down the gage of battle. What shall we do? Shall we take up the gage of battle and unfurl to the breeze the Stars and Stripes and defend our rights like men, or shall we furl that flag and, like the Arabs of old, fold our tents and silently and ignominously steal away?

My vote to-night may send my two boys to the trenches. God knows that I would gladly go for them if I could, but I would be ashamed of them and of myself if they or I should not be willing to make any sacrifice to defend the rights and uphold the honor of this our home, our native land.

Mr. Speaker, for two years and a half I have done everything that I knew to do to keep our country out of that awful conflict in Europe. I have not hesitated to condemn our citizens for traveling on ships belonging to the belligerent nations, and while they have had a technical, legal right to so travel, yet if Germany had confined her submarine activities to the ships of such nations I do not feel that I could have concluded that in doing so she had committed an act of war against us; but, sir, when she brazenly and contemptuously and wickedly declared that she would sink any and all ships, neutral as well as belligerent, without warning or without an effort to save the lives of passengers and crew—that the United States flag would no longer be a protection for our people traveling on our own vessels—in other words, told us in effect to get off the face of the earth, then I refuse to further regard her as a civilized nation and am ready to vote to maintain our rights with all the powers and resources of our mighty Nation.

Mr. Speaker, for several weeks I have been receiving letters and telegrams from constituents asking me not to vote to put this country into war with Germany. My time would not permit me to reply to each with a separate letter, hence I prepared a form letter which I sent in reply, briefly outlining my position in the face of existing conditions. I incorporate a copy of that letter in these remarks, because it states tersely and clearly my position and some of the reasons therefor.

MY DEAR MR. ———: I most heartily join you in the hope that war may yet be averted, even though the way looks dark. No one deplores war more than I do, and I think we must all agree that the record of the President for the last three years has demonstrated that he will go to any length, short of humiliation, rather than to involve his country in war. Some people have criticized him for this, but I most heartily commend him for it, because I feel that war is so horrible that it ought not to be resorted to except in the very last extremity.

There are some things, however, that no self-respecting nation can endure, and some of these things are to have its rights ignored, its privileges treated with contempt, its flag disgraced, and its people humiliated. This will be the result if we submit to Germany's present conduct on the high seas.

Since before the dawn of civilization the seas have been regarded and treated by all the nations as public highways, to be traversed by any people who care to sail them.

I grant you the custom of nations, which has ripened into international law, permits a nation, while engaged in war, to take certain precautionary measures looking to its defense, to wit, such as preventing the shipment to its enemies of contraband of war by neutral nations; and in order to protect itself in that regard international law gives that nation the right of visit, search, and seizure, i. e., it has the right to stop any neutral vessel which it may find sailing the seas, board that vessel, examine its manifest, inspect its cargo, and if it finds that vessel carrying contraband of war to its enemies it may sink that vessel, with its cargo, if it wants to do so, to the bottom of the sea, but it can not do this until it has provided a way to save the lives of the crew and passengers on board that vessel. In other words, the lives of these neutrals can not and must not be ruthlessly and wickedly destroyed. This is not only the law of nations, but it is the law of humanity as well.

We have never denied to Germany or any other nation at war the right of visit, search, and seizure, but, on the contrary, have at all times conceded that right; but we do deny to Germany or any other nation in the world the right to sink our vessels without warning and thereby ruthlessly and wickedly destroy the lives of our citizens. That Germany has been doing this no one can deny; that she has done it deliberately no one can dispute; that she seems disposed to continue to do so is, unfortunately, an established fact.

We have a perfect right to sail our ships upon the high seas; and while we are willing to recognize the abnormal world conditions and endure some inconveniences—and we have suffered many such since this war began—yet I undertake to say that every American citizen who loves his country and who has a drop of red blood in his veins will fight to the last ditch before he will permit his flag insulted, his country humiliated and driven ignominiously from the high seas.

Nations, like individuals, are selfish. They are always seeking to encroach upon the rights of other nations; therefore it is extremely dangerous for a nation to voluntarily concede away a right which it has under the customs and laws of nations. If you concede away a right to-day, it will be used as a precedent against you to-morrow. If you concede away a fundamental right, it will be extremely difficult to maintain others. Therefore experience has taught us that the only safe way to sail the ship of state through the storms of war is to follow the chart of international law. To do otherwise is to invite disaster.

The President has asked Germany—in fact, almost begged Germany—to observe the well-established laws of nations, as well as the rules of civilized warfare, because we desire no quarrel with her. For a hundred years that nation and ours have been friends, and we most ardently desire that that friendship shall continue; but for some reason, not clearly known perhaps, Germany seems by her action to scorn our friendship and in effect to tell us to get off the earth. Naturally no red-blooded American will stand for that.

Whether we will go to war with Germany or not, in my judgment, depends entirely upon Germany.

Very truly, your friend,

———.

This letter, as is obvious, was written some days before the President came before the Congress and recommended that, in view of existing conditions, we declare that a state of war now exists with Germany, but it expressed my views then and nothing has developed since to cause me to change them.

I did not mean to reflect, and I am sure that I did not reflect, upon any person who does not feel that Germany has given us a just cause for war. I am willing to concede that all such persons are patriots; but as between other nations, while our sympathies may be divided, yet as between America and all the other governments of the earth we should stand as one man for our country.

I beg to call attention to the fact that Germany has been for some time making war upon us. How long must we permit her to strike us and how hard must she strike before we will feel justified in striking back? Some pacifists try to justify their opposition to going to war with Germany on the ground, forsooth, that we do not also propose to go to war with Great Britain. They claim that we have an equal cause for war with that country. I am not a partisan of Great Britain any more than I am of Germany. I acknowledge no allegiance to either. I am an American citizen and that is glory enough for me. But I submit that the facts will not justify the statement that Great Britain has given us as much cause to go to war with her as has Germany. True, Great Britain has encroached upon our rights in that she has confiscated some of our property and has interfered with our mails. These are offenses which can well await settlement at some future time. I trust and believe that she will be held to a strict accountability for these violations of our rights; in fact, she has conceded many of our claims and settled for property taken in many cases already. But the outstanding fact is that she has not destroyed the lives of our citizens; at least not by direction of her Government. But we are told that she has mined the North Seas. Yes; a portion of them, but so has Germany; but Great Britain, in obedience to the laws of humanity, notified us that she had mined certain portions of the North Sea, but told us that a way had been left open to our ships through these waters and offered to pilot us through them and guarantee us safe passage. How does that conduct compare with the conduct of Germany? Germany preempts more than 400 miles of the Atlantic Ocean out from the English and the French coasts and all of the Mediterranean Sea, except a strip of about 20 miles wide. These waters teem with the deadly submarine, shooting from ambush, and the only pilotage which Germany offers us is to pilot us to the bottom of the sea and our people into eternity. This, too, without warning and without any attempt to save the lives of either passenger or crew.

More than 200 of our citizens have lost their lives by reason of the deadly activities of the German submarine—not by accident or unintentionally, but deliberately and by the wicked and cruel orders of the German Imperial Government.

I know that some of those who are opposed to going to war try to offset these inexcusable crimes by saying that two of our ships were sunk by English mines in the North Sea and in consequence of which some Americans lost their lives. Even if this were true, it could not in any way lessen or palliate Germany's crime of murder or her studied insult to the sovereignty of our Government. However, it seems to be extremely doubtful whether it was England or Germany who planted the mines in the North Sea which sent the Evelyn and Carib to their destruction. The facts are that at the time this thing happened Germany seemed to think that it was her mines that had destroyed these ships. The following statement made by the German ambassador here at Washington clearly indicates that Germany thought she was responsible for the destruction of these two ships.

Count von Bernstorff, the then ambassador from Germany, wrote a letter to the State Department immediately after these vessels were sunk and said:

Pursuant to instructions, I have the honor to inform your excellency that the American vessels Evelyn and Carib were lost in the North Sea because, contrary to the directions given in the Wachrichten für Seefahrer (Notice to Mariners), No. 2770–14, etc., they ran along the East Friesian Islands by direction, as stated by the captain of the Evelyn, of a British warship.

From this statement each one can draw his own conclusion. I shall not pursue this inquiry further, but content myself by saying, in conclusion, that it is a conceded fact that Germany not only challenges our rights upon the high seas but has demonstrated on numerous occasions her contempt for our sovereiguty, and it is up to us to maintain our rights and the dignity of our country.

I believe an overwhelming majority of our people are patriots and want Congress to take the steps necessary to defend the honor and dignity of our country. Therefore, with a full sense of the responsibility resting upon me as a Representative in Congress, I will cast my vote for this resolution, and as I do so breathe a prayer to the God of nations to be with us to guide and protect us and to give us always the light to see and the courage to do the right.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL C. VAN DYKE,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Speaker, I am for America first, last, and all of the time, and because of that fact for two years I have consistently voted against any measure that would involve us in the present European struggle, with its consequent and horrible result; and still, because of Germany's continued submarine-war policy, I came to Washington thoroughly expecting to give my support to any action which might prevent the continuance of this unwarranted method of warfare. But after listening to the President's address and reading the resolution that has been presented before this body, I found, in the event war is declared, it meant much more than simply suppressing the submarine warfare, which I consider our cause of action against Germany.

I do not believe our cause of action against the Imperial Government is the same as that of the allies. Consequently I am not of the opinion that we should go to the extent of sending troops into the already blood-soaked battle fields of Europe, but rather to place ourselves in such a position that, when we have vindicated our stand in so far as the submarine warfare is concerned, we would then be able to withdraw from the European war.

At the present time I am opposed to conscription. I am opposed to compulsory military service, for it has been the military class in Germany to-day who are to blame for the condition they find themselves in at the present time. Then why should we, in the name of democracy, create that same class in this country by compulsory military service? For it is that which has been responsible for what we are pleased to term "Prussian autocracy."

If the cause is just when this country calls for volunteers, they will respond in numbers sufficiently large to fight our battles; but I can not convince myself that the time has come when we should throw our young men into the European struggle either on one side or the other, and that is what this declaration of war means. It means, unless something happens within a short time to prevent, that after the expiration of six months we will be called upon to face the horrible reality that 500,000 of our young men will either be in the European trenches or on the way there, and God alone knows how many more will be called into the service as time goes on.

My forefathers have fought in every war this country has seen, and I at the age of 17 volunteered my services to my country during the Spanish-American War. I have weighed this question carefully from every viewpoint, not as a partisan but as a representative of the people of this country. The Constitution of the United States invests in Congress the power to declare war, and I have been called upon to decide what is best for my country, and after having reviewed carefully all of the conditions which present themselves to us for our consideration I have come to the conclusion in the final analysis that inasmuch as it is my bounden duty to vote my conscientious belief in the matter I am forced to vote against this resolution.

But, as I stated in the beginning, I am for America first, last, and all of the time, and, although as a Congressman representing my people to the best of my ability it is my duty to oppose this measure, nevertheless, if war is declared, it is my duty to vote for such expenditures and other measures which I deem necessary to bring this war to a successful end. My only wish is that this may be accomplished before it is necessary to send any of our young men to the European battle fields.

As I have stated, Mr. Speaker, I came to Washington expecting to give my support to such action as might be deemed necessary to prevent the continuance of unwarranted submarine warfare. But the resolution on which we are asked to vote, and the meaning of our action as interpreted in the message of the President and in the arguments of Members favoring its adoption, presages a program of war far beyond the scope of submarine policy. It means to carry the war beyond and across the high seas where submarines ply. It means not a war for defense of our coast and commerce but a war of aggression in Europe. It means a kind of war in which the American Nation never hitherto has been engaged—a war in European trenches, for the invasion of European soil, and a war in which two-thirds of Europe has already been engaged for nearly three years. It means not only entanglement in the quarrels of Europe but participation in the greatest belligerent partnership of history. We are to wage war not merely for American rights on the sea but for British interests, French interests, and Russian interests on land in European battle fields.

The wide scope of the grant of power made in this war resolution shows that there is no limitation as to either purpose or field of action. The resolution provides:

> That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial German Government; and, to bring the conflict to a successful termination, all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

This is not war upon submarine practice or any other sea policy, but a grant of all the military, naval, and other forces and resources of the United States to wage unlimited conflict with the Government of Germany.

The methods by which this is to be accomplished are outlined in the President's message. We are told:

> It will involve the utmost practicable cooperation in counsel and action with the Governments now at war with Germany; and, as incident to that, the extension to those Governments of the most liberal financial credits in order that our resources may as far as possible be added to theirs.

Furthermore:

> It will involve the organization and mobilization of all the material resources of the country to supply the materials of war.

Moreover, in addition to a full equipment of the Navy, which might suffice so far as enforcing our rights on the high seas is concerned, and so far as directly relates to our position in regard to submarine policy, we are told:

> It will involve the immediate addition to the armed forces of the United States already provided for by law in case of war at least 500,000 men, who should, in my judgment, be chosen upon the principle of universal liability to service, and also the authorization of subsequent additional increments of equal force so soon as they may be needed and can be handled in training.

That is to say, successive increments of 500,000 each, as soon as they can be trained, are to be transported to the battle fields of Europe to be placed in utmost practicable cooperation with the Governments now at war with Germany.

We are likewise reminded that:

> In carrying out the measures by which these things are to be accomplished we must keep constantly in mind the wisdom of interfering as little as possible in our own preparation and in the equipment of our own military forces with the duty—for it will be a very practical duty—of supplying the nations already at war with Germany with the materials which they can obtain only from us or by our assistance. They are in the field and we should help them in every way to be effective there.

We are told, moreover:

> That the Prussian autocracy was not and could never be our friend.

Likewise:

> That in the presence of its organized power, always lying in wait to accomplish we know not what purpose, there can be no assured security for the democratic governments of the world. We are now about to accept gage of battle with this natural foe of liberty, and shall, if necessary, spend the whole force of the Nation to check and nullify its pretensions and its power.

This war declaration, therefore, commits us to the vast undertaking of enlisting all the forces and resources of the United States in a conflict for the destruction of the German Empire. It is to be a war not on sea only but on land; not for the defense of our coast and commerce but of European invasion; not of independent American action in defense of American rights but of utmost practicable cooperation with the Governments already at war with Germany.

For this program, Mr. Speaker, I was not prepared when I came to Washington, and I doubt if many Members of this House were thus prepared. No program of this scope has ever been involved in the diplomatic notes of the past three years.

No instruction has ever come to us in regard to a program of this scope and character from the American people who in November voted by nearly 600,000 plurality for the success of the national policy which had kept us out of war. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, no charge of lack of patriotism or of loyalty to the American people or the administration can be laid at the door of those Representatives who, following the precepts of Washington and Jefferson to avoid entangling European alliances, and following the more recent precepts of the President to seek peace without victory, rise on this floor and state that they can not conscientiously in the interests of American peace and democracy and for the welfare of American homes and youth and in the light of American traditions, as the world's beacon torch of peace and liberty, subscribe to the war declaration now before this House.

No Member can truthfully be charged with unpatriotism who is true to American traditions, true to the American Constitution, and true to the American people.

I assume, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will pass, and that in the early hours of Good Friday, the anniversary of the crucifixion of the Prince of Peace, this country will pass from the position of the world's greatest peace nation to that of the world's greatest war nation, with 112,000,000 people committed by our hand to a campaign of international conflict, and with $3,000,000,000 as the first item of debt and taxation incident to the war budget.

Of the eight so-called "great powers" of the earth, we yesterday were the only power standing for world peace; to-morrow we join the greatest combination of belligerent powers ever assembled on God's footstool.

We become the fifteenth nation to enter this whirlpool of war, lust, and devastation, and the eleventh nation entering the fight against Germany; and by both precept and example we now urge the rest of "Christendom," so called, to place peace, liberty, and the blood of our sons on the altar of Mars.

The die is cast, Mr. Speaker, and as loyal Americans, true to our national cause, we are all committed to the declaration which the majority of this House decrees. Opposed as I am to this declaration, its adoption carries with it my support of the Government and of the Army and Navy summoned to the colors. War once declared, it must be brought to a successful issue. My forefathers fought in the Wars of the Revolution, of 1812, and the Civil War, and I was a volunteer of the Spanish-American War, and, opposed as I am to the step about to be taken this day, I feel it none the less my duty to do all in my humble power to insure the success of our national arms that shall hasten the day of returning peace.

This does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that I shall support every measure which the champions of the war spirit may offer in carrying on this war on European soil. I do not favor universal military training or conscription, and I do not favor the extension of war measures beyond the traditional American scope of defending the rights and liberties of the American people. I do not favor sending our sons into that slaughterhouse, known as Europe, to fight the battles of, for, and by Europe. First, last, and all the time American, I am opposed first, last and all the time to making this country and its battles European. I am for the Stars and Stripes only and not for any flag floating over European battalions; and I trust that our sons may never be forced by the hand of our Government to fight under a European battle flag.

There never, Mr. Speaker, has been a war in this country since the days of 1776 when a just cause did not command the gallant support of American volunteers and carry that cause to victory. A just cause carried us to victory at the hands of volunteers when we were a Nation of only 3,000,000 strong, and again when we were 8,000,000, when we were 30,000,000, and when we were 70,000,000.

Shall it be said that in 1917, with an estimated population of 112,000,000—the greatest nation in the world in educated and trained population, in wealth, in commerce, and industrial power—that we engaged in a war which could not command sufficient support from volunteers to insure victory? Is that the confession which we now make in the hour of declaring this war? Is that the confession with which we propose to justify this cause? Where are the patriots who command the support of the vast majority of this House if we are unable to man this war without conscription? Are we lacking in patriots or is the trouble with our cause? With our vastly increased population are there fewer true Americans, or do true Americans object to enlistment in the cause of Europe? Whichever horn of the dilemma we accept this much all must admit, namely, that it is the business of Congress as the constitutional authority to declare war and furnish the means and make the regulations for the conduct of war, to see to it that the cause, the scope, the purpose, the character, and the conduct of this war are such that it shall command the maximum and not the minimum support of the American people. And if the cause and conduct of this war are just and worthy of a free and peace-loving people, why resort to the European war policy—the methods of "Prussian autocracy," if you please—of universal military service and conscription? Are not the methods of Washington, Madison, Polk, Lincoln, and McKinley—the methods of the traditional American volunteer system concerning which our historians have written and our poets sung—appropriate to the war in which we are about to engage?

I am one with those who believe that the militarism of European monarchs—the methods, for example, of so-called Prussian autocracy—is against the principles of American democracy. But what is the foundation of European militarism, of which Prussian autocracy is a type? It is universal military training. It is the power of the military authority to call from the schools and universities, from the farms and all other places of industry, the flower of the youth of the land, to take from them their democratic individuality and convert them into an efficient war machine subject to the orders of the military power.

We say that "Prussian autocracy is the foe of liberty." It is the foe of liberty because it takes freedom from the freeman and makes of him a military automatom. It is the foe of liberty because conscription and universal military training convert a Nation of self-governing citizens into a military class, controlled by military regulations and imbued with military ambitions. It is because I believe that Prussian autocracy is the foe of liberty that I oppose the adoption of the underlying methods of Prussian autocracy—conscription and universal military training—in place of the American system of the free public school, the free ballot, and the free volunteer. The substitution of force for the free will of the citizen volunteer is the essence of the difference between European militarism and American democracy, and I am one Member of Congress who has not lost faith in the principles of the fathers and the ways of American democracy.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that in voting "No" on this resolution, we of the minority on this measure are subjecting ourselves to that wave of denunciation which ever overwhelms the defenders of peace and the employment of rational deliberation in the first hours of a country's madness. A rabid and noisy few inflamed by the scare-heads and denunciatory cartoons and editorials of an irresponsible and sensation-seeking press have no use for reason and deliberation in the hour when a war resolution is offered. It is the way of countries in such a time to declare war first and deliberate afterward.

Congress is the body created by the Constitution and granted the war-making power, and Congress is supposed to be a deliberative body. Congress is supposed to ascertain the facts and causes involved, to consider both methods and results, and furnish the ways and means. It was certainly never supposed by the makers of the Constitution of the United States that the acts of the Congress which represents the will and the interests of 100,000,000 sovereign people should be subjected to the intimidation of the "Jingo Press." The House and Senate were not constituted as automatoms to carry out the wild notions of newspaper cartoonists and scare-head writers. Nor is the legislation of Capitol Hill supposed to reflect the interests of the army of contractors, munition makers, and ambitious militarists who seek military honors and emoluments through the sacrifice of the lives of the Nation's young men in the ranks. We are supposed, I repeat, to be a deliberative body; but because we take the few hours of a single day's session to deliberate on the most momentous issue which has confronted our national existence, Senators and Representatives are cartooned and denounced by a jingoistic metropolitan press as if the legislators who are responsible to 100,000,000 people for the destiny of the Nation in this international crisis were traitors to the Constitution which make the exercise of reason and freedom of speech in debate their official duty.

This war fever, Mr. Speaker, will pass. It will pass when the successive increments of 500,000 of our young men are being sent to Europe—if they are so sent, as I hope may never occur—and it will pass when the lives of these young men pass from earth never to return. It will gradually pass as war debts and war taxes mount higher, and some of those who are now the most powerful instigators of war will be early in the clamor to stop the war in order to stop the career of the Federal tax-gatherer.

The condition which I most greatly fear is that which shall follow the war. After conscription and universal military training has converted the army of industry into an army of war, after the young men have been drawn from the arts of peace and industry into the arts of that which Gen. Sherman typified as "hell," after the spirit of democracy has been superseded by the spirit of militarism, after European ideas and methods have succeeded American ideas and methods on American soil—what then? I trust that no such conditions may develop. I trust that this war may be brought to successful issue before such conditions shall have time to materialize. But if this danger is to be averted, if American democracy is to survive the threatened substitution of European ideas and methods, it is because there is a saving remnant in this Republic, it is because there is a vast sovereign people who hate and distrust the autocratic system from which in the Old World they departed when they sought the asylum of freedom under American ideas and system in the New. It is because, moreover, there are both in this Capitol and in the districts back home a saving remnant of patriotism and faith in American principles that can not be stampeded in the first hours of war madness to the adoption of the autocratic measures that are at this hour reaping their logical harvest in the downfall of Old World institutions.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as I said in opening I say in closing, that I am opposed to this declaration because I am for America first, last, and all the time and because I have not lost faith in American traditions, the American Constitution, and the American people. Furthermore, I trust that when European entente nations are satiated and exhausted with this war, and when those who in the first instance we look upon as allies settle their grievances and have secured peace with Germany we shall not be left alone "holding the bag" with a war to the finish on our hands against the greatest military power in Europe, coupled with dangers from the Mexican south and the oriental west. In short, I trust that the results that may logically flow from our action this day may never occur and that by wisdom and moderation we may avert the dangers which now threaten the Nation, which yesterday was the world's great champion of liberty and peace.

Resolutions of the Mountain City Lodge, No. 48, Knights of Pythias, Fairmont, W. Va.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. M. M. NEELY,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a resolution adopted by the Mountain City Lodge, No. 48, Knights of Pythias, of Fairmont, W. Va.

The resolution is as follows:

MOUNTAIN CITY LODGE, No. 48,
KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS,
Fairmont, W. Va., March 30, 1917.

Hon. MANSFIELD M. NEELY,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: At a stated convention of Mountain City Lodge, No. 48, Knights of Pythias, Fairmont, W. Va., Thursday evening, March 29, 1917, the inclosed resolution was unanimously adopted by standing vote:

"This lodge, with a membership of 515 men, feels that it is its duty to apprise the President and the Government of our country that it is willing to aid in every way and in whatsoever place its aid may be needed."

With best regards to yourself, and trusting that whatever problem may arise shall be met by you and your colleagues with an unbroken front and with an unflinching determination to surmount it, I am,

Fraternally,

R. C. MILLER,
Keeper of Records and Seal.

Whereas grave problems of international scope are confronting the United States of America; and
Whereas the President of the United States and the Congress are called upon to decide these problems; and
Whereas we hold that it is the sacred trust and privilege of the United States of America to uphold the rights of man and of humanity; and
Whereas the Order of Knights of Pythias has ever been attached to the principles of liberty and devoted to a teaching of love of our country; and
Whereas in this critical moment in the Nation's life there should be no partisan feeling, no bias, no politics, and no division: Therefore be it

Resolved by Mountain City Lodge, No. 48, Knights of Pythias, of Fairmont, W. Va., in stated convention assembled this 29th day of March, 1917—

First. That we pledge anew our devotion to our country.

Second. That we commend the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, the President of the United States, in his declaration of American rights and the rights of humanity; that we pledge our support in the upholding of his hands.

Third. That we commend our distinguished brother knight, the Hon. MANSFIELD M. NEELY, Representative in Congress from the first congressional district of the State of West Virginia, in taking his stand in support of the President.

Fourth. That we call upon all American citizens to display the American flag and to make known in no uncertain manner their attachment to this Government and cooperate in every way to have us stand a united people in spirit and in truth, confident of our leaders, and sure that, whatever may transpire, this Government and its cherished ideals will prevail.

I hereby certify that at a stated convention of Mountain City Lodge, No. 48, Knights of Pythias, Fairmont, W. Va., the above resolution was presented and unanimously adopted by standing vote.

Witness my hand and the seal of the lodge this 29th day of March, 1917.

[SEAL.] R. C. MILLER,
Keeper of Records and Seal.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN A. ELSTON,
OF CALIFORNIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, with a full sense of the gravity of my act, I have concluded to vote for the resolution before the House. The sequence of events in our dealings with Germany during the last two years compels this conclusion. It is the logical and inevitable answer to the wrongs we have endured.

The President has exhausted all peaceful means of settlement. He has patiently borne the abuse of those who believed that the time for action had long since come.

We must further submit and thereby forfeit our national self-respect and our spiritual leadership among the nations or we must stand and fight. There is only one course for a brave people to pursue. We must follow the ideals and traditions of the fathers of our Republic, and stand for justice and humanity.

We seek no material gain or selfish end. We are contending for spiritual principles that must and will prevail if Christian civilization is to endure on the earth.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LINDLEY H. HADLEY,
OF WASHINGTON,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, no one prizes the blessings of peace or regrets the necessity for war more than I. Our Government has not acted hastily. Diplomacy has been exhausted. The wrongs referred to in the resolution have been patiently endured. While cherishing and promoting peace, war has been made upon us. Those who make it have prescribed a zone across the common highways of nations and inaugurated therein a reign of terror in defiance of the laws of nations. They have destroyed our ships in the pathways of commerce and the lives of American citizens while engaged in peaceable and lawful pursuits, all without notice or warning. Our citizens have been driven from sinking vessels and abandoned to their fate upon the angry billows of the sea. American rights have been invaded and defied. Aggression has been confined to the sea, but intrigue has not stopped with our shores. The President has submitted the facts in his message to Congress. I refer to its recitals. He has asked for the authority which this resolution provides. Momentous as the issue is, far-reaching as it is in its import and consequences, as comprehended by the resolution, it is very plain and simple. The essence of the question is whether upon the facts detailed by the President and upon his recommendation Congress shall authorize him to protect the lives and maintain the rights of American citizens by prosecuting war against those who wage war upon us. The alternative is that of abandonment and surrender—that of humiliation and dishonor. Its adoption would be as unjust as, it seems to me, it would be un-American. The primary function of this Government is to preserve and maintain American rights inviolate and to protect and defend the lives of our citizens.

I regard it my duty to aid in setting in motion the forces which will insure the fullest exercise of that function. The first guarantee of national existence is national unity. The question is not local, not provincial. It is national. Whether we hail from the East or the West, from the North or the South, or whether from the great interior, our interests here involved are one and indivisible.

Deeply sensible as I am of the gravity of the action involved and the great responsibility attaching thereto, under all the circumstances and conditions confronting our Government and our country, I shall cast my vote for the resolution.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. GRAHAM,
OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I would not, on account of the brief duration of my service in this body, presume to present my views on the pending resolution to the House. However, the gravity of the occasion and the momentous nature of the business in which we are now engaged afford me sufficient justification, if any be needed, to record herein briefly my conclusions on this subject. In my consideration of the question involved in this resolution I have endeavored, in so far as I can, to divest my mind of the personal element and view it from the standpoint of my duty as a good citizen. The obligations that rest upon all of us here and now are not those of kindred or party, but those of fealty to country. I have in the past been a partisan in the exhibition of my political faith; I have criticized wherever I could and whenever I might the party now in charge of the governmental affairs of this country and its policies. I reserve the right to do so again, at a proper time and in a proper season. But to-day, Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of this question we know no parties. There can be no path here for our feet to follow but the path of duty to our beloved country; there can be no guide for us, the representatives of this great, God-conceived people of ours, but the polar star of everlasting justice and right. Nor may we stop to consider our own personal fortunes. Whether you and I shall continue here is of small moment. Men have come here and men have gone, but the Republic of our fathers, the institutions which these colleagues of ours who have gone over the great divide loved and served have gone on and on, and, please God, shall continue yet through centuries to come. We should rather consider this great people of which we are a part; we should rather have in mind 100,000,000 people throughout the cities and broad lands of our Republic as they wait for our decision. The joys and hopes, the material welfare, and the future of our people are in our keeping.

It is admitted by all that war should never be entered upon by any people except as a final extremity. No nation is justified in engaging in war unless there remains no other method of obtaining or preserving its rights and sovereign attributes. When reason has failed, when treaties have failed, when diplomacy has failed, then is war the final resort. When no appeal to the mentality of men will be effective there is but one thing left, and that is physical force. War is all that anyone has ever called it and more. It brutalizes and debases. It lights the fires of passion and bestiality. It kills and burns and ravishes and destroys.

I know I voice the sentiments of all of us when I say we do not want war. If we go to war, we shall do so only because we must. In the glorious past of this Nation we have at times taken up the sword and appealed to the god of battles. But whenever we did it we did it reluctantly and because there was no other way. And so to-day, if we must once more lay our bleeding sacrifices upon the altar of patriotism, we shall do it because reason has ceased to secure us our rights as a sovereign people.

The first question I have considered is whether any sufficient cause for war between this Government and the Imperial Government of Germany now exists. In other words, is any essential right of our people now invaded by Germany? It is entirely unnecessary for me to attempt to detail the course of the submarine policy of Germany as to merchant ships; the President of the United States has fully dealt with that subject in his special message to this Congress. It is admitted by all, including the Imperial Government of Germany, that the German submarine policy has been in violation of the spirit of The Hague conventions, subscribed to and in part proposed by Germany, in violation of all the known rules of international law, and in admitted violation of treaties heretofore existing between this Government and the German Government.

If we were, by our submission to this inhuman and illegal terrorism of the seas, deprived only of our profits which we might make by commercial ventures, I would say that we might avoid the contest. But by refusing to maintain our Government and its Chief Executive we lower our national dignity; we cease to occupy a position of any influence in the affairs of the world. But beyond all this, we weaken and deaden the moral sensibilities of our people; we make of ourselves a people with no national coherence and unity of purpose. Mr. Speaker, we can not afford to follow the paths of peace at the expense of national honor.

By these admittedly unlawful acts American lives were taken and American property destroyed. Not the slightest consideration has been given to saving innocent human life, but the admitted object has been to so terrify mankind that the high seas shall be as a place accursed and avoided by all neutral peoples. It has been said that the submarine can not comply with the rules of humanity because of its very nature. Then I say it is not a weapon of civilized warfare, and it is a terror that should not be countenanced. Not even the savage in his forest fastnesses will deny to his foe the right to yield and save his life.

We have been told by our President that spies have been quartered among us, and conspiracies formed to destroy lives and property and neutral nations inflamed against us by the agents of the German Government. This is fully admitted by this same Government. When we complain about these things, we are told that the same course of conduct will be continued. We have appealed to reason. Our Government has time and again employed the arts of diplomacy, but without avail. Our Chief Executive has warned the Imperial Government that a further continuance would mean a break in our relations. The acts continued and the break came. Since the discontinuance of the diplomatic relations conditions have steadily grown worse. In this emergency the President of the United States has come to us, and, after detailing the facts, has solemnly stated that, in his judgment, the safety of our people demands a declaration of war. The resolution asked by the President has been duly introduced, and we have but one alternative—to adopt his suggestion or reject it by our votes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not purpose now to question the judgment of the President of the United States in the conclusion he has come to. I do not know whether he has done all he could do; I do not know whether there is any other way. But I do know that the sovereign voice of the people has placed him in leadership in our Nation; I do know that he is the Chief Executive of this Government; I do know that he represents in his office the humanity and justice and nobility and dignity of the country; and by my vote and influence I propose to do what I can to hold up his hands and preserve the dignity of the Nation.

Let us presume for a moment that this resolution be defeated by our votes. This will be a repudiation of the principles announced by our Government, and will be a tacit recognition by the American Congress of the justice of the German claim of right. It will close the sea absolutely to American and all other neutral shipping. It will establish a precedent that in all other like cases we must leave the high seas. It will condone the deaths of the slaughtered innocents of the Lusitania. It will close our ears to the death cries of our people and our eyes to the dishonored flag of our Nation. It will be, Mr. Speaker, a relinquishment of rights we have, rights that came to us through the perils and battles of our fathers, dearly prized rights of a free people. And who can doubt if thus, by basely deserting our people and yielding our national privileges now, we temporarily escape the perils of war, that some time, somewhere, we shall tread the fiery trail of war to regain what we have lost. We may temporize and compromise and delay, but the time will come when the price will be paid; when again will be realized the vision of that mighty singer when, seeing the catastrophe of civil war sweeping down upon this people, she said:

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord;
He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fateful lightning of His terrible, swift sword;
His truth is marching on.

When this crisis first became acute it was suggested by the President, as I understand it, that it would suffice to arm merchant ships and let them defend themselves. The proposition was neither wise nor advisable. If wrongs were being committed against our people and merchant shipping, they were wrongs against our people collectively and not individually. It would not suffice to say to a master or owner of a merchant ship to defend himself, but if he was entitled to defense it should be by the Government and its agencies. If organized thugs are operating in a portion of a city and the peaceable citizen complains, the mayor does not arm the citizen and leave him to his own defense, but the police power of the city is used to enforce the laws and keep the peace. And so it is with nations. If some reckless freebooter is abroad on the high seas, striking whom he may and when he can, it is not the business of the individual mariner, but the business of the Government to keep the peace.

We have all of us, Mr. Speaker, dreamed of the dawn of universal peace and have most earnestly prayed that it might come. The President in his message has strongly outlined the conflict between autocracy and democracy in the world to-day. Universal peace and arbitration will never come while kings and monarchs direct the affairs of nations. But when they who make the war are they who must do the fighting, then wars will soon give way to the glad rule of universal arbitration. God speed the day! If this mighty world cataclysm of to-day, if this welter of blood and treasure and tears is the last stand of autocracy, then, in spite of the anguish of stricken peoples, in spite of the torment of the world, these millions have not died in vain. And shall we, the champions of human liberty, not raise our voice and hand to assist in the agony of the birth of a new and better national life for all the world and all its peoples?

I have heard it argued in both Chambers of this Congress that Great Britain has also violated our rights on the high seas and has, with impunity, committed acts in derogation of international law. The claim is also made that had it not been for the aggression of England the submarine policy of Germany would not have been entered upon. All this may be true. I am not here to place the blame for this calamitous war. Nor am I here to pass upon the question whether we should have two enemies instead of one and levy war upon England and Germany both. Do those who argue that England was to blame or has violated our rights also argue that we should declare war upon Great Britain? The Chief Executive of the Nation has advised us that national welfare now requires a declaration of war against Germany. It is patent that such a cause of war exists. Therefore the fact that cause of grievance against, and perhaps of war with, another nation exists affords no reason for our stultification of ourselves in our attitude toward Germany. It has been said that this war is being engineered and brought upon us by the makers of munitions. If this be true, the President of the United States is a party to the hellish conspiracy. I will not concede that there can be the slightest modicum of truth in this statement. I would rather believe, and purpose to believe, that the President of my country is true to the traditions of American history and, animated by love of his country, is doing what he deems to be his patriotic duty. I do not propose to dishonor my country and its institutions, even in my own thoughts, by indulging in any other presumption.

I trust I have reached just and correct conclusions in this matter. I am not unmindful of all the horror and injustice and brutality of war. Almost within sight of where I stand to-day my father, over half a century ago, received his first wound in the service of his country. My early recollections are of the tales of the terror and suffering of that mighty conflict. I have no misapprehension of the trials in store for us as a people. Do you think I do not know what it means to all of us? I live in a little country town in the bosom of the valley of the Mississippi. There we live as little rural communities do; we know each other's business; we meet in stores and on the streets and the affairs of our lives are an open book to us; we share each other's joys; we bear each other's burdens. In that community, among my neighbors and friends, I have passed my life. About me are my schoolmates and neighbors, and when they married and there came to them a little fellow to rejoice them, I laughed with them. And now these boys are going out to take their part in the thing I am going to help create. The other morning the little military company of which we were so proud marched away, and as they went they were smiling, and waving and tossing in the air before them was a bright new flag that with loving hands our people gave them. Some of these boys, if this hellish thing comes to pass, will not come back, and by the hearthstones of my friends there will be vacant places, and the mothers of my little community will look at me with reproachful eyes. I would rather—in the sight of God I say it—bare my own breast to the bullets of the enemy than have these boys go by my volition. But I have searched my conscience, and I can see no other honorable way. And so, with an unfaltering confidence in the sincerity of our purpose and with a supreme faith in our national rectitude, I renew my pledge of fealty to my country and shall vote for this resolution.

Resolutions Passed by the Patriotic Alliance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. ROSE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a copy of resolutions unanimously passed by the Patriotic Alliance of Altoona, Pa., of the 4th instant.

The resolutions are as follows:

ALTOONA, PA., April 5, 1917.

Hon. JOHN M. ROSE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inclose copy of resolutions unanimously passed by the Patriotic Alliance of this city on the 4th instant.

Respectfully,

ELLIS B. ROHRBACK,
Chairman of Committee.

ALTOONA, PA., April 4, 1917.

Inasmuch as repeated insults have been committed against the United States of American by Mexico and Germany, by the ruthless murder of American citizens and the sinking of ships carrying cargoes of American products and American citizens and floating the American flag, thus interfering with our rights on the high seas; and inasmuch as the American people have been extremely patient and President Woodrow Wilson has exhausted all honorable means to avoid war and has offered the assistance of the American Government to bring about peace, both in Mexico and in Europe, and is yet willing to participate in any feasible plan looking to the establishment of a world peace, with apparently no support from other nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this meeting of representative patriotic American citizens regrets that a few business and professional men, citizens of our city, at a recent meeting saw fit to advocate a policy which to our minds is untimely, misleading, un-American, and unpatriotic, and if adopted by our Government would prolong the destruction of American citizens and American commerce indefinitely; be it further

Resolved, That this assembly, representing business, professional, and laboring men, does most heartily commend the instructors in the public schools of our city in signing and forwarding resolutions of support to the President of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That we do most heartily approve the stand taken by the President of the United States for peace in the past and pledge him our support in whatever course or policy he may now see fit to advocate, looking to the protection of American rights on the high seas, and if necessary, to use the armed forces of this Nation to compel respect for the American Nation and her flag; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be furnished the President of the United States, the Senators from Pennsylvania, the Congressman from this district, and the daily press of the city.

PATRIOTIC ALLIANCE.

Conscript Property For War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, we are at war! It was recommended by the President in his war message that the costs of the war should be sustained "so far as they can be equitably sustained by the present generation, by well-conceived taxation." That is right. We should pay as we go if the where-with-all with which to pay can be found within the boundaries of our country.

There are two very important essentials of war—men and money. We have the men. If they do not volunteer in sufficient numbers the Government will resort to conscription. There will be no waiting on the next generation to furnish the men to fight this war. We also have the money to pay for this war as it progresses. Why should not money volunteer as well as men? And if money does not volunteer in sufficient quantity, why not conscript money to keep up a well-filled Treasury as well as men to keep the ranks filled up? If the Nation has the right to take the lives of common men, it also has the right to take the dollars of the rich in time of war.

HENRY CLEWS V. HENRY FORD.

There are two very different attitudes held by mean of wealth toward war. I can best illustrate those views by calling attention to two interviews which appeared in the newspapers immediately after our diplomatic break with Germany.

In the evening issue of the Washington Times on February 3, 1917, there appeared an article, headed: "New York Market Booms Following Break." Describing the scene in Wall Street, the article says:

American flags appeared in the street soon after the news of the break with Germany spread, and brokers jumped upon chairs in their offices and made speeches to their customers, advising all to cover their short sales. Henry Clews, octogenarian member of the stock exchange, was one of the speech makers. "I advise everybody in this house to cover," he said, "The United States is entering a period of tremendous prosperity. I have been through the Civil War myself, and I believe the United States is unbeatable."

Observe! The stock market became a booming war market. Our country was about to become involved in the great world war. What did that signify to this old stock broker, Henry Clews? "The United States is entering a period of tremendous prosperity." The diplomatic break to be followed by war did not suggest thoughts of woes, heartaches, sorrow, hunger, famine, bloodshed, or disastrous world alliances to this Wall Street banker of many winters. War spells to him and his kind "tremendous prosperity."

Three days later Henry Ford, the Detroit automobile manufacturer, gave out an interview, in which he said:

I stand with the President, and in the event of war will place our factory at the disposal of the United States Government and will operate without one cent of profit. I will also contribute my own time and work harder than ever before. I can not believe that war will come, but if it does then it is the duty of every man to help all he can and not make money out of the distress of his country. I am ready to do my share.

Those are wonderful sentiments expressed by one of our great captains of industry. He sets an example to wealth for the exhibition of real patriotism. And why should not wealth do in times of war all that Henry Ford offers to do? Heretofore in time of war the men of the nations volunteered or were conscripted with their lives, while most of the so-called men of wealth remained securely and comfortably at home and enriched themselves out of the misfortunes of their fellow men. If the one gives his life and all hope of gain for the good of the Nation, why should not the other give his property and also his life for the good of the Nation?

Certainly the one who offers his life does not offer less than the one who offers his property. Surely human life and human rights are more sacred even in time of war than property and property rights. In time of war we conscript men for the defense of the colors with their lives without hope of financial rewards. Why should we not also conscript property of bankers, manufacturers, common carriers, and so forth, for the defense of the colors without hope of financial rewards? There is but one answer, except to those who contend and hold that property rights are more sacred than human rights.

Henry Ford gave the business world a new idea of patriotism in time of war when he said, "It is the duty of every man to help all he can and not make money out of the distress of his country."

I wonder whether such a thought ever occurred to any Wall Street stock broker.

Gen. Leonard Wood recently said, "Nine out of ten wars are based on trade." If Ford's principle was to be adopted by the business world or forced upon it—and why not—two results would naturally follow: First, at least some of the nine out of ten wars that Gen. Wood says are based on trade would cease; second, wars would be paid for as they occurred, thus relieving future generations from the burdens of paying for wars with which they had nothing to do, for which they were not responsible, and from which, with some exceptions, they derived little or no benefits.

During the last year Congress passed laws for commandeering the industries of the country in time of war or when war is imminent. That is as it should be. At such times every dollar's worth of property as well as every life should be at the disposal of and under the command of the Government. Since the diplomatic break with Germany many industries have offered their services to the Government on such terms as the Government might determine just and fair, but undoubtedly with a feeling of expectancy and hope that Uncle Sam would be not only fair but liberal as well. But up to date Henry Ford is one of very few who has volunteered his industry without profit and his fortune without interest to the service of the Government during the period that his country should be at war. Such an example is worthy of the emulation of every man with property who loves his country more than the profits he can make out of the distress of his country and the woes of mankind.

"PAY-AS-YOU-ENTER WAR."

Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a plan to raise war funds, which has recently been extensively advertised by the American Committee on War Finance, a voluntary committee with headquarters in New York. This committee especially advocates and urges that this war against Germany be made a cash war, a "pay-as-you-enter war," and already considerable public sentiment has been aroused in support thereof. The pledge to which this committee requests signatures embodies their plan to raise the funds to make this a cash war. I submit herewith as part of my remarks that pledge for the information of Members of the House and of the general public, and it reads as follows:

I hereby demand that the Congress of the United States shall immediately enact legislation providing substantially for the following war measures:

1. That in case of war all net incomes of $5,000 or over shall be subject to the following annual graduated war contributions:

"On all net incomes from $5,000 to $10,000 a contribution of 2½ per cent.

"On all incomes over $10,000 a year a contribution increasing on a sliding scale, beginning at 10 per cent and rising to a point which will permit of no individual retaining an annual net income in excess of $100,000 during the war."

2. That no war supplies or war service, including transportation, shall be furnished to the Government at a net profit of more than 3½ per cent.

3. That no wholesale or retail dealer shall sell food or other basic necessities of life during the war at a profit larger than 6 per cent.

4. That intentional failure to supply the Government with correct figures as to incomes and profits on such sales and service shall be a felony, punishable by imprisonment.

5. That any individual or corporation who knowingly furnishes the Government with defective war supplies shall be guilty of a felony, punishable by imprisonment.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I think I can safely say to the House that the great rank and file of the people of my congressional district are solidly behind our President and Chief Executive of this Nation in his course and actions leading up to and inaugurating military and naval hostilities against the Imperial German Government, and every Member of the Congress of the United States will bear witness to the truth that his great course has been one in the interest of justice and humanity. Never has a ruler of any nation on earth striven harder and more honorably to avoid military or naval complications with another country than has President Wilson to avoid such complications with the Kaiser, the head of the Imperial Government of Germany. To this we can each and all bear witness. He has suffered humiliation and embarrassment during the last two years to an extent that it has not only humiliated him but has humiliated our Nation; but we all know he has gone on the principle that it is better to make some sacrifices, great as they may have been, than to enter the world-wide war, but we finally had to act in defense of the integrity and preservation of our own Republic and the preservation of democratic forms of government throughout the world.

Billions of dollars' worth of property owned by American citizens and the American Government has been destroyed by the German submarine warfare. Nearly 250 lives have likewise been destroyed. Men, women, and children have been hurled from vessels torpedoed by German submarines in the dead of midnight upon the high seas where they had a constitutional and international right to be. They were innocent people, as a rule, and came from this country and were citizens of the United States. The submarine warfare has been increasing to such an alarming extent both in and outside of the "war zone" that we can not longer see our way clear to submit to it.

No man in the American Congress has been more opposed to war than myself. I am one of three orphan children who nearly starved to death for the actual necessaries of life for nearly three years immediately following the late Civil War, and I never imagined for one moment that I could ever be placed in a position where the duty to myself or my country would be so strong as to induce me to vote to involve this country in war. Each and every one of us knows we have a Christian President, and a President who loves this country better than he does himself; who loves the American people and whose heart almost bled with sorrow when he was last before us recommending what we should do, and if we failed to do it we would not only lose our own self-respect as a people but the self-respect of this Nation. Our national honor was at stake—in fact, had been attacked and assaulted so repeatedly and with such hellish and uncivilized murderous design that when it came to a question of my vote I felt that my country's standing among the nations of the earth was so much more important than my own; in fact, I felt, Mr. Speaker, that to desert the President in this national crisis after I had stood by him so long and so faithfully, that I would be guilty of stabbing the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy in the back. I repeat, my country's honor was at stake, and my country's usefulness among the civilized nations of the earth was being seriously questioned if not doubted. I felt that so much of our property had been destroyed and so many of the lives of our people had been ruthlessly and wantonly destroyed that rather than stand it any longer it was incumbent upon me to vote as I did, sustain the President, or resign and surrender my commission, unsullied as I have faithfully striven to preserve it, to the people who sent me here, and retire again to private life.

The latter course would have been cowardly, and I am not a coward; but, Mr. Speaker, it was an awful responsibility to assume and an awful vote to cast; but the transaction has been, up to date, completed, and in the sight of God, loving my country as I do, and, I repeat, so much better than I do myself, that I recorded my vote in accordance with the request of the President of my country, and I hope and pray to God I made no mistake thereby.

Under the permission given me to extend my remarks I include the following resolutions adopted at various mass meetings held throughout my district and some other points in my State.

At my home city of Charleston, the capital of West Virginia, I am informed nearly 14,000 people—old and young, some of them foreign born but having long since renounced their allegiance to all foreign potentates, kings, and the countries of their nativity, and pledged fealty and loyalty to the American country and American flag, under which they enjoy greater privileges and more freedom than in their own native country—marched for three hours through a drenching rain, and upon assembling unanimously adopted the following resolution:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., April 2, 1917.

Hon. ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the Hon. John J. Cornwell, governor of the State of West Virginia, has by public notice requested the citizens of the State to assemble in public meetings for appropriate action in this time of national crisis; and

Whereas we, the people of the city of Charleston, W. Va., and its immediate vicinity, have so assembled do hereby adopt the following resolutions: Be it

Resolved, That we heartily indorse and commend the action of the President of the United States in severing of diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government and the steps that are being taken by our President, Woodrow Wilson, our Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, our Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, and all others in governmental authority for their efforts to place our country in a position to defend its honor and its rights in this time of national peril; and be it further

Resolved, That we, the people of Charleston and its vicinity, both men and women, do hereby pledge to the President of the United States and others in authority our unanimous support in any policies they may adopt for the defense of our country, and by this pledge we mean to dedicate our property and our lives, if need be; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States to stand solidly behind the national administration in its defense of our country and its honor, and that copies of this resolution be telegraphed to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, the governor of our State, and that copies be furnished to the press.

COMMITTEE ON ARRANGEMENTS.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.

Hon. ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE,
Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was unanimously passed:

"Resolved, That in this crisis of our country's history the Charleston Rotary Club hereby pledges to the President, Woodrow Wilson, and to the Government of the United States of America our loyal and undivided support in any measure that may be found necessary to protect our honor and defend our rights as a sovereign Nation."

Sincerely,

THE ROTARY CLUB OF CHARLESTON, W. VA.,
G. R. EDGAR, Secretary.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., April 2, 1917.

His Excellency the honorable WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

SIR: At the March meeting of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce the following resolution was unanimously adopted, and the proper officer was directed to forward it to you:

"Resolved, That this chamber, in regular session assembled, hereby pledges its support to the President of the United States, and affirms that it is ready to aid in any manner possible the Government of the United States in the preservation of the country's honor; and that our support means our means, our talents, our businesses, and ourselves."

Very truly, yours,

CHARLESTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
HERBERT FRANKENBERGER, President.

At a called meeting of Kanawha Camp, No. 2, United Spanish War Veterans, held at Charleston, W. Va., on the 31st day of March, 1917, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

"With profound admiration of the fortitude, wisdom, and patience which have characterized the course heretofore pursued by the President of the United States in his heroic efforts to maintain with honor the peace of our beloved Nation;

"With no malice in our hearts toward the people of that great nation whose Government has fallen into the hands of military mad despots;

"We believe that the time has come when we must take more rigorous steps to preserve inviolate those exalted rights and liberties for which our forefathers fought and died, to protect the lives and property of American citizens from a ruthless foe who knows no quarter, and to retain unmolested the right to send our commerce on the high seas: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That Kanawha Camp, No. 2, United Spanish War Veterans, hereby extends to the President of the United States the assurance of our most complete approval of the course he had taken, and is taking, in demanding that ruthless submarine warfare shall cease against our commerce, and that we pledge our sacred honor to support loyally and with energy such steps as he and the Congress shall deem most expedient, and, if requested to do so, we shall be glad to again take up arms in defense of humanity."

A true copy. Test:

JOHN BAKER WHITE,
Commander.

BECKLEY, W. VA., April 2, 1917.

Hon. ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE,
Washington, D. C.:

The following resolutions were adopted at a mass meeting of Raleigh County citizens here to-night:

"Whereas by a deliberate course of aggression the German Empire and its subservient allies have destroyed the peace and safety of American citizens and property; and

"Whereas we recognize that as a consequence of the deliberate purposes of the German Empire, now the mightiest military power that the world has ever known, both the safety and existence of all representative Governments throughout the world are at stake and will be determined by ruthless war, carried on with the most deliberate and wholesale atrocities, we the people of Raleigh County, believing in the principles laid down by the founders of our Government, pledge to our country our united and unwavering support in armed resistance to this world-wide conspiracy, and urge on it vigorous warfare to a successful and safe conclusion; and recognizing that civilization owes its position to you at this time, in the first place, to Belgium and France, we cheerfully approve the extension of financial support by the Government of this country to the Governments of France and Belgium, with the most unstinted liberality; and recognizing the full demands of national safety we respectfully urge upon the Government that an army of at least 1,000,000 be organized as rapidly as possible by universal compulsory training: And be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in the National Congress."

S. M. PATTERSON, Chairman.
CHAS. P. HODEL, Secretary.

RONCEVERTE, W. VA., April 3, 1917.

Hon. ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Adopted at a meeting of the Ronceverte Chamber of Commerce, of Ronceverte, W. Va., Monday, April 2, 1917:

"Resolved—

"First. That we gladly, in response to the appeal of our governor, give this expression to our loyalty to our country in these ominous and trying times; that we sympathize with our President, upon whom devolves the heavy burden and responsibility of leadership in this crisis of our country's history; that we approve his earnest and sustained efforts, marked by christian forbearance and patience, to maintain friendly relations with all other nations.

"Second. That we deplore war; that, as free American citizens, jealous of our rights, we hate all wars of conquest and subjugation; such wars are criminal, intolerable, and utterly repulsive.

"Third. That we approve, as thoroughly righteous, war for defense, provided all other honorable means of rectification have failed; that a state repel vi et armis the encroachment, the aggression, the trespass of another is a moral obligation of the highest order.

"Fourth. That we heartily approve the action of our President in arming our ships for defense against unlawful attacks 'after all honorable means of rectification have failed,' and we urge upon our Congress soon to convene to provide such means as may be wise and necessary to protect and defend the lives and property of our people against all unlawful attacks.

"Fifth. That copies of these resolutions be sent to our Congressmen and to the press for publication."

ST. ALBANS, W. VA., March 30, 1917.

Hon. ADAM LITTLEPAGE,
Washington, D. C.:

The St. Albans Board of Trade, St. Albans, W. Va., at a meeting held March 27, 1917, unanimously passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we unqualifiedly indorse the policy of President Wilson in the present international crisis and pledge him our loyal support in any course he may pursue."

ST. ALBANS BOARD OF TRADE.

BLUEFIELD, W. VA., April 2, 1917.

Congressman ADAM LITTLEPAGE,
Washington, D. C.:

The following message wired President Wilson:

"Eight hundred members Bluefield Lodge, No. 269, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, pledge themselves to be with you in preparedness and even to war with Germany in the present international crisis confronting the American peoples."

JOHN F. LANG, Secretary.

MORGANTOWN, April 3, 1917.

Hon. ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LITTLEPAGE: A great mass meeting of students and faculty of the West Virginia University last night adopted the inclosed resolutions, which speak for themselves. In addition, they ordered the following telegram sent to the President of the United States:

"West Virginia University, in a mass meeting of students and faculty, offers its classrooms for barracks, its laboratories for arsenals, its athletic fields for drill grounds, and its splendid cadet corps of 600 men to support you in this trying hour."

We renew our allegiance and are ready for service in whatsoever way it pleases the authorities to use us.

Very cordially, yours, FRANK B. TROTTER.

Whereas the great crisis now confronting the American people demands the immediate raising of a large army; and

Whereas in the past the volunteer system has proved wholly inadequate for the creation and maintenance of a sufficient fighting force; and

Whereas it has been demonstrated that the principle of universal military service is the only just, fair, and democratic basis for any military establishment: Therefore be it

Resolved by the faculty and students of West Virginia University in mass meeting assembled, That we favor the immediate enactment by Congress of laws providing for universal military training and service; and

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House, and to the Senators and Representatives from West Virginia.

Whereas Germany persists in a ruthless use of submarines which contravenes international laws and grossly violates her treaty obligations to the United States;

Whereas many American citizens have been thereby subjected to wanton and cruel suffering and death, and all who dare to exercise their right to travel on the high seas are menaced with similar suffering;

Whereas, in defiance of law and right, Germany dares to dictate the terms on which American commerce may use the world's highways;

Whereas President Wilson has, with utmost patience, exhausted every honorable and peaceful means to safeguard the lives and the rights of our citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the faculty and students of West Virginia University in mass meeting assembled, That we respectfully urge the President to protect with all the power he commands the lives and the rights of our citizens; that we pledge to him our loyalty and fullest support in all measures to that end; that we urge our Senators and Representatives without stint or partisanship to aid the President by appropriating funds, enacting laws, and conferring powers appropriate to this purpose; that the president of the university, as chairman, send copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, the governor of West Virginia, and to each United States Senator and Representative from West Virginia.

Whereas with fervid supplications to that Almighty Being who rules the Universe, who presides in the councils of nations, and whose providential aid can supply every human defect, that His benediction may be with our President and Congress and consecrate them to the liberties and happiness of the people of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced since the days of Washington and the long line of distinguished men and patriots who have succeeded him, each of whom by some token of providential agency seems to have been chosen with peculiar fitness for the work, and in these troublous times it is but meet that patriotic citizens of the Nation should indicate to President Wilson, the God-given man of the hour, their confidence in him as their Commander in Chief and to assure him that in case of war every call emanating from him will be answered with the same patriotic alacrity that characterized the actions of our forefathers, the early settlers of our then wilderness country in the years long gone by; and the mountains of West Virginia may be depended upon to do their full share in bearing the burdens of the Nation, no matter in what branch of service they may be called to act or by what means they can assist in restoring and perpetuating the peace and prosperity of our common country by defending its honor, either on land or sea: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the citizens of White Sulphur Springs and community, who, acting under the call of our governor, have this day met, regardless of political party or other affiliations, hereby pledge our support to the President and assure him that while his efforts to keep our beloved country out of war have largely been approved, that should the worst come we shall be found in the ranks in one capacity or another and will otherwise contribute to the success of our Nation in its direst extremity.

Resolved, That the officers, chairman and secretary, of this meeting be requested to furnish President Wilson, our Representatives in Congree, and Gov. Cornwell, each a copy of this resolution and the proceedings of this meeting.

A. M. HEPPERT, Secretary.

At a meeting of the citizens of Lewisburg and community, held at Carnegie Hall the evening of April 2, 1917, John A. Preston, Esq., was called to the chair.

On motion, the following paper was adopted unanimously by a standing vote:

"We, the people of Lewisburg and vicinity, in meeting assembled do unanimously and heartily adopt the following resolutions and request our chairman to forward them to the Representatives of our section in Congress and Senate, now in session:

"'First. Resolved, That we appreciate the patience and strength that have so long kept America from the maelstrom of war now engulfing the countries of Europe. When others have cried out in madness the voice of America has risen above the storm in sanity and sweetness as the one clear counselor among the raging rulers of earth.

"'Second. Resolved, That we tender the President and the powers that be in this hour of national crisis and testing our unfaltering assurance of confidence and cooperation in whatever lies before them in the path of duty.

"'Third. Resolved, That in the event of war with any foreign nation we pledge the resources of our section in life and treasure to the protection of American honor on land and sea and to the attainment of those high ends and aims that shall establish righteousness among the peoples and shall forward the development of every country unto the day when nations shall no longer learn war but shall dwell in that comity that shall make all peoples friends and every man a brother.'

"JOHN A. PRESTON,
"Chairman."

SUTTON, W. VA., April 2, 1917.

Be it resolved by the citizens of Braxton County, W. Va., in mass convention assembled, at the courthouse of said county, on this the 2d day of April, 1917, That we are in absolute accord with the President of the United States in his attitude and policy toward the Imperial Government of Germany, and eagerly embrace this opportunity to place the stamp of our approval on all that he and the administration at Washington have done looking to the protection of American interests and American lives on the high seas; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of the citizens of this county that every Member of Congress from West Virginia ought to and should uphold the hands of the President and stand firmly behind him in carrying out and rendering effective all of his said policies for the maintenance of international law, the protection of American rights, and the safeguarding of the honor and dignity of our great and glorious country; and be it further

Resolved, That should the Government at Washington deem it necessary, in order to maintain any of our rights aforesaid, to take up arms against the Imperial Government of Germany or any other nation, in such case, we hereby pledge to the President and to our National Government, in the prosecution of such a war, our lives and our fortunes.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the President of the United States and to each Member of Congress from West Virginia.

L. H. KELLY.
VAN B. HALL.
AMOS BRIGHT.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since the die has been cast, the defense of American institutions and American honor has been undertaken, and by force of arms, I am prepared to say to this House and to the people of my native land, that the good people, without regard to their race, nationality, or color, of the sixth congressional district of West Virginia are ready, individually and collectively, to sustain this Republic, its glory, and its institutions, at whatever the price to be paid and obey the order of a Christian President of a noble country dominated by the Christian religion. My people do not have to fall in line, as they stepped into the line of duty the moment the President and the Congress of the United States acted. Our money, our property, our lives, and our all we pledge to the preservation of the honor and integrity and glory of our Republic and the perpetuation of a democratic form of Government, and in the sight of God we each and all stand ready to do our duty in this crisis which may prove a bloody one, but we pray God for triumphant victory of our forces in the interest of justice and humanity.

War With the Imperial German Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to lift my voice or to take any part in the discussion of this resolution. However, since our President, on April 2, came before us and made the recommendations he then made, which led later to the introduction of this resolution, my heart has been heavy. I have almost regretted during these days that I must take my share in the great responsibility now resting upon the membership of this body. I have felt like the man of Galilee, when in the garden of Gethsemane he prayed, "may this cup pass from me," for I remembered with great force the early teachings of my sainted mother and father, who, in the simple but steadfast faith of the Quaker Church, of which they were devoted and devout members, firmly believed. This church is now and has always been opposed to war, believing implicitly in the teachings of the Savior of men—"On earth peace, good will toward men." My inclinations, therefore, have always been to follow these teachings.

I abhor war with all its attendant evils, its horrors and sufferings, and I know and realize that a very large number of the people whom I am called upon to represent here are opposed to war, though lacking in no sense of true patriotism. I had felt that it would be easy for me to look only to these things and oppose this resolution. Yet when I considered again and realized that I am more than the representative of my constituents in Colorado—that my duty here is also to this great Government as a whole, and there came with this full realization the conviction that Congress was in honor bound to fulfill the dictates of the President in his authorized leadership, in order that no shadow of doubt as to the perfect patriotic unity of the United States might rest on this country, and so give a false impression abroad. With these thoughts came my determination to support the resolution.

I wish to say, however, that I have in my service here done all within my power to prevent the situation which confronts us. Since clouds of war first appeared upon the horizon I have used whatever influence I may have had to avert this calamity. When the McLemore resolution came before the House—a measure warning American citizens of the danger of travel on belligerent ships—I voted against tabling the resolution, and I have voted for the amendments to the resolution under consideration, believing that our boys should not be conscripted into service on foreign soil, except by special authorization of Congress. These being defeated, I therefore bow to the will of the majority, as it seems to me that there is no other course open to us as Members of Congress than to follow the President, in his capacity as head of the Nation, and that duty and loyalty demand that we join in patriotic submission in the defense of our country and our flag, when we remember for what this flag stands—what sacrifices were made and hardships endured by our forefathers, that the blessings we enjoy to-day should be ours. I say, when I think of these things, then I am led to the thought, Shall I be less patriotic than they in not resisting by force the taking away of these rights for which they shed their blood?

When I have during sleepless nights the last week contemplated these things and believing it a patriotic duty to my country to support our President in this our Nation's crisis, I have determined to vote for the resolution and to call upon the God of battles for his approval of our acts, that our country may continue to enjoy the blessings of a free people.

War With Germany.

SPEECH
OF
HON. W. B. WALTON,
OF NEW MEXICO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. WALTON. Mr. Speaker, I have made up my mind to vote for this resolution and to vote against any amendment to it that may be proposed. This decision is the result of calm deliberation on a subject that I realize is of momentous importance to every man, woman, and child in the United States. In taking this step not only have I the approval of my own conscience but it is my firm conviction that I am acting with the full approval of a vast majority of the people of the country and especially of the constituency which I have the honor to represent in this House.

It is idle for us to talk about "making" war. War is now being made upon us by the Imperial German Government. The blood of hundreds of American citizens murdered in the pursuit of their peaceful vocations bears eloquent testimony to the cruelty and savagery of that warfare. What are we to do about it? Are we to delude ourselves with the fatuous pretense that we have not been attacked—deny the existence of an obvious fact—become the object of the just ridicule and contempt of the civilized world? Or shall we strike back like men? Strike back not for vengeance and punishment but to vindicate the rights of American citizens and of humanity.

I confess my inability to follow the reasoning of those who maintain that we go into this war hastily or without just provocation. The patience of the man who knows his quarrel just has been ours. We have recognized that, to use the words of our great President, the world has been "on fire," and that the frenzy and rage of the greatest struggle the world has ever known have left little chance for reason to exercise its sway. We have borne much, have suffered much in recognition of this, but always with the hope that some day calm humanity would again assert itself and that a pathway out of the jungle of international outlawry would be opened.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it has become all to obvious that we have hoped in vain; that the state of the world is to become worse, not better; and that if we are to emerge from the world chaos with any rights left to us as a Nation and a free people we must fight for them. We wanted peace. We have waited for it. We have almost begged for it. As long as there was the slightest hope that peace could be had without black dishonor we have refused to fight. But now that that ray of hope has been extinguished we shall go into the fight like men and come out of it as we have come out of every fight in our national history—victors in the glorious cause of human liberty.

I am not lacking in appreciation of the horrors of war. I know that as a people we are this day going down into the valley of the shadow of death. I know that we will sacrifice some of the finest flower of the young manhood of the country, that homes will be made desolate, that widows will mourn and the prattle of childish laughter will be hushed. But, as has been truly said on the floor of this House, only the craven will stop to contemplate the horrors of war when the fact that war is right and necessary has been made plain. Nothing worth achieving has ever been gained without sacrifice. Our dearest and most cherished rights and liberties have been won at the cost of blood and tears, but we have not stopped to count the cost or weigh blood and tears against that which was dearer to us than life.

Speaking for my own constituency, I say without hesitancy that the people of New Mexico do not want war; but I know that I speak with entire accuracy when I declare that they do not have to be urged to fight for a principle or lay down their lives in defense of the national honor. And the volume of letters and telegrams that I have received from representative citizens of my State in the last few days leaves no doubt in my mind that the sentiment of the people of New Mexico is well-nigh unanimous that not to fight now would be shameful.

Approximately, one-half the population of my State is of Spanish-American origin or descent. There is no race of people on earth that is by instinct more peaceful and tranquil, the members of which are more anxious to dwell in harmony and fraternity with their fellows and devote their entire energies to the developments and upbuildings of their Commonwealth. At the same time there is no braver, more patriotic, or more loyal class of citizens between the two oceans. In their veins flows the blood of the Spanish conquistadores. It was their ancestors who subdued the savage and made our vast western country habitable for civilized man. It was their fathers who, joining with the Anglo-Saxon pioneers of an earlier day, have built up what we are proud to believe is one of the great States of the American Union. The combination of these two strains has made what I believe, Mr. Speaker, is one of the most enlightened constituencies represented on the floor of this House.

I mention this merely as illustrative of the temperament of my people. Such a people want no unjust war—no war for conquest—no fight that is without a cause. Such a people can not be kept from fighting where there is just cause. And with this in view, Mr. Speaker, I say to you that I would be ashamed to go home and face these people if I did not give whole-hearted support to this resolution.

Loyalty of the People of the Ninth District, Wisconsin.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DAVID G. CLASSON,
OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. CLASSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, as showing the loyalty of the people of my district, a telegram received by me from Marinette Lodge, No. 1313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, as follows:

MARINETTE, WIS., April 5, 1917.

Hon. D. G. CLASSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Following resolution passed by unanimous vote:

"Whereas our country is confronted with a grave international crisis that will test its right to live; and

"Whereas it is about to enlist its men and resources to protect the lives and rights of American citizens and advance the cause of justice for all mankind; and

"Whereas the President in a great message to Congress has asked that a state of war be declared to insure the attainment of these noble objects:

"Resolved by Marinette Lodge, No. 1313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, That we believe that the country and its citizens should spare no effort in this great cause and stand by the President first, last, and all the time.

"Resolved further by Marinette Lodge, No. 1313, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, That we pledge our resources, our honor, and our lives to insure the perpetuity of the Nation and its success against the enemy."

D. C. ROBERTSON, Exalted Ruler.

I also place in the RECORD for the same purpose the resolution adopted by a loyalty meeting of the citizens of Green Bay, Wis., together with the letter transmitting the same:

GREEN BAY, WIS., April 2, 1917.

Hon. DAVID G. CLASSON,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE AND DEAR SIR: I have the honor, as chairman of a "loyalty" meeting held in this city yesterday attended by 3,000 people from all classes and walks of life, to inclose you herewith a copy of the resolutions unanimously adopted.

Yours, very respectfully,

JOHN F. MARTIN, Chairman.

Whereas a gigantic conflict of arms is now being waged between most of the nations of Europe and is even spreading to the peoples of Asia, the extent and virulence of which have never before been known in the history of the world; and

Whereas it has been the aim of the United States of America to observe a strict neutrality in such conflict, because by treaty stipulations and a century of practice we are on terms of peace and friendship with all the warring nations, and fervently desire to remain in such relations with them; and

Whereas the President of the United States has, since the beginning of the conflict, earnestly endeavored with infinite patience under many adverse circumstances to preserve such strict neutrality, and has frequently assured the warring nations of his desire so to do, while at the same time preserving to our people all such rights as are possessed by them to the unrestricted travel and commerce of the sea, not only under treaty stipulations but also under the principles of international law and the dictates of humanity, which should govern nations while at war as well as in times of peace; and

Whereas for more than a century the United States have had a treaty with Germany—the nation with whom the crisis now threatening our peace is imminent—which is still in force and expressly assures to the contracting parties the very rights of travel and commerce which are now being and, from the outset of the struggle have been, insisted upon by President Wilson, as assured by such treaty as well as by the law which governs the sea; and

Whereas in violation of this treaty agreement and of our rights as a Nation, not only under such treaty but the principles of international law as well as the dictates of humanity, Germany now asserts her determination to prevent any commerce on our part with her European enemies and to destroy not only the property but the lives of our citizens without warning if they attempt either to travel or to carry their commerce in such restricted zones of the sea as she may see fit to prescribe; and

Whereas Germany has actually put into effect her said determination and has without warning destroyed vessels carrying our commerce and the lives of our citizens, including helpless women and children, who from necessity or choice are traveling the high seas as sailors or passengers on such vessels, and now asserts anew her purpose to continue such lawless and inhuman conduct toward our people, with whom for a hundred years she has had and still has a treaty of friendship which she thus ruthlessly sets at naught; and

Whereas the people of the United States are a peace-loving Nation, and now earnestly desire and are striving to preserve peace with all the nations of the world, and have ever been long-suffering and patient, as circumstances have required, to avoid a rupture with any foreign nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That while peace is a condition earnestly to be desired, it must be had only with honor; peace may not be bought with a forfeiture of our own self-respect nor the respect of the world; that the heritage of valor and unshaken courage in the defense of the God-given rights of every American citizen to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness on land and sea wherever he may go, which came down to us from the heroes of the Revolution and has ever been kept stainless by the blood of our soldiers and sailors in every war since our liberties were won, must remain unsullied in this hour of trial; be it further

Resolved, That it is the duty of every American citizen, whether native or adopted, to stand firm for the fearless defense of American rights both on land and sea against assault from whatever source; that in this crisis, however threatening, duty calls upon every American citizen to give his unflinching and loyal support to President Wilson in every endeavor he is putting forth, not only to preserve the peace of the Nation but to fearlessly assert and defend its rights, especially against inhuman and murderous assault upon the lives and property of our people who are lawfully using the high seas; be it further

Resolved, That it is not our purpose to suggest how such rights should be asserted or defended, as such determination has been, under our system of government, wisely committed to the President and his advisors and to the Congress, in whose wisdom and patriotism we must and do confide, in the hope that without stain upon our national honor, but always mindful of the untarnished valor and exalted patriotism and fidelity with which American institutions and American rights have ever been defended these trusted servants of the people may not hesitate or falter in this great crisis in choosing such a course, whatever may be its cost, as shall redound to the everlasting honor and good of the Republic and the promotion of free institutions among the peoples of the world.

Be it resolved, That we as citizens of Green Bay in this mass meeting assembled pledge anew our loyalty to our country and to American ideals and institutions, and hereby declare our firm and unwavering support of President Wilson in all the efforts he is putting forth, not only to preserve an honorable peace with all the warring nations, but to assert and defend American rights against attack from whatever source.

H. O. FAIRCHILD,
SAMUEL H. CADY,
F. W. VOGELPOHL,
Committee.

Also, resolutions adopted by the citizens of Crandon, Wis.:

Be it unanimously resolved by a mass meeting of the citizens of the city of Crandon, Wis., duly called and held this 1st day of March, 1917, That we heartily support President Wilson in his stand to protect the lives and rights of American citizens on the high seas and elsewhere.

Resolved further, That we appeal to our United States Senators and Members of Congress for a similar support of our President in this crisis.

C. O. DECKER,
Chairman.

Secretary.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER L. HENSLEY,
OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have realized, and I now realize, how futile it is for one entertaining my views to speak against this resolution. This is an awful hour. This hour and its responsibilities try the very souls of men, but I can not shift that responsibility. I must meet my duty to-day and cast my vote in that way that will square with my conscience and my God. I had hoped that this hour would never come to my country. I had hoped, yea prayed my God, that this great Nation, the only hope of a constitutional democracy, would not be engulfed in that awful European war. I have feared for some time that we were slowly but surely being dragged toward the verge of that awful hell. The metropolitan press of the country, in the main, have said everything possible, it seems to me, and I am sure the most of you feel as I do about it, to produce this situation. I would not wish a curse upon that institution, but I do most earnestly hope and pray that the scales may fall from the eyes of those who are responsible for producing this situation, so that the ghastliness of their cruel crime committed, as I see it, against our beloved country, our flag, and democracy may be seen and thoroughly understood. May God in his mercy forgive them. May the eyes of the mothers, dimmed with galling tears, when called upon after the passage of this resolution to give up their first born to go to the trenches of Europe, either in France or in Russia, be unable to comprehend the purposes and all back of it lest they may pray a curse upon the heads of those who are responsible for this thing.

Mr. Speaker, I do not undertake to explain away the many wrongs Germany has committed against us and our people. Both the central powers and the allies have committed grievous wrongs against our people, as I see it, though I never have believed that they primarily intended to commit the wrongs against us. They have only been actuated by a desire to further their cause against their enemy with whom they are in a death grapple. They have been committing these wrongs for some time, but while others were severely criticizing the administration's course in keeping us out of war I have at all times most heartily approved those policies. I am not pro-German any more than I am pro-British. I am most truly American. My forebearers helped establish this Republic, and my country and my country's need is my whole concern. I do not pretend to say that the many things done by Germany do not constitute a cause for war any less than the many things done by England constitute equally a just cause for war. I have thought for some time that under other circumstances these things might be sufficient to produce war, but, Mr. Speaker, the things which ordinarily would cause me to vote for a declaration of war under the present circumstances, the present world condition, would not influence me at all in that direction.

One-half of the world and its peoples have hydrophobia; anger, hate, and all those things which are primitive possess them; the animal, the spirit of the jungle, controls them. Nothing but the lust for blood and rapine will satisfy them. I did not want my country to take hydrophobia now—nor at any time, for that matter, especially not now. I wanted this great big, peaceful, Christian Nation to be a beacon light to the peoples of those countries when revolution has torn them as it has torn Russia. I wanted this Government, almost at any cost, to serve humanity by preserving those ennobling characteristics of manhood and Christian nationality. I wanted it to guide the peoples of all those countries after this awful war is over in setting up a new and a different system—Republics, if you please. I did not want to see the flames of that conflagration reach this continent and this people, for when they do they may involve the other Republics south of us and Japan in the Far East, and God only knows, in that event, the future of our race. I have believed that this country was especially destined to perform a great mission in the affairs of the world, and I did not want us to fail in that glorious mission to democratize the world. I did not want to see us take this fateful step.

In the language of the brilliant majority leader, Mr. KITCHIN:

Half of the civilized world is now a slaughterhouse for human beings. This Nation is the last hope of "peace on earth, good will toward men." I am unwilling for my country by statutory command to pull up the last anchor of peace in the world and extinguish during the long night of a world-wide war the only remaining star of hope for Christendom. I am unwilling by my vote to-day for this Nation to throw away the only remaining compass to which the world can look for guidance in the paths of right and truth, of justice and humanity, and to leave only force and blood to chart hereafter the path of mankind to tread.

We have jurisdiction and rules of action to govern men within the States. Tell me, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of this House, why it is and where the reason lies for having anarchy when you get beyond the State into the international sphere? If only a small part of the enormous sums used for war purposes—2 to 5 per cent—was used for the purpose of setting up some mechanism to control such situations as this, it could be done. It can be remedied. Why pursue policies which in the end will result in war? There is a way out of all this horrible situation; and the first thing to be done in that direction is to eliminate human greed and the profits that men make out of war. There was a time when dueling was a recognized institution in this country, and we are told that when Hamilton was challenged by Burr that he prepared a statement which he left behind in which he protested against dueling. He said that he did not believe in dueling, but he was afraid it would impair his usefulness and therefore he accepted the challenge and went upon the field of honor and was murdered. It is also said that Hill, of Georgia, when challenged to fight a duel replied, "I have a soul to protect and a family to support while you have neither, and what is more I do not believe in dueling. Therefore I will not fight you." Which of these two men served future generations best? It took big courageous men like Hill to trample dueling under foot in this country and it is no longer recognized as an institution. I had hoped that my country, this great Republic of ours, might be a "Hill" in these troublesome international affairs so as to contribute toward putting organized murder under the foot of the people of the world.

I am not deceiving myself about this situation. I am not unmindful of the unpleasant consequences to me and mine by my stand here to-day. I know what my vote on this resolution will cost. I will be misunderstood and when once war is on and the minds of our people are more thoroughly inflamed I will be reviled and abused and likely by those I love most, the very ones I am seeking to serve now. I have passed several sleepless nights. I have prayed for guidance. I know my purposes. So come what may, I can not support this resolution. I would be a coward, a craven coward if, feeling this way, I voted for it in order to spare myself the things which I fear I may suffer by voting against it.

The Constitution places authority in Congress to pass upon these questions, and what is done must be done before a vote is cast, because after the vote is had upon the resolution it will be too late. When the recruiting officer goes to the homes in my country the boys can not inquire then concerning the causes of war or where they will be expected to do service. When that flag, the flag of my country, peaceful as it is to-day, is unfurled as a battle flag, then we can not falter. We must be ready as true patriots to suffer, to die, if needs be, to promote the good of our cause. The weeping mothers all over this land can not then inquire what it is all about, whether or not it is for the purpose of sustaining commerce, whether it is to enable the shipping of goods, and in some instances to ship ammunition to some warring nations. They can then only kiss their brave boys good-by and in God's name send them forth to serve their country. I had hoped that our people would be too patriotic either for pleasure or for money to go into the danger zone, and thus recklessly involve our country and our people in war. I only wish that the goods sold to those nations had been sold at our factories, the other nations assuming the risk of delivery during these terrible, perilous times. We have had some prominent citizens who have never ceased, in season and out of season, to abuse our beloved President because he would not go into the European war. In many speeches I characterized these men and the motives possessing them as criminal. I said that they were a distinct menace to our Republic and our institutions. I plead with my folks in every speech that I made, and declared that President Wilson was being assailed because he would not consent to send our boys into the trenches of Europe. I assured them that President Wilson would not do this thing. I promised my people I would not vote to send our brave boys to the trenches of Europe to fight in a war—a quarrel between the crowned heads of Europe. There is no telling the cost in blood and treasure of this fateful move, but when the move has been made and the resolution passed and approved by the President I hope my countrymen will respond cheerfully to the call to colors and that we may prosecute this war to a speedy and successful conclusion. Then will be the test of patriotism, and not now here on the floor of the House among Members who assume no risk by their votes.

I have been impressed with letters and telegrams from my district asking me to "stand by the President, but, for God's sake, keep us out of war." In this case that is impossible. It is well to favor a state of democracy throughout the world; but, mind you, we are joining several of the most autocratic nations on earth to bring this about in Germany, and at no telling the cost, in addition to perhaps a million lives it may cost us democracy at home, which has been purchased by the blood and lives of our fathers.

A Patriotic Board of Commerce.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of this opportunity to submit correspondence between the officials of the Knoxville, Tenn., Board of Commerce, the President of the United States, and others, in connection with certain publicity work in the interest of military preparedness and volunteer enlistments in the Army and Navy. This action of Knoxville's commercial organization is further evidence of the fact that eastern Tennessee is loyal to the National Government and intends to do its full duty in the war with Germany.

The correspondence is as follows:

KNOXVILLE, TENN., March 27, 1917.

Judge H. B. LINDSAY,
Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

At a meeting held to-day of the trade trip executive committee the serious situation confronting the Nation suggested the advisability of offering to the Government the trade trip as an instrumentality for the dissemination of preparedness propaganda in the territory to be covered. It was felt by the committee that perhaps the trip if made on this basis would stimulate interest in the preparedness movement and assist in the mobilization of troops.

Please call on the President, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy and make known our offer to the Government, asking for suggestions as to how we may best serve the interests of the country through the medium of what we had originally styled a "trade trip," but which might, under the above circumstances be styled a trip of applied preparedness and patriotism. If desired by the Government the trip will be conducted exclusively in the interest of the preparedness movement.

R. S. HAZEN,
General Chairman Trade Trip Committee of Board of Commerce.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 28, 1917.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have just received from Knoxville, Tenn., my home, a telegram, a copy of which I herewith inclose.

This trade trip is an annual affair with us, and this year will travel through east Tennessee, north Georgia, and North and South Carolina, going by way of Atlanta, Columbia, S. C., Charlotte and Raleigh, N. C., and return via Asheville, N. C.

It will be composed of about 100 business and professional men of Knoxville and the band of the University of Tennessee.

We travel by special train, and large crowds usually meet us at all stopping points. This year's trip will cover more than 1,200 miles and occupy four days and make 50 or more stops.

The train moves under military orders at the command of a colonel, and each Pullman has a captain.

Of course this tender of our organization and services is without charge or expense to the Government.

We have a speaker's bureau, of which I am captain, and we would be pleased to accommodate on our train any person or persons who might be suggested by the Government to accompany us. We will leave Knoxville on the morning of April 10.

I will be in this city during to-day and to-morrow, and if necessary will be pleased to furnish any additional information required. I am stopping at the Raleigh Hotel.

Very respectfully, H. B. LINDSAY.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 28, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR: The President asks me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of even date, with inclosure, and to convey to you and to everyone concerned an expression of his deep appreciation of your patriotic offer, which is being brought to the attention of the Secretary of War.

With warm thanks in the President's behalf, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

J. P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

Hon. H. B. LINDSAY,
Hotel Raleigh.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 31, 1917.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of the 28th instant with reference to a trade trip which will be taken by the Board of Commerce of Knoxville through the States of Tennessee, Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, and of your offer to give publicity to the Navy on this trip, the department wishes to express its hearty appreciation of this patriotic offer and to state that there is no representative of the Navy who can be spared from his regular duties at this time to accompany the delegation from Knoxville. I should be very glad, however, if your speakers would take occasion to refer to the needs of the Navy for young men. Attention is called to the recent proclamation of the President increasing the complement of enlisted men of the Navy to 87,000. There is unquestionably a fine opportunity offered the young men of the country to improve themselves by joining the Navy, besides responding to the country's call. I am sending you under separate cover a supply of booklets, leaflets, and lists of recruiting stations from which your speakers can obtain the necessary data regarding the opportunities offered young men in the Navy. Letters have also been addressed to the officers in charge of the Navy recruiting stations with headquarters at Nashville, Atlanta, Charleston, and Raleigh, instructing them to cooperate at the various cities where they maintain recruiting offices in such manner as appears to be practicable.

The department has directed Lieut. Commander B. K. Johnson, United States Navy, recruiting inspector, southern division, to proceed to Knoxville and confer with you regarding this trip.

Thanking you and the board of commerce for your offer of assistance, I am,

Respectfully JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Judge H. B. LINDSAY,
Knoxville, Tenn.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., April 3, 1917.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

The eloquently patriotic message delivered to the Congress last night finds a hearty echo in the bosoms of the people of this the volunteer section of the Volunteer State. We are moved to respond, not with mere words of approval, but in a material way, and hereby place ourselves at your disposal. We are tremendously in earnest about converting our coming trade trip into one of applied preparedness and patriotism, and will gladly do so if the suggestion has your official sanction. We would feel deeply honored if you would designate some one to represent the Government on our special train, which will leave Knoxville on Tuesday, April 10, for a four-day trip through Georgia and the Carolinas. This would afford the opportunity of reaching the masses with a personal message from our Chief Executive. We will cover over 1,200 miles and visit approximately 50 cities. We make this suggestion in the belief that, if carried out it may bring about a deeper realization on the part of our countrymen as to the need of adequate preparedness and thus, by the proper crystallization of sentiment in favor thereof lay the foundation for any further preparedness measures which your wisdom and foresight may deem expedient. We are at your service.

KNOXVILLE BOARD OF COMMERCE,
HUGH M. TATE, President.

"Two Wrongs Do Not Make One Right."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD KNUTSON,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the most solemn moment of my life. It is indeed hard for a new Member of this body to be confronted with and asked to help decide by his first vote the most momentous question to come before a Congress in 50 years.

In my desire to seek light and act for the best I have sat here for many, many hours, listening to arguments for and against the resolution which has for its object a declaration of war against the central powers of Europe and sending our brave young boys into the shambles of a sorely tried continent.

None has moved me as has the speech delivered by that man of men, Representative CLAUDE KITCHIN, the majority leader, who has signified that he prefers to follow the dictates of his conscience in so grave a time, rather than the titular head of his party. From the bottom of my heart do I admire his courage, his honesty of purpose, and his utter disregard for personal consequences.

When the President issued his call convening Congress in extraordinary session I thought, in common with millions of my countrymen, that he would seek from this body authority to hunt out and destroy hostile submarines preying upon neutral commerce and shipping. Alas, how soon were we to be disillusioned. Imagine my surprise and dismay when he announced that it was our duty to place our entire resources at the command of the allied Governments. That means entangling alliances, the very thing George Washington warned us against in his farewell address, a portion of which I will here quote:

> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence—I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens—the jealousy of a free people ought to constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy to be useful must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

Have we as a Nation heeded the admonition of George Washington? Have we been entirely neutral in our dealings with the belligerent nations of Europe? Have we not contented ourselves with issuing faint and half-hearted protests to the various British orders in council while with Germany we have maintained a nagging policy that would have been creditable to a common scold?

For two years I have felt that an insidious campaign was being carried on in the great metropolitan press of the Nation to create within the American breast a spirit of militarism and a feeling of hatred for the central powers. Thank God there is no feeling of hatred within me for anyone, but rather one of pity and compassion for the unfortunate men and boys who have been called upon to sacrifice their lives, or eyes and limbs, in the slaughter pens of Europe. Now the mask has been thrown aside and we are asked to declare a war which has for its object the sending of hundreds of thousands of the flower of our youth into that saturnalia of bloodshed and misery, there to be shot to pieces.

In the name of God the Father, and American mothers, fathers, and young manhood I protest. The struggle now being waged in Europe is none of our affair. It has been said on the floor this afternoon that we must destroy the Hohenzollerns and Hapsburgs; that they are a menace to democracy. Are we to endanger our democracy—which at times has bordered perilously on autocracy—in order to destroy a form of government which appears to be to the liking and choosing of those who live under it? No! No! A thousand times no!

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this resolution because I feel that were I to vote for it I would be false to my conscience and to the best interests of the people whom I have the honor to represent. However, once the die has been cast they will rally loyally about the Starry Emblem of freedom and democracy, gladly sacrificing all in the common cause.

I shall vote against a declaration of war because I feel that we have no business meddling in European affairs; I shall vote against this resolution because it will mean entangling alliances which might at a future date endanger the Monroe doctrine and embroil us in another holocaust such as they now have in Poland and Flanders; I shall vote against war because of my understanding that it is the plan of the General Staff to send hundreds of thousands of our boys into the slaughter pens of Europe, there to be shot to pieces or rendered incapacitated for life; I shall vote against war because it will impose upon our people a burden of taxation that will weigh down generations yet unborn; lastly, I shall vote against war because I feel that a majority of the common people, who live by the sweat of their brow, do not want it.

Have you, my friends, stopped to consider what a burden a war will lay upon the shoulders of an already heavily burdened people? Do you realize that there is much suffering in the land as a result of the high cost of necessities of life, and that thousands, yes hundreds of thousands, of our boys and girls are suffering from malnutrition, and that war would greatly increase the number? Do you realize that in thousands of American homes they have their meatless and potatoless days just like they have in war-stricken Europe? What provision are those of you who speak so glibly of war going to make for the poor and needy of our country? What do you propose to do toward reducing the cost of living so that every toiler and his family may have enough to eat? You say these are questions that will be settled later, or that will take care of themselves. Surely you realize that war in this country will greatly increase the cost of living.

If, as is proposed, two million young men are drafted into the service, does it not stand to reason that you will create a great scarcity of labor, especially on our farms? Farm labor is exceedingly scarce as it is.

If, as is proposed, a bond issue of five billion, four hundred million dollars is floated that will mean an additional debt of fifty-four dollars for every man, woman, and child in the land. We already have a very respectable national debt, but I presume that the agitators for war will not rest content until we have entered the bloody arena. If we must go to war, let us make this a pay-as-we-go war. Let those best able pay the greatest share of the fearful cost. Let those who will coin the blood of our young boys into gold pay the bills. Surely that is fair and equitable.

It does not require a great deal of courage to vote to declare a war that will be fought and paid for by others. The Civil War was fought and won by young boys from the farms and shops. The slackers staid at home and made fortunes. I was greatly impressed with the patriotic and generous offer of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] who unselfishly offered to furnish a cousin and a nephew for the fray. Surely, a grateful people will long remember and cherish his great sacrifice.

I am going to be perfectly frank, Mr. Speaker. I have no desire to go into the trenches of Flanders, hence I will not vote to send the son of the widow, whose only support he is, into that caldron of hell and misery. Were we threatened with invasion we would all gladly offer up to the last great sacrifice.

I am not unmindful of the fact that we have been most grievously sinned against by both the belligerent groups, but so have other neutral nations. Had we been singled out for the irreparable wrongs that have been committed against us I would have favored war long ago. But other neutral nations have suffered with us, hence we can not say that our honor is at stake. One hundred years ago personal disputes or differences were settled by duel on the field of honor. To-day one would think an individual a crazy lunatic who sought to vindicate his honor or settle such differences by the arbitrament of sword or pistol.

Thank God, the American people are not too proud to fight when they think their liberties or firesides are endangered. Neither are at stake in this controversy, hence I shall vote "no."

I realize fully what that vote will mean. I know in advance that I shall be crucified by the press, and the unthinking who want war, yet many of whom will probably rest content to let some one else do the fighting. I am resolved to do my duty as I see it, let the consequences be what they will. Whether or not I am returned to this body is merely incidental to the onward march of the Republic. In the words of Congressman KITCHIN:

> Profoundly impressed with the gravity of the situation, appreciating to the fullest the penalties which a war-mad moment will impose, my conscience and judgment, after mature thought and fervent prayer for rightful guidance, have marked out clearly the path of my duty, and I have made up my mind to walk it if I go barefoot and alone.

In this hour of stress and strife let us act deliberately. This is a most solemn occasion and worthy of our most serious and honest consideration. The effect of what we do to-day will be felt for generations to come, and I pray the Almighty God to give me wisdom that I may vote in a manner that will best serve the interests of my country.

Should it be the will of the majority that we are to unsheath the sword—and it looks very much as though this resolution will pass—I can only say, let us put forth every resource and bend every energy to prosecute it to the limit of our ability that there may be a speedy and successful peace. This is your country and mine; it will be my fight as it is yours, and we must leave no stone unturned to bring victory to our arms.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LUTHER W. MOTT,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, this war was made in Germany. It has been said that the German Government will not declare war on this country in answer to this resolution. There is no need for a declaration of war on the part of Germany. Those who doubt that the German Government declared war upon us with the sinking of the Lusitania, and the murder of hundreds of American men, women, and children may, if they choose, take the later date of February 1, 1917, when the German Government published its declaration of a ruthless submarine campaign. Since that time American vessels—neutral ships—carrying American passengers have been sunk; ships with munitions and ships without; vessels with cargoes and vessels in ballast; passenger ships going abroad and those returning home. If ever Germany investigated the character of the vessel it must have been after its sinking, as was the case with the Laconia. Was this not sufficient declaration of war upon America and American principles?

We have been discussing this war in Europe for many weary months. It has furnished an excuse for everything from tariff failures to the high cost of living. It has been the greatest source of trial to the patience of our President and State Department and a most prolific source of argument in this House. The subject has been exhausted from every viewpoint. Now, in my opinion, the time for discussion of its merits or demerits is past, and the past must be eliminated, and we should consider only the present and the future and the problems before us.

Ethically and technically we have been in this war since the first ship carrying American passengers was sunk unwarned by a German submarine. That dates back two years or more. From that time the allies have been fighting the battles of America and for the causes and ideals for which America has stood since the first meeting of the Continental Congress. During this period of strife in Europe we have been more than patient and forbearing. We have always been giving the German Government just one more chance. We have accepted every excuse and refused no reasonable explanation for the crimes that have been committed against us. We have even swallowed with good grace a few excuses and explanations that illy accorded with national pride. Our politely couched requests for justice have invariably been answered by the tearing up of another page of international law by the German Government. The only explanation we ever got was that the German Government was trying to starve England, and that because she had that purpose in view we were expected to stand idly by and watch the destruction of millions of dollars of American property and the death of hundreds of American citizens, noncombatants—women and children—through murderous Prussian U-boat methods. It may be recalled that the allies are trying to starve Germany to accomplish their ends, but they have not asked for the lives of American citizens, nor do they seek wholesale destruction of American property upon the high seas.

The conduct of the Imperial German Government and its allies has outraged established law, violated every precedent of humanity and the rights of neutral nations. The agents of those Governments have hesitated at nothing in this country. They have fostered plots against our domestic peace and tranquillity; they have schemed against the sovereignty of America, and through their propaganda of hate have sown the seed of dissention and suspicion broadcast, causing American to look at American with suspicion and neighbor upon neighbor with coldness and un-American dislike. The secret files of the State Department and the reports of agents of our Department of Justice undoubtedly would show the proof that under our freedom of democracy and under their cloak of diplomatic immunity Germany and her allies, through accredited agents, have struck time and again at American principles in violation of all rights and customs and the etiquette of nations at peace with each other.

And yet, as our President said in his splendid message on Monday, we realize that it is not the German people who are responsible for these crimes against right and reason, but the government of autocrats, who have misrepresented them. If we could send our message direct to the peoples of Germany, Austria, and Turkey, struggling under and stricken by Prussian militarism and autocracy for years, I believe the reply would come back, "The people of Germany want no war with America. We want peace with you and with all the world."

Unfortunately we can not deal with the German people in this instance. The autocracy stands between them and us, and will until they rise as the people of Russia have done and throw off their shackles and cast down their yokes of servitude and establish a new government where the people shall rule, with equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

There have been but few people in this country who have wanted war with Germany, and there are few now who would want it but for the lofty purposes of maintaining the ideals of Americanism and the principles of our country's founders. The long list of crimes of the German Government against democracy and humanity, from the devastation of Belgium and France and the enslavement of the civilian population, culminates in savage attacks upon the democracy of the world as represented by our national endeavor to maintain our rights of free and unrestricted travel upon the high seas, as is our prerogative as a neutral nation at peace with all the world. We have never yet entered into a war without high purpose. We have never sought at the outset of any war the extension of our lands or the enrichment of our Treasury. In the Revolutionary War we fought to secure freedom as a Nation and the right for men to live in freedom and equality. In the War of 1812 we fought for the freedom of the seas and the right of free travel thereupon. In the Civil War we fought to maintain the Union. Our last war we fought with Spain for the sake of humanity and to relieve the oppressed.

Once we have started, and I believe that to-day will mark the entrance of this country into the world war, in my opinion, it should not be a half-hearted attempt upon our part to lend our moral aid to the cause of democracy but one that will make itself felt. It should be one that will be productive of results and the genuine good of all the people of the German Empire and its allies. We have been spreading our doctrines of democracy into almost every nation upon earth except into the German Empire and the countries of its allies. America has been the shining light of democracy and humanity, casting its rays around the globe. Our peaceful progress, our humanity, our illustrious example has been the standard of republics since the closing days of the eighteenth century. We have striven in this instance to bring the light of reason to Germany through peaceful methods, but where treaties have become scraps of paper, international law a relic of the Dark Ages, and honor a forgotten accomplishment these methods have failed, and at last reluctantly and with sorrow we find that we must unsheath the sword that has lain in its scabbard since 1898.

As we have fought victoriously in all these wars, accomplished the fulfillment of our ideals and our high purposes, so shall we fight now in this war with all our might and main, and when our armies and our Navy return with battle flags flying and the laurels of victory borne aloft, when armed conflict ends and quiet reigns once more upon this troubled earth, let us pray God that as war was made in Germany, may an everlasting peace be made in America!

Resolutions in Regard to Migratory Birds and National Defense Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following resolutions:

Joint resolution relating to the protection of migratory birds.

Whereas there exists a convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds, the ratifications whereof were exchanged on December 7, 1916; and

Whereas there are now before the Congress Senate bill 7858 and House bill 20080, both intended to give full force and effect to said convention in this country; and

Whereas the Legislatures of the States of Minnesota and Michigan have before them resolutions memorializing Congress to promptly enact such needed legislation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate, the assembly concurring, That this Legislature of the State of Wisconsin does hereby respectfully urge upon Congress that it promptly enact Senate bill 7858 or House bill 20080 for the protection of migratory birds.

That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Wisconsin are respectfully requested to use their influence and to vote for the passage of such legislation.

That copies of this resolution, duly attested by the signatures of the presiding officers and chief clerks of the two houses, shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

EDWARD F. DUTTMAR,
President of the Senate.
LAWRENCE C. WHITTET,
Speaker of the Assembly.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

A resolution relating to the national-defense act.

Whereas under the Constitution of the United States and by effective Federal statutes, the able-bodied men of military age are constituted, those in each State the militia of that State, and together in all States the militia of the United States, and this whether enlisted for a term of years and called Organized Militia or National Guard or whether unorganized and so denominated in the law; and

Whereas power is conferred upon the Congress by the Constitution to provide for the calling forth of the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasions, and for no other purpose; and

Whereas by virtue of section 111, act of Congress, June 3, 1916, the President of the United States may, when Congress shall have authorized the use of the armed land forces of the United States for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the Regular Army, draft into the military service of the United States any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve; and

Whereas the direct effect of the foregoing provision will be to materially lessen enlistment in the National Guard whose true function is to enroll, organize, and give convenient opportunity for military training to all citizens capable of bearing arms to the end that they may efficiently perform their constitutional military duties; and

Whereas men who would freely pledge themselves to serve if their Federal service under oath is limited to the grave national emergencies enumerated in the Constitution will be deferred from such training and service if this oath also obligates them to leave business and settled occupation, on order of the President, to garrison posts, domestic or foreign, which the Regular Army is inadequate to guard, or to perform other military routine duties in times of peace; and

Whereas the extending by the same act of the term of original enlistment in the National Guard to six years, three years active and three reserve, also tends to defeat the purpose of the law if that purpose is to have subject to the President's call at any time the maximum number of trained guardsmen since those who may be thus held in reserve for the final three years will not equal in number those who will be deterred from original enlistment by thought of the contingencies of these years: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to so amend the act of June 3, 1916 (national-defense act), as to make the draft of the National Guard applicable only when in the judgment of the President, a national emergency requires the use of National Guard troops beyond the borders of the United States; be it further

Petitioned, That the said act be also amended by the Congress so that the term of original enlistment in the National Guard shall be three years of active service therein, with provision that on the expiration of his active service any guardsman physically able may, if he so elects and takes oath, enlist in the National Guard Reserve for such period as the Congress shall determine and enact; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby directed to forward a duly authenticated copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; also to the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from this State.

LAWRENCE C. WHITTET,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Resolutions Adopted by a Mass Meeting at Springfield, Mo.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. COURTNEY W. HAMLIN,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolutions:

Be it resolved by this mass meeting in Convention Hall, Springfield, Mo., of 15,000 sovereign citizens of Missouri, That we consider it our duty and privilege as citizens of these United States, regardless of nativity or political conviction, to consecrate, and we do hereby consecrate, our persons and property to the service of our Government in the protection and defense of our homes, of our rights, to continue to enjoy the blessings of a republican form of government, established and maintained by the people, for the people, and of the people, and of the rights secured to us by the laws of nations upon the high seas.

We solemnly pledge to the President, the Congress, and the Government our loyal support in the accomplishment of these sacred purposes.

To refuse to resist international crime is to be unworthy of the name American, and it is our present duty to the cause of freedom to support our Government in any sacrifice required to defend those principles of international law and order absolutely essential to civilization: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we approve in the fullest measure the action of President Wilson in severing relations with Germany and arming American vessels for their defense against ruthless and piratical attack made against them by a power seemingly gone mad with imperialism.

Exercising our sovereign right, we strongly recommend to and urge upon Congress the vital importance of taking immediate and energetic action to properly protect the honor and safety of our country, that it make prompt provision for an adequate Army, Navy, coast defense, and full equipment sufficient to enable our country to defend itself against any force which any nation may send.

We pray for peace, but we urge the Members of Congress, individually and collectively, to in the fullest measure prepare us for war, to the end that blasting ruin and shame may not come upon our Nation for the lack of proper expenditure of a few paltry dollars. What would it profit our Nation to gain the wealth of the world and lose our ideals of freedom and human rights? Be it further

Resolved, That we aid and encourage in every way possible the immediate movement of recruiting our Army and Navy to the fullest standard required by our President, and that we pledge him and our country a constant continuation of this movement so long as he shall consider it necessary.

Resolutions in Regard to War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM H. CARTER,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I wish to include some resolutions that have been recently forwarded to me.

The resolutions are as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
TOWN OF NEEDHAM.

Hon. WILLIAM H. CARTER.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: At the annual meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Needham, held on the 26th day of March, A. D. 1917, the following resolutions were voted unanimously, viz:

"Whereas the German Imperial Government has forbidden the citizens of the United States the exercise of their lawful rights on the high seas, and has without cause sacrificed American lives thereon; and

"Whereas the President has severed diplomatic relations with that Government and called Congress to take further action thereon: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the citizens of Needham, Mass., in annual town meeting assembled—

"First. That we commend the President for his action in severing diplomatic relations and in the further steps he has taken for the protection and preservation of American lives on land and sea.

"Second. That we assure the President and our Representatives in Congress of our unqualified support in any measures that they may deem necessary for the preservation of life and the vindication of national honor.

"Third. That a committee of 15 be appointed by the honorable board of selectmen, to be a committee on public safety to cooperate with the State committee on public safety in furtherance of the principles of freedom and humanity. Be it further

"Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the town records and a copy thereof forwarded to the President, Woodrow Wilson, and the Senators and Congressmen of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Attest:
[SEAL.] THOMAS SUTTON, Town Clerk.

CARPENTERS' DISTRICT COUNCIL,
Newton, Mass., March 12, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM H. CARTER,
Representative from Massachusetts, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of this council held March 8 the following resolutions were adopted, and I was instructed to forward a copy of the same to you.

Respectfully, yours, EVERETT A. MCASSEY, Secretary.

NEWTON, MASS., March 8, 1917.

Whereas the present prices of food have soared beyond the reach of the workingmen of this country; and

Whereas the manipulators of the foodstuffs in this country seem to have cornered the market so that there is no relief in sight; and

Whereas the citizens of this country deem it time that some drastic action be taken to stop this procedure at once: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this Carpenters' District Council of Newton, Mass., demand that you, as a representative of the people of the United States, put in force such laws that this state of affairs will stop at once, now, and for all time; and also be it

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, one to the governor of Massachusetts, one to the mayor of our city, one to the Attorney General of the United States, one to each of our 2 Senators, and one to each of our 16 Representatives in Congress, and also be spread on the records of this meeting.

BOARD OF SELECTMEN, ASHLAND, MASS., April 5, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM H. CARTER,
Representative in Congress.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Inclosed you will find a copy of a resolution adopted by the citizens of Ashland, Mass., in the town meeting held Wednesday, April 4, 1917.

Very truly, yours, ABRAHAM H. LINCOLN,
Clerk of Board of Selectmen.

Whereas the President of the United States of America has called Congress into extraordinary session to take action on a war resolution against the Imperial German Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the citizens of Ashland, Mass., in town meeting assembled, to hereby solemnly pledge their support to the President and Government of the United States of America to any action they deem necessary to maintain and protect the honor and safety of the American people and of the Government of the United States of America.

BROOKLINE, MASS., March 24, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM H. CARTER,
Needham Heights, Mass.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you herewith a copy of the resolutions adopted by the town meeting members of the town of Brookline at the annual meeting held on Wednesday, March 21, 1917.

Respectfully,

EDWARD W. BAKER,
Town Clerk of Brookline.

The original of the above resolutions has been sent to the President.

BROOKLINE, MASS.

At a meeting of the town-meeting members of the town of Brookline, assembled in town meeting at the town hall on Wednesday, the 21st day of March, 1917, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted by a rising vote:

"Whereas the German Imperial Government has, as President Wilson has said, forbidden to our people the exercise of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas, and in consequence the President has severed diplomatic relations with Germany and has taken steps to protect American citizens and American ships in their acknowledged rights on the high seas: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the town-meeting members of Brookline, assembled this 21st day of March, 1917—

"First. That they commend the President for his uncompromising position in the relations of the United States with Germany and in insisting that the acknowledged rights of American citizens on land and sea be respected.

"Second. That, while they have desired peace, they now recognize that a state of war practically exists; and believing that any effective resistance to Germany must necessarily involve cooperation with Great Britain, France, and their allies, they urge upon the President and Congress the immediate consideration of such action.

"Third. That they pledge to the President and Congress their unqualified loyalty and support in this crisis of our Nation's history."

Hon. WILLIAM H. CARTER.
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Weston, Mass., assembled in our anual town meeting, at this time of grave national crisis declare our allegiance to our country and our unhesitating support of the President of the United States and all other constituted authorities, in any forward step to protect American lives, American rights, and American honor. No ship that flies our flag is too small, no American's life is too humble to be denied the protection of our Government. We urge upon Congress the imperative duty of enacting at the coming session a bill for compulsory military training of the youth of our land as a safeguard of liberty. Our country needs and demands leadership, and we call upon our President and the Congress and upon our governor to take immediate and effective action to resist aggression, that unashamed we may transmit to our descendants those principles of freedom and duty for which our ancestors were proud to shed their blood. Unanimously adopted by rising vote.

Our Duty as Patriots.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DAVID A. HOLLINGSWORTH,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this resolution as a patriotic duty; I shall vote for it in the same spirit with which over a half century ago I offered my young manhood to my country on a similar call from President Lincoln, although I fully realize that our action to-day will bring more rejoicing to the descendants of old King George the Third at London than any act in the world's history since Wellington's victory at Waterloo and Napoleon's exile to St. Helena.

I shall vote for it, because our present duly elected Chief Magistrate has said to us in effect that he has exhausted all proper means of avoiding war with a nation which happily heretofore has been at peace with us during all our national life. As the President has well said, "it is a most fearful thing to lead this great peaceful people into war"; but his is the responsibility; our duty in a sense is of lesser degree—that common to all official and patriotic citizenship.

I represent a district in which there are many so-called pacifists, sturdy, rugged, conscientious believers in the peaceful doctrines of William Penn; nonresistants, if you please, and yet men and women of the type of martyrs, unafraid in any human presence. I honor them. Family traditions and teaching point me in the same direction, and yet, as in the lurid days of the Civil War, placing country above family ties or personal considerations, I must respond to duty as I understand it—answer the call of the President and stand by him in matters of immediate concern, such as the resolution we are now considering, reserving only matters of conscience and the future exercise of deliberation and judgment on doubtful governmental policies which may or may not arise after the exigencies of the hour shall have passed.

With me it is not a matter of excitement or hysteria caused by war propagandists or aroused by the more serious and burning words of the President. I do not agree in sentiment with all he has said. I have felt that absolute neutrality, even to the extent of an embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition to belligerents, was the duty of this great Republic, and I am loth to waver in judgment in this respect. Yet when I returned to Washington on the day before the meeting of this extraordinary session of Congress and found on my office desk awaiting me many friendly letters and telegrams of advice, some making demands with which I could not comply, and a few making threats which were ignored as unworthy, I at once, without hesitation or doubt, wrote to my good friends of peace the following letter, omitting only the names:

[Office of D. A. HOLLINGSWORTH, M. C., eighteenth Ohio district.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 1, 1917.

RESPECTED FRIENDS: I have your interesting, and I assure you most appreciated, letter on peace and good will among men and nations, now in imminent danger of being broken, which I regret certainly as much as anyone can, my own early training, environment, and feelings being much like your own. But I fear we are approaching a condition where not to stand by the President—elected for four years by the people and the only one we have or can have in the present emergency—would be like attempting to tie the hands and embarrass the executive branch of the Government, a thing which I feel no Member of Congress ought to be expected to do in such an hour of national peril.

This does not mean that all Members of Congress should follow him in extreme ideas for the future, such as the construction of big battleships in large numbers which can not possibly be put in commission until after present dangers are past, or in big standing armies for the future formed by compulsory military training; in other words, abandoning the ideals of the Republic for the reactionary ideals of monarchy. My hope has been that permanent peace and disarmament might come together.

And, writing on the eve of a possibly fateful to-morrow, I yet have hope that the dire extremity of war may be avoided with honor, and that America may yet be able to lead the nations upward by means other than the sword.

But if war comes, or the alternative of national dishonor be presented, my instincts, feelings, and endeavors will be with my country, its flag, and American ideals.

Very respectfully, D. A. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Resolutions Adopted by Georgia Division of the Travelers' Protective Association.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. W. OVERSTREET,
OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions adopted by Georgia Division, Travelers' Protective Association, in convention assembled, Atlanta, Ga., April 6, 1917.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions adopted by Georgia Division, Travelers' Protective Association, in convention assembled, Atlanta, Ga., April 6, 1917.

Whereas there is a possibility of an attempt to invade our country by a foreign power; and

Whereas there is no highway between Tybee Island and Savannah, Ga., therefore a road is a military necessity. There are no means at present for ingress and egress to and from Fort Screven on Tybee Island, Ga., save the Tybee Railroad, and a few well-directed shots would destroy this railroad, thus cutting off all means of escape for the occupants of Fort Screven: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we call upon our Representatives in the United States Senate and House of Representatives at Washington to use their best efforts to introduce and have passed a bill requiring the prompt construction of a road between Tybee Island and Savannah, Ga., fully prepared to meet all military demands.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM L. LA FOLLETTE,
OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reiterate the expressions I uttered when informed that my time for the discussion of the resolution plunging this country into war, had expired. "Such an important question as this we can not have any time to discuss!" Think of it! A resolution precipitating our Nation into war that will cost many thousands of precious lives and billions of dollars in money, which will have to be wrung from the people by excessive taxation, brought into the House and rushed through within 16 hours. Why this haste? Is it because the emergency is so great? I deny it. It is because we are asked to pass it on a false assumption of fact, as I stated in the remarks I made on the floor last night.

The public are asked to believe it is because of the sinking of some of our ships, with attendant loss of life, by German submarines. That is a plausible defense to make for our action to the people. It appeals to them—the destruction of the lives of our citizens! How long since we became so tender of their lives? Congress was in session when United States warships were ordered from Tampico waters, leaving a large hotel building full of our people to the tender mercies of a Mexican mob. There were many women and children among the besieged; they asked for help and succor. The ships' admiral referred their prayer to Washington and received orders that caused them to steam away under protest while the eyes of those women and children besieged there viewed the flag, whose honor our boys are now asked to give up their lives to defend, as it faded in the distance, leaving them to their fate. A foreign warship, belonging to the ruthless German race, happened to be in that harbor. It landed marines, forced back the mob, escorted those Americans, whose lives were not of sufficient importance for our Government to care for or protect, with the help of a British vessel, to our port of New Orleans. I suppose those refugees have hearts full of hate for the ruthless Germans and love for those who considered the "saluting of the flag" of much greater importance than the protection of their lives and honor.

The President came before Congress in regard to the using of the American forces in connection with the flag fiasco at Tampico, and the Congress in that case passed the resolution requested under a misapprehension of the facts, and each and every move that followed proved it. The Congress should have been entirely too astute to consider a failure to fire a salute of 21 guns in honor of our flag by an unrecognized Government of enough importance to justify the request for authority to use our armed forces against Huerta. It only veiled the greater purpose in mind. We may have accomplished that purpose; it is not given to mankind to absolutely read the minds of their fellows. We sometimes make a good guess. We only know we marched into Vera Cruz and then marched out again. The shipload of arms we stopped from unloading was taken off at another nearby port, we accomplished nothing in that respect. Huerta never saluted the flag. We killed a couple of hundred Mexicans, snuffed out the lives of 19 American boys, for what? God knows! I wish only 19 could be lost by the passage of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, it will more than likely be 1,900,000 lives, and then some. And not because of the loss of a few ships (in many cases ships under American registry, largely controlled by British capital) with the attendant loss of some American lives; we did not, in my judgment, enter Vera Cruz simply to prevent the landing of arms, that was only incidental; the proof is that the arms were landed a few days later in Porto Mexico while we had 17 warships in Mexican waters.

We are not entering this war directly because of our personal loss of property and lives through German submarines; in my judgment we are entering this war because Great Britain and her allies in this country realize that the German submarine will get England and France's backs to the wall. They are becoming depleted in both men and money. Death is claiming the former and American munition factories and American war material manufactories have largely absorbed the latter. Our capitalistic class has made huge loans to the entente allies, which they have received back in payment for the munitions and war supplies. Should the entente fail, where will "Shylock get his pound of flesh"? What are the lives of a couple of millions of Americans when such huge profits are at stake? The farm boys and the laborers in city and country usually do the fighting and dying. Why not offer them now as security for American manufacturers' profits, while they are securing additional profits and dividends at home by furnishing more war supplies? What are young lives when American honor ($) is at stake?

Mr. Speaker, there are other viewpoints and I desire to be fair. It may be that our President and his Cabinet have, in discussing this matter around the table, taken the view that with Russia as an uncertain factor, owing to revolution and the establishment of an untried Government, that might collapse as a real fighting entity at any time, and if it should it would be more probable that Germany would win the war, then the question to decide would be, Is it our place to make their quarrel ours and offer our boys to die in order that England and France may win? Will it do to allow England and France to go to the wall? Is it best for civilization and the good of the world that such an ending shall be?

The dollar mark might not have figured in their minds at all (even though it would incidentally do all I have outlined) and only high regard for the future welfare of our country and the world may have entered into their calculations. If such was the case, why was not the matter put up to Congress to decide instead of a much less, and when I consider Tampico, I am constrained to say a more trivial cause for war, advanced? Is not the law-making department of our Government worthy of the fullest confidence? If the latter proposition I have advanced is the real motive for this resolution it should be thoroughly analyzed. Are we under any obligations to either Great Britain or France that are so great as to demand this sacrifice? Has their conduct during the centuries been such as to justify so great an offering? I say it has not and I defy our historians to point out a single act in all their history that would justify this assistance. The newspapers are howling the present of a billion dollars of the peoples' money to France for the assistance rendered us during our Revolutionary War. Washington himself laid any claim for our bounty in that direction to sleep. He loved La Fayette, who made personal sacrifice; but as to the French Government under the rule of the Bourbon King Louis XVI, he expressed no sense of obligation. France was at war with England and she helped us because by so doing she helped herself; we were to the extent we held English armies in America and to the extent we killed or captured her soldiers, fighting France's battles. Washington fully realized this. France had no personal feeling for America, nor sympathy with her desire for freedom. English history is too well known to all our citizens to make them believe we owe her anything in the way of gratitude or gratuities.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can help England greatly, if she so desires and the American Congress is willing to make the venture, by buying from His Majesty's Government his North American possessions. We can afford to pay him a good price; I care not how high the Congress cares to go, if at all in reason. We can afford to go high. In that way we can punish Germany's warfare on us through her submarines and not put our boys into war for a quarrel not ours. For God's sake, let us pause before it is too late. If we will furnish England gold for her North American possessions that she can pay her way with she can recruit her armies from her own dependencies with which to fight her battles as she needs them. We can defer delivery of Canada until five years after the date of the consummation of the deal, not depriving England of its assistance during her present struggle, thus securing to her the sinews of war.

Mr. Speaker, I can not vote for a war involving us in a partnership abhorrent to me. In my judgment, unadvisable and inexcusable, including the placing of our boys in the trenches of Europe, with the attendant horrors.

Mr. Speaker, Woodrow Wilson, the historian and writer, has said, among other things:

> I sometimes think it is true that no people ever went to war with another people. Governments have gone to war with one another, but peoples, so far as I remember, have not.

If that sentiment he penned was true and the thought is followed to a logical conclusion, this war will not be between the German people and the people of the United States, but between the German Government, as represented by the Kaiser and the Reichstag, and the United States Government, as represented by Woodrow Wilson and the Congress of the United States, and the people of the United States and the people of Germany will not have gone to war with each other at all.

The pity of it! The people of Germany and the people of the United States have to bleed, suffer, and die for the acts of the Kaiser and the Reichstag and Wilson and the Congress! I agree with Mr. Wilson, the historian, and I, for one, decline to assume the responsibility and to help to force our people into a war not asked for nor desired by them, even though some of our people have expressed such a desire. I have not heard of the recruiting stations being overrun by those gentlemen offering themselves as a sacrifice. I have not heard of members of the chambers of commerce and boards of trade (nor of their sons) that have passed resolutions asking Congress and the people to stand by the President and pledging their support rushing to the recruiting stations and enlisting as privates in the ranks for the trenches of Europe. Neither have I heard of any of the great meetings filled with patriotic fervor and speeches of patriotism being followed by the enlistment of either the orators or the immediate members of their families. It is easy to orate; it takes courage to fight and offer yourself to almost certain death. Surely those patriots are not waiting to be conscripted.

The flag, God bless it! To the man whose soul is attune with love for mankind and a desire for the welfare of his country it stands for one thing; to the men who view it as an emblem to wave above their cargoes of contraband of war, arms, and ammunition, picric acid and hand grenades, Missouri mules, and so forth, it is only a protection for such commerce. Love of country and compassion for mankind has no room or habitation in their minds or hearts, and the flag only means protection to their dollars and trade. Yes; use the flag and its honor as a means to lure young men to death and destruction.

They have, in the nature of things, not thought very deeply of such matters; they have not yet realized that the flag only stands for what is in the heart of each individual; they have not given thought to the fact that the flag they are to die for was, for 85 years after we became a Nation, floating over a living lie. Our famous Declaration of Independence, containing the fiction that all men were created free and equal, was a mockery and a delusion as it waved over the slave pen and blood often flowed from the bondsman's back as his master plied the lash. That flag for 85 years witnessed this great wrong and inconsistency.

I am not throwing any rocks at those who owned the slaves. The smug Yankee at the North, finding the negro unprofitable, sold him to the South, where economically he was profitable; then he complacently folded his hands, thanked God that he had become better than his neighbor and, like the Pharisee of the Bible, expected to be blessed of God. He was equally guilty with the South for the living lie, and to-day it is from him the cry goes up most insistently, "Save my profits, protect my ventures! The flag has often cloaked sin like "slavery"; now it should protect my holy commerce." Poor old flag!

Mr. Speaker, people are wont to liken the present occupant of the White House to our martyred President, Abraham Lincoln. Abraham Lincoln abhorred slavery, yet he loved his country so greatly that he said:

If I could save the Union without freeing any slaves I would do it, and if I could save it by freeing all the slaves I would do it, and if I could save it by freeing some and leaving others alone, I would also do that. What I do about slavery and the colored race I do because I believe it helps to save the Union, and what I forbear I forbear because I do not believe it would help to save the Union. * * * I shall try to correct errors when shown to be errors, and I shall adopt new views so fast as they shall appear to be true views.

The President has received great credit for having kept us out of war. He received his reelection on that slogan. I think he made his fatal mistake, either advisedly or otherwise, when he insisted on the tabling of the McLemore resolution warning our citizens against traveling on ships carrying contraband of war, arms and ammunition, the armed merchant vessels of belligerent nations. The President had already, through his Secretary of State, Mr. Lansing, transmitted to some of our representatives abroad notice that the Government was contemplating giving practically this warning to all our citizens and designated their right to so travel as a "doubtful legal right." I feel that Abraham Lincoln would have said: "If by warning our citizens to keep out of the restricted waters I could prevent our entrance into this war, I would do so, regardless of their legal rights. If warning our people that their shipping arms and ammunition or any other contraband of war to any of the belligerent nations was absolutely at their own risk of life and property would have lessened our risk of being drawn into the maelstrom, with its attendant sorrow, suffering, and death, I would do it, regardless of doubtful legal rights."

I am sure Lincoln would have given those who would have to suffer from war, who would lose their lives should we enter it, more consideration than he would have given the property rights of shippers of commodities under perilous conditions or those of our citizens who cared to travel in those waters "to receive a thrill" or for profit or pleasure.

Shall our people carry an interminable load of debt and give millions of human lives to assure their safety or right to thrills, profits, or pleasure? If the President of the United States feels that our people will long subscribe to such a doctrine why does he not trust to their patriotic fervor for the procuring of soldiers to fight for our wrongs? Why does he advocate conscription, the method of the tyrant and the autocrat who has power of life and death over his subjects? Is it because he knows his position on the question is untenable and will not bear the light of reason. Does he know it will be necessary in order to carry out his ideas and procure enough men to carry out his will and purpose—to conscribe the youth of our land. The special plea is made that conscription will tend to equalize and force all alike to serve. There never was a conscription in history that caused equality of service; there will not be now. It sounds fine! Just wait and see how it works out.

Mr. Speaker, each and every Representative or Senator who votes against this unholy partnership and the forcing of our country into this war knows the administration has power to carry out its purpose, and the measure is already as good as passed. It would have been much easier for them had they chosen to have been classed with the patriots voting for war. I myself already have a boy in the National Guard; he put in four months on the Mexican border and is subject to the trenches in Europe. My vote against war can not in any way help him. War is assured in advance of the vote. Why should not I make a fiery speech in defense of the dear old flag, vote for the war and conscription, then go home and pose as a hero, and if criticized say, "What are you kicking about? I have a son who served on the Mexican border and is now with the colors. Surely your son is no more dear to you than is mine to me."

I could easily have taken that course and received the plaudits of thousands, and in my heart always had a contempt for myself. The price was too large; being a hero came too high. If I had done that, with my feelings and belief in regard to this war, I would in reality feel myself unworthy to represent my district.

Mr. Speaker, had I known that a majority of my constituents, regardless of politics, were in favor of this war I probably could have brought myself to talk against it and to vote for it on the plea that I was carrying out their wishes and that it was my duty to do so. In that way I might to a great extent have satisfied both factions. I could not bring myself to do it. I do not know how a majority of the people of my district feel about it. I have voted to keep them from war, from the loss of their sons and the widowing of their daughters; the maiden from losing her sweetheart and the wife her husband by the horrible death of European battle fields; and I am perfectly willing to abide by the verdict of the people as to my actions. If I am alive and physically fit, I will be a candidate to succeed myself at the next election. I will give the people of my district a chance to, by their votes, show whether I have erred in judgment, lacked patriotism, or in any other way am unworthy of their suffrage, and will bow to their will if against me, not without some sorrow for respect lost and friendship severed, yet with perfect equanimity and a feeling of duty conscientiously performed, with malice toward none and charity for all.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. S. WALLACE DEMPSEY,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, those who are opposed to this resolution or hesitate as to their course must believe, or at least hope, that war with Germany can be avoided. The question is, then, whether there is foundation for such a belief or even for a hope of peace. To determine it we need only to examine briefly the cause of this war and its course.

There is substantial agreement among disinterested observers that Germany provoked and started the war, and that she did this deliberately, because she thought she had reached the limit of growth within her present boundaries, and to expand she must have more territory. Her ambition in this respect seems likely to fail, so far as regards Europe. She is steadily being driven back out of France, and at the present rate of progress by the allies she will at no very distant day lose the part she now has, and her hold on little Belgium will be loosened. The Serbian Army is again battling for its country. If Roumania is held, it must go to Bulgaria and Turkey. Germany has lost what few provincial possessions she had at the outbreak of hostilities. As regards all these countries Germany's enormous sacrifices of men and untold expenditure of money for nearly three long, weary years count for nothing.

There is, however, a land of promise to which she can and clearly does look, and that is all of the countries on this hemisphere to the south of the United States. If she can acquire control or a dominating interest in even a considerable part of this vast territory, she can expand to the extent of her wildest dreams. One readily believes what he desires, and the prospect on a superficial view is alluring. Mexico is in chaos, and Germany has strong trade connections and a vast number of people of German descent in the South American Republics.

Her intrigues against us with Mexico and Japan, carried on in our own land while we were still at peace with her, prove that Germany plans to obtain a foothold in this country to the south of us, and gives from her viewpoint the best of reasons for what would otherwise seem her inexplicable conduct toward us.

Struggling single handed against almost a world in arms, it is incredible that, for the chance of crippling England, she would have defied us by her ruthless submarine warfare and have brought into the field against her the one great neutral, with a hundred million people and untold resources. She must, as her intrigues with Mexico prove, have fixed an ambitious eye on the land to the south of us, and have recognized that to acquire any part of it she must overthrow the Monroe doctrine through a struggle with us.

On all traditions of our nearly a century and a half of existence we must maintain the Monroe doctrine. The quarrel between us is, then, one which can not be reconciled. The invasion of our rights on the sea, the slaughter of our citizens not alone without cause but in defiance both of international law and of the common rules of humanity, demand, in performance of the basic contract between a country and its citizens of protection in return for obedience and support, the ultimate resort to arms. Back of it all looms Germany's ambition to expand in the way of which stands our support of the Monroe doctrine.

War, then, is inevitable, and let it come while we can march in step with England and France and Russia and Italy, and not be deferred until their quarrels have been settled and we, unprepared, must alone confront Germany with a military training extending back through the whole history of the Empire.

Gentlemen inquire why the armed neutrality but recently proposed by the President should not be tried further. We answer because it was proposed in the hope that Germany would not act as ruthlessly as she threatened to do; that she meant to scare our commerce from the seas, not to murder and destroy if our boats had the courage to sail. Since then, too, the attempted intrigues with Mexico and Japan and the conspiracies against our industries here at home have been revealed. The situation has entirely changed, and armed neutrality has proved utterly inadequate to the crisis.

Sympathy has been expressed, too, for the youth of our land. They, however, are speaking for themselves. Harvard and Yale, our leading colleges, will, it is clear, be deserted the instant the call for recruits is given. Even the boys at the great schools, like Philipps Exeter, are drilling and ready to go.

From age to age, from time to time, wars come. The advance in civilization does not alter this rule. There comes a time in the life of a nation when in decent self-respect it must take the ultimate resort—that to arms. Such a time unhappily has now come to us. We have followed the injunction, "Because of entrance to a quarrel." Let us now remember the other part of it, "But being in, bear thyself so that the opposer may beware of thee." Let us devote ourselves to the task in hand with all our resources of men and means, so that America may emerge at the end with added dignity and prestige, with its name respected and honored throughout the world and wherever the Stars and Stripes may go.

In conclusion let me quote, for the benefit of those who have thought that war might be avoided, the words of a great German poet:

Dream ye of peaceful sway,
Dream on who dream it may,
War still is empire's word.
Peace! At the victor's sword.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JEFF: McLEMORE,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. McLEMORE. Mr. Speaker, as much as I may wish to stand by the President in all things, yet I can not, by any force of reasoning, bring myself to believe that a vote for this resolution will be right and just or that in casting such vote I will be voicing the sentiment of a majority of the people I have the honor to represent. I would not for any office within the gift of the people cast a vote contrary to my honest convictions, nor would I stultify myself by supporting that which I believe to be a violation of those American principles that were enunciated by Washington—Washington, that mighty ruler who stood for all that is good and just and who dared to do right in all things.

Mr. Speaker, had the resolution simply declared that a state of war has been thrust upon the United States by the Imperial German Government and then directed the President to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on the war, it would perhaps have received the indorsement of the American people generally. But the resolution does not stop there, Mr. Speaker. It makes the President's power absolute, and under the resolution he can send our soldiers to the trenches of the allied nations now at war with Germany, and he can employ at will the resources of the country, and by his action bring about foreign entanglements that will place upon the people of the United States a burden of taxation that in ages to come will still be a millstone around the necks of the American people—not the millionaires and favored ones, but the toiling masses, who pay the taxes and fight their country's battles.

Mr. Speaker, I am not yet ready to vote absolutism to any President, nor will I ever vote to abrogate the Monroe doctrine by forming any alliance with the warring nations of the Old World. If we engage in war with Germany we should do so as an independent nation and not as an ally of any of the European nations, whether England, France, Belgium, or Italy.

That I am not a pacifist, Mr. Speaker, is proven by the fact that I was the first Texas Congressman to come out unreservedly for preparedness, and by the further fact that I voted for every preparedness measure that came before the House of the last Congress. But in pledging myself to preparedness, Mr. Speaker, I did not pledge myself to the policy of having my country enter into foreign entanglements or to fight the wars of foreign nations.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my vote against this resolution will subject me to a storm of abuse and censure from the manufacturers of munitions of war, from financiers who make money out of war, from a Tory press, from Anglicized college professors, and from political preachers, who seem to be under the influence of Satan rather than that of the Lowly Nazarene, whom they slander by posing as His representatives. There will be good men, too, Mr. Speaker, who will differ with me on this vital question, but these will accord me that same honesty of purpose which I accord to them. But, Mr. Speaker, I can stand the abuse, the censure, and the criticism as long as I have the inner consciousness of doing that which I believe to be right. And I will also find consolation in the blessings of tender mothers and loving sisters who will thank me with silent prayers and tears of gratitude for the vote I am about to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. And one such prayer and one such tear, Mr. Speaker, will be more to me than all the abuse, the censure, and the criticism that may be heaped upon me by the war-maddened few and a tory press.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard it intimated that I was being influenced in my stand on this resolution by political affiliations—the German vote of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have received many protests from my constituents urging me to vote against this resolution, yet only a few of these protests came from those who bore German names. They came from men who bore old-fashioned American names—men who live on the rural routes and till the soil, who are their country's bulwark in time of peace and their country's hope in time of war. And I might add, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the strongest criticism I have received because of my stand on this resolution comes from one of the most prominent German citizens in Texas, a man of great influence among his fellow citizens of German extraction, and who is universally respected by all that know him.

But, Mr. Speaker, it seems inevitable that the resolution will pass, and its passage will mean a declaration of war; and once war is declared, Mr. Speaker, it is not for me as an American citizen to do otherwise than stand with my country, for, whether right or wrong, I am with my country, as were my ancestors in the War of the Revolution, in the War of 1812, and through all of the intervening years. And this, Mr. Speaker, shall be my answer to pacifist importunist as well as to those who lust for war—those who may praise me for my course or those who may censure and condemn.

Mr. Speaker, I am above everything an American—an American whose ancestry antedates the War of the American Revolution; and, being an American, it is only natural that I should stand with Washington, the greatest of all, and who warned his country against all foreign entanglements; and thus standing with Washington, I could not, Mr. Speaker, conscientiously give my vote to this most un-American measure.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. W. W. LARSEN,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, being a new Member of the House I had not intended to take any part in the discussion of the resolution pending, but the weight of responsibility is such that I can not refrain.

With love for my country, a God-fearing and patriotic interpretation of that oath of office taken five days ago, pledging my faithful support of the Constitution and a loyal defense of the country against all foreign aggression, I shall without apology or mental reservation vote for the resolution.

I trust and believe I realize the seriousness of the proposed step, but as I view the situation, the Imperial German Government has for months past been making war upon us, and we, in an effort to prevent the conflict, have exhausted patience and diplomacy. The adoption of the resolution will be a promotion of our self-defense, and war is the only safe or honorable course to pursue. This war has been thrust upon us and we will accept the gage of battle, but in doing so let it be with an abiding faith in Him who rules the destinies of all, that we shall not submit and that all we do may be for His honor and glory and for an extension of democracy, righteousness, and political freedom.

As a Nation we desire no extension of our territory or of our national rights, but we should permit no encroachment upon them; we would rather practice the peaceful pursuits of agriculture and commerce than the arts of war; we would rather be victors in peace than in arms; we are satisfied to rule ourselves and over our own affairs, without intermeddling with others, and by the help of God we shall do so.

The Imperial German Government has without just cause or provocation attempted to create internal dissension among us, to array labor against capital, the foreigner against the native, the negro against the white man and the individual against the Government; it has sought by intrigue and plot to involve this Nation with the Mexican Government and to array its people against us so as to cause an attempt at invasion of our territory and war upon us; it has by an infamous submarine-warfare policy of a madman, deaf to diplomacy, sympathy, the rights of neutrals and noncombatants, wantonly destroyed our ships engaged in commerce and conveying the products of our factories and farms to foreign ports and returning with such commodities as our necessities required, and has taken the lives of American citizens peacefully and lawfully engaged in honorable pursuits and of helpless women and innocent children without notice or warning.

The people of this Republic love peace and abhor war. Those of the district which I have the honor to represent are no exception to the rule. They are enamored with life, plying their various vocations in a sun-kissed clime made musical by the song of birds, laughing children, and lowing herds; but the fires of patriotism burn bright in every southern home, and its gallant sons can be counted upon to rally to the flag of our country with that same self-sacrificing, patriotic devotion which characterized and immortalized those brave sons of the Confederacy who followed Gordon, Jackson, and Lee. They will come in legions from the dear old Southland, from—

The hills and vales of Georgia,
Where birds in blossoms dream,
King Cotton waves his flag of white,
And golden nuggets gleam.

From—

Where the roses bloom the sweetest
For the daughters of the land,
And the spirit of patriotism
Throbs in the breast of every man.

And, in the language of Jens Grondahl, you will hear them say:

America, my country, I come at thy call;
I plight thee my troth, I give thee my all;
In peace or in war I am wed to thy weal;
I'll carry thy flag through the fire and the steel;
On sea nor on land shall it suffer disgrace;
Unsullied it floats o'er our peace-loving race;
In reverence I kneel at sweet liberty's shrine;
America, my country, command, I am thine.

The Formal Announcement of the War Being Waged Against the United States by the Imperial German Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. TOM D. McKEOWN,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, the people of my district love peace. They are engaged in the useful occupations of tilling the soil, raising cattle, and producing oil. They are a pioneer people acquainted with the hardships and dangers incident to building a prosperous Commonwealth from wild wastes and trackless prairies.

They have struggled against the devastation of the drouths and the destruction of the tornado, and are now struggling for existence under almost unbearable conditions of land titles. They are a cosmopolitan people, coming from every State in the Union and from every civilized country on the globe.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, they are hopeful people and have been patiently waiting and hoping that the Imperial German Government would cease its unlawful attacks upon our commerce and flag, and thereby escape this crisis.

They have suffered from the blockade of their cotton in the ports of this country on account of the U-boat policy of Germany; and the tenant farmers were practically ruined financially by this policy in the fall of 1914.

American lives have been destroyed, and the promise of the German Government to modify its U-boat policy toward the United States was accepted in good faith by the people of my district, a majority of whom were absolutely neutral in their feelings toward the belligerent countries. They voted in the last election for the President without regard to party affiliations, because they believed he had used every endeavor to keep the country out of war. They are ready to stand by him now, because they believe he has done everything possible to keep the country at peace, notwithstanding war has been thrust upon us without the formality of a declaration.

I take this opportunity to refute the charge made by some thoughtless, though noisy, persons, outside of this House, that the people of Oklahoma and other interior States are less patriotic than other States of the Union, and in reply to such statements I will say that Oklahoma will send as many men and pay as much war tax as any other State, according to population and wealth.

In this trying moment when I must cast my first vote in this House and upon such a momentous question, it is indeed a source of inspiration to receive patriotic messages, some of which I shall have printed here as a part of my remarks:

COALGATE, OKLA., April 21, 1917.

Hon. TOM D. McKEOWN,
Washington, D. C.:

Be it resolved by Coalgate Lodge, No. 988, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, That we stand behind the President of the United States in his determination to protect American rights and as a man are ready with unflinching patriotism to aid and assist our country in every needed peril on land or sea.

BENEVOLENT AND PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS, NO. 988, Coalgate, Okla.

ADA, OKLA., March 26, 1917.

Hon. TOM D. McKEOWN,
Washington, D. C.:

Official board, also Men's Bible Class, 50 strong, First Methodist Church, indorse the President's past action in the present crisis. We confide in your judgment and will stand by you in all future propositions.

J. L. BARRINGER,
Chairman Committee.

HOLDENVILLE, OKLA., April 2, 1917.

Hon. TOM D. McKEOWN,
Washington, D. C.:

In mass meeting here to-night Hughes County unanimously voted to indorse any action which may be taken by the President or Congress with reference to war with Germany.

G. W. SIEVER,
Chairman Mass Meeting.

WEWOKA, OKLA., April 1, 1917.

Hon. TOM D. McKEOWN,
Washington, D. C.:

Seminole County is with Wilson—peace if we may, war if we must. We hope for peace, but if war comes Seminole County will go Irish.

LUTHER HARRISON,
J. C. LILLARD,
J. S. BARHAM.

Personally I hate war and love peace. But the things I hate or the things I love are not material here to-night. The only question for me to determine is whether or not I shall support the President by voting for the resolution, which is a formal declaration of the state of facts now existing. As to the merits of the controversy between the belligerent powers I have nothing to do.

Whether England has committed wrongs against our rights upon the seas is not an issue here. But whether the course of the Imperial German Government toward the United States is in fact nothing less than war is the question to be determined. War in its simple definition is: Open hostilities between nations. And Gen. Sherman said, "War is hell." In the mind of the man who reads the record of the loss of American lives and property by the ruthless methods of the Imperial German Government, in violation of the sacred sovereignties of international law, is overwhelmingly convinced that a state of war has been thrust upon us; and this being true, I have no other alternative but to vote for the resolution and thereby declare the truth to the world, however much I regret to have the unpleasant duty to perform upon the very threshold of my entrance here, but should I hesitate or falter I would not be worthy of the constituents I represent.

In casting my vote for the resolution I am impelled by the desire to retain in this land of freedom the light of hope that shines from the eyes of the new-born babe born under the stars and stripes, where freedom and equality reign, where the boy or girl, whether blessed with riches, or whether born in absolute poverty, may rise to the highest plane of civilization. In this connection I am reminded of the lines of John Albion Andrews carried on the editorial page of one of the leading dailies of my district:

Whether right or wrong in its domestic or its foreign policy, judged by whatever standard, whether of expediency or of principle, the American citizen can recognize no social duty intervening between himself and his country. He may urge reform, but he has no right to destroy. Intrusted with the precious inheritance of liberty, endowed with the gift of participation in a popular government, the Constitution makes him at once the beneficiary and the defender of interests and institutions he can not innocently endanger; and when he becomes a traitor to his country he commits equal treason against mankind.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR B. ROUSE,
OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following letter and resolutions:

INDUSTRIAL CLUB (INC.),
Covington, Ky., April 5, 1917.

Hon. ARTHUR B. ROUSE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ROUSE: I am inclosing herewith a resolution that has been offered and unanimously passed by the board of directors of this club, and we trust that our President will grant us the privilege of being of material assistance to our country in the ways as offered in this resolution or in other kindred ways that he may see fit to designate.

The pulse of this community with every beat is for the President and his policy. This feeling is unanimous beyond the shadow of a doubt.

If there is any information that you care to give, or if there is any service that this organization could give that would be of assistance to you or the Government, if you will kindly advise us we will gladly comply with the request.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours, very sincerely,
L. B. WILSON.

Whereas the President of the United States has addressed the Congress, assembled in extraordinary session, calling its attention to various and numerous acts in contravention of the well-defined principles of international law and the inalienable rights of civilization, committed upon the high seas and elsewhere against our rights and generally against the rights of all mankiud, by the Imperial German Government, and calling upon Congress to declare that a state of war exists by virtue thereof between the Imperial German Government and the United States of America and asking Congress to take the necessary steps within its power to enforce the principles of international law and all other inalienable rights of civilization thus violated;

Whereas the Congress, in both Houses assembled, in response to the address of the President, has introduced a resolution giving to the President authority and directing him to take immediate steps to put the country in a thorough state of defense and to exert all of its power and employ all its resources to carry on war against the Imperial German Government to bring the conflict to a successful termination: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Industrial Club of Covington, by its board of directors, That it fully indorses the action of the President and Congress and agrees with the President that "to such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured," to the end that these principles may bring "On earth peace, good will toward men"; and be it further

Resolved, That we extend, through our Congressman, ARTHUR B. ROUSE, to the United States Government, the use of the Industrial Club building and its facilities for the recruiting of men to be used in this conflict and for any other kindred purposes desired; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States of America; a copy be forwarded to the Speaker of the Congress of the United States; a copy be forwarded to the President of the Senate; a copy be forwarded to ARTHUR B. ROUSE, Congressman from this district; and the original be spread upon the minutes of this organization.

Whereas our country is now facing a crisis which demands not only the undivided loyalty of all its citizens but the outspoken support of those directing the affairs of our Government as well; and

Whereas from the very nature of its organization the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks is under a peculiar obligation to help quicken the spirit of American patriotism: Therefore be it

Resolved at a regular meeting of the Covington, Ky., Lodge of Elks, No. 314, held April 4, 1917, That this lodge fully indorses the patient and determined course of our President, Woodrow Wilson, in seeking to preserve American rights by peaceful means; and, the possibilities of negotiations having been exhausted, that it firmly stands behind him in every step he has taken to maintain those rights, including the breach of diplomatic relations with Germany and his address to Congress on April 2, and pledges its loyal and active support to the President and the Congress of the United States in whatever action they may take to uphold the rights, welfare, dignity, and the honor of America; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President, the Senators from Kentucky, and the Representative from this district.

THEO. VON HORNE.
H. G. MEINERS.
GEO. E. PHILLIPS.

COVINGTON, KY., April 6, 1917.

Hon. A. B. ROUSE,
Member of the United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR:

Whereas our country is on the verge of a great crisis, upon the outcome of which depends the future welfare of our Nation; and

Whereas we approve the stand that our able President has taken and are united in our support of President Woodrow Wilson and his policies pertaining to international affairs: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Old Kentucky Lodge, No. 1359, Loyal Order of Moose, located at Covington, Ky., do hereby indorse our President and his international policy and stand firmly and solidly behind him and give him our hearty support; and be it further

Resolved, That we spread this motion upon our minutes; and be it finally

Resolved, That we send a copy of these resolutions to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, and copies to United States Senators, Hons. OLLIE JAMES and J. C. W. BECKHAM, and Hon. A. B. ROUSE, our Representative in Congress.

Fraternally,
[SEAL.] TRACY PALMER, Secretary.

Resolutions in Regard to Universal Military and Naval Training.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, favoring the establishment of universal military and naval training.

The resolutions are as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1917.

Resolutions favoring the establishment of universal military and naval training.

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in general court assembled recommend the immediate establishment by Congress of an adequate system of universal military and naval training under the direction of the National Government; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each branch of Congress, and to each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress.

In senate, adopted March 29, 1917.
In house of representatives, adopted, in concurrence, March 30, 1917.
A true copy.
Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CLIFFORD IRELAND,
OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I trust the unparalled gravity of the situation may plead pardon for the seeming presumption in a new Member of this body for attempting an expression on the subject now before the House for consideration and which is uppermost in the minds of the American people to-day.

I had no thought to speak upon this subject, and I am deeply conscious of the fact that in so doing I may be usurping a privilege not usually accorded a new Member of the House.

The occasion, however, seems to warrant the transgression, if such it be, and for only a moment do I beg your forbearance and charity in my humble effort to voice the patriotic devotion of my district.

I yield to no Member in proven loyalty and patriotism of my district. But we are a peace-loving people and desire peace above all else. However, we desire peace only with honor to this Nation and its people and without humiliation to our Government and without the degradation of our flag. And I hope and trust that we are loyal enough in patriotic resolve and broad enough in scope of thought to support the Constitution, the Government, aye, the President, without heed to party lines in a crisis such as now confronts our Nation. At such a time partisanship should be submerged in patriotism. Now, if after all other efforts have failed, the price at which such peace may be attained be war, so be it. We will meet the issue squarely and without flinching.

I have heard it said to-day that 80 per cent of our people are against war. I will go further and voice my honest conviction that 99 per cent of our people are against war. I am. But the question for decision is not one of preference for or against war as a general proposition. It is a question of upholding American rights which have been violated, of supporting the chosen Chief Executive of these United States, and thus presenting a united front to the world.

War is to be adopted only as a means of protecting those American rights invaded, and as a last resort, after having exhausted all other measures available. It is an action forced upon us. Our Nation's honor and position have been imperiled; we may not question the extremes to which we have been driven. However much we may all abhor war, its misery, cruelness, the privations and sacrifices which it entails, we can not blind ourselves to the situation forced upon us. The call to colors has been sounded; no choice remains to us but to answer it and answer it unitedly.

What a lesson in preparedness this trying hour brings to us! What a sermon on failure to seize past opportunities for the performance of duty to American people! We find ourselves hurled into a world conflict without adequate measures of preparation having been taken to fortify our Nation against this day. We are forced into a position for which we are illy prepared. We take thought of the morrow only with the going down of the sun upon our action of to-day. Our condition, from a military standpoint, is alike pitiable and pitiful. We justly call ourselves the greatest nation of the earth, but immediately called upon to measure points with any European nation now in unholy conflict, we would experience difficulty in proving the facts. But it can avail nothing now to point to the fact that over two years ago and at different periods in the interim our condition and the consequence of delayed action must have been patent to our administration; that drastic measures for preparedness at such times fostered and prosecuted with determination would have fortified us against this inevitable situation and perhaps have averted it. It is also quite as futile to press the thought that inconsistencies of the past may have contributed to the precipitation of our country into its present strained relations with an European power. That is all past and may well be buried quickly. We look to the future and what may be impending for our people. We are facing a situation of the present and must meet it without regard to how we arrived. In passing this point it might be observed, however, that we who retain memories active on a period prior to November 7 last may, if we listen intently, distinguish a slogan, voiced in certain quarters, not in entire accord with one employed prior to that date. However, I have no desire to indulge in criticism at this time. We appreciate the exigencies of the trying situation, accord our administration conscientiousness of motives, and applaud its earnestness of purpose, and endeavor to protect American interests.

Acknowledging our present state of unpreparedness, let us from this premise proceed with caution in our deliberations. We desire with all our hearts to support the President in such a crisis, but in good conscience we may not do so unless consideration be given to the feasibility of the project demanded and thought taken of the people on whom the burden of consummation of such plan must be cast.

We are about to oppose in hostile array a nation with years of preparation; with mobilization complete; organization and training unequaled; and whose every energy is centered on the destruction of each foe with more than usual ingenuity and cunning. Compared to this we have a handful of men, only partially trained, and none properly equipped for the service that may be demanded. If in our present excitement and circumstances we have utterly failed in our best effort to make aught save an unfavorable impression on a disorganized nominal Republic on this continent, how may we hope, with no better facilities at command, to immediately prevail against a fortified world power overseas? Thus I humbly council thorough preparation before an aggressive foreign invasion be attempted and must register my protest against any other policy by voting for the Britten amendment providing against the deportation of American soldiers to European soil without further action of Congress. Any other course would result in the sacrifice of American lives without proper thought to their preservation, and to that I can not be a party. The toll of our American youth will be heavy enough at best.

All the preparation so imperative for such a contemplated conflict can be accomplished in time; with our abundant resources, in an incredibly short time. The citizenry of this country will rise to the situation.

We have, however, exercised great fortitude in the past. May we not now, with warrant and consistency, exercise discretion and moderation in our movements until we acquire the ability and means for defense? Let us move with proper regard for our own humanity. The situation does not differ greatly from that of two years ago; the hazard is increased; the arrogance of the case intensified. It is a degree of tyranny. To my mind no new principle is involved. By this I do not mean that I would temporize with the situation.

I am in no sense a pacifist either by instinct, training, or environment. Nor does my district acknowledge to the harboring of a single cowardly soul. But the life of our youth is precious to us in common with all Americans regardless of location. We will furnish our full quota and without resort to conscription. But we may not send them illy prepared and untrained.

I can hold no brief for the Imperial German Government. There has been for some time past ample ground for a declaration of hostilities such as is now offered. Violations of international law, indignities to our flag and citizens, treachery practiced within our own domain while enjoying our protection and genuine friendship, these alone offer ample provocation for action no less drastic than that considered. War is to be avoided if possible; it has not been possible to escape. As has been aptly said, we war upon Imperial Prussia, not upon the German people. I have the honor to represent a large German constituency, who are not lacking in their love for the Fatherland, and our action to-day will rend their hearts, yet will not diminish their loyalty to this the country of their adoption. They are Americans first and will not be found wanting in patriotism.

We who may have traveled through the valley of indecision in our effort to be guided aright on this question have been torn by conflicting emotions. I would accord to those who differ on this momentous question the same sincerity and honesty of conviction that I would assume to myself. To-day no one takes thought of his political future, but is actuated by motives solely in interest of his country and its welfare and to total exclusion of selfish consideration. I have a faith supreme that those opposing this resolution both in and out of Congress will be equally active with those favorable to it in their support of the Government after its passage.

There is no one within these halls less skilled in statecraft than I am, yet with all my inexperience I yield to no man in my desire for the country's good and the enjoyment of peaceful pursuits by its people. I have endeavored to gain the attitude of my district and believe I voice their sentiment. But this question is broader than any district, section, or State. It involves national action.

We can not be stampeded by the madness of the hour. Cool blood and calm reason should govern our action. Resolutions vigorous in character may be passed, without immediate ability to carry them out. We can not longer serve as an experiment station. We have been told by a most eminent authority that "armed neutrality" is impracticable. Is it not a true corollary thereto that trench warfare before troops are seasoned is suicidal in its nature? Let us safeguard our action by a provision against overzealousness. It has been said that conscription will be necessary. So long as our military operations are confined to our own shores my faith in American patriotism causes me to stoutly differ on this point at present.

Though the thought harrow our souls our conclusion must be for war and a support of the administration.

How clearly rings that first note of warning, that first cry of preparedness uttered over a century ago by the first President of our Nation:

> If we would avoid insult, we must be able to repel it; if we desire peace, it must be known that at all times we are ready for war.

The advice was never so applicable as now.

Resolutions Adopted by the Leonidas Polk Bivouac and William Henry Trousdale Camp.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM C. HOUSTON,
OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 9, 1917.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions adopted by the Leonidas Polk Bivouac and William Henry Trousdale Camp, of Tennessee.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas the American Nation is now upon the verge of war with Germany; and

Whereas Congress of the United States meets to-day to take action at this momentous crisis and is expected to declare that a state of war now exists between this Nation and Germany: Therefore be it

Resolved by Leonidas Polk Bivouac and William Henry Trousdale Camp, at regular meeting in Columbus, Tenn., That Congress be requested to sequester individual annual incomes over $25,000 and corporation and partnership earnings in excess of a reasonable profit for the purpose of war expense, and provide comforts for soldiers while serving and upon their return, and for the families of those who may not return; and be it further

Resolved, That the Tennessee delegation in Congress be, and are hereby, requested to use their best efforts to see that no great war fortunes shall be made, and then our war will be patriotic and more popular, so that it can be no longer called a rich man's war and a poor man's fight.

Be it further enacted that a copy of these resolutions be sent to each member of the Tennessee delegation in Congress.

SIMS LATTA,
President.
J. N. MERONEY,
Secretary and Adjutant.

Where Kansas Stands.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOUETT SHOUSE,
OF KANSAS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, April 11, 1917.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks I desire to incorporate certain resolutions and expressions from citizens of Kansas that have come to me within the last few days. It has been charged that the Middle West is overrun with those who advocate a policy of "peace at any price"; that the people of that section have become unpatriotic as they have grown abundantly prosperous; and that they are more concerned with high prices for their products than with the demands of patriotism. It is true that some of these people were opposed to a declaration of war with Germany—a position in which I think they were entirely mistaken. But I am happy to say that since the President and Congress have acted, since war has become an established fact, the expressions that reach me from Kansas are, almost without exception, enthusiastic in their patriotism and their loyalty and their desire to serve.

The following resolutions were adopted at a meeting of the citizens of Stafford, Kans., held on April 6:

STAFFORD, KANS., April 7, 1917.

Representative JOUETT SHOUSE,
Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions adopted by the citizens of Stafford and vicinity, State of Kansas April 6, 1917:

"Whereas, by the request of Gov. Arthur Capper, of the State of Kansas, we have met to observe loyalty day, and in this manner to express our loyalty to the President of the United States in such action as he shall take in the present national emergency: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the citizens of Stafford and vicinity hereby renew their allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and the flag of our country; and be it further

"Resolved, That we hereby pledge our support to the President and Congress in such action as they may deem essential for the protection of our country and the maintenance of its honor and integrity."

The following telegram sets forth resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the citizens of Hamilton County, Kans., held at Syracuse on April 6:

SYRACUSE, KANS., April 6, 1917.

Hon. JOUETT SHOUSE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

A mass meeting of the citizens of Hamilton County, assembled in the city hall, hereby resolve that we pledge to the Government of our country in the present crisis our unswerving loyalty and stand ready to do our part to carry to a successful conclusion the conflict on which the Nation is entering.

HENRY BLOCK.

The following telegram from the mayor of Cimarron, Kans., under date of April 1, before the President had delivered his historic message, shows the fine spirit of the people of that community:

CIMARRON, KANS., April 1, 1917.

Hon. JOUETT SHOUSE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Cimarron knows that in this crisis you will be behind the President. We will have a mass convention here April 3 and wish you could address us, but be sure our people will not forget those Representatives who demonstrate their Americanism.

J. A. EVANS, Mayor.

I also append copy of my answer, which may be of interest:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 3, 1917.

Hon. J. A. EVANS,
Cimarron, Kans.:

It is gratifying to have your telegram. Congratulate the people of Cimarron upon the meeting which they will hold to-day. I wish I might be with you to share in the enthusiasm and the patriotic fervor which should characterize every true American in this crisis. It is no time for divided counsels. All of us must stand solidly and unflinchingly behind our President.

JOUETT SHOUSE.

Yesterday I received a letter from one of the leading men of Kansas in which he tells of the reception of the President's message. This man, Judge F. C. Price, of Ashland, is a lifelong Republican, and, in my judgment, the ablest member of his party in our State. He was for years a district judge, and for the past nine sessions has been the dominant figure of the Kansas State Senate. I take the liberty of quoting a paragraph from his letter:

The President's address to Congress was received with great enthusiasm all over Kansas, and the people are united and determined, and may be counted on to a man in any emergency that may arise. They believe the cause is a just one, and their patriotism is aroused as never before within my memory. We are all proud to note that Congress is giving the administration a free hand. There are no politicians in Kansas now; they are all patriots.

In the same mail is another letter from a distinguished and able Kansan, likewise an uncompromising Republican, likewise a power for years in the State senate, and one of the most brilliant legal minds of the West. He is Hon. F. Dumont Smith, of Hutchinson. He so correctly and properly interprets the spirit of the people of my State that I have secured by wire his permission to insert his letter in full. It is as follows:

HUTCHINSON, KANS., April 7, 1917.

Hon. JOUETT SHOUSE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JOUETT: I had the pleasure of seeing Mrs. Shouse in Larned Monday, and when I told her that I was now a Wilson man she wanted me to wire you, which I failed to do, but it may interest you that in a speech at Stafford yesterday afternoon I publicly declared that Mr. Wilson is now my President as much as the President of the Democratic Party, and I said further that no Democrat from Key West to Puget Sound could possibly be any prouder of him than I am at the present time, and it surely made a hit.

For a standpat Republican like me, that fought him as bitterly as I did last fall, this is going some, is it not? And it simply shows the revulsion of the sentiment here in Kansas. There are no Republicans and no Democrats, simply Americans and a few pacifists, who are growing fewer all the time. Make no mistake, Arthur Capper and the Capital do not represent the sentiment of Kansas. Kansas is as strong for war to-day as New York, and your district particularly so. Of course there are a few Germans who are quiet and sullen, but they do not open their heads.

Mr. Wilson made clear for the first time in his message the object and purpose of this war and why we are into it. It seems to me that that message boiled down—that is, the main parts of it—ought to be sent to every citizen in America. It will go down in history with Washington's Farewell Address, John Quincy Adams's draft of the Monroe doctrine, and Lincoln's inaugural.

I may add that Eustace holds the same attitude as strongly as I do.

Sincerely, yours,

F. DUMONT SMITH.

Here is a heartening telegram that has come from an influential Kansas farmer, which shows that the farmers of Kansas stand solidly behind the flag:

LEWIS, KANS., April 8, 1917.

Hon. JOUETT SHOUSE,
Washington, D. C.:

Practically all our people are with you and the President with our resources and influence in defending American ideals. We heartily approve of your support of the administration and pledge our loyalty almost to a man.

JAMES F. MALIN.

The Elks' Lodge at Great Bend, Kans., has in its membership a number of German-Americans, but in the passage of the following resolutions it proved itself all American:

GREAT BEND, KANS., April 4, 1917.

MEMBERS OF KANSAS DELEGATION,
Care Hon. Jouett Shouse, Washington, D. C.

DEAR BROTHER:

Whereas by the request of the grand exalted ruler we are met in a special session for the purpose of expressing our loyalty to the President of the United States in such action as he shall take in the present national emergency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Great Bend Lodge, No. 1127, B. P. O. Elks, hereby renews its allegiance to the Government of the United States of America and the flag of our country; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby pledge our support to the President and Congress in such action as they may deem essential for the protection of our country and the maintenance of its honor and intergity.

CHAS. LISCHESKY, Exalted Ruler.
STANLEY HILL, Secretary.

The following letter comes from the Panhandle Teachers' Association, assembled at Liberal, Kans., composed of both men and women and signed by a woman officer:

LIBERAL, KANS., April 2, 1917.

HON. JOUETT SHOUSE,
National Representative of Seventh Congressional District of Kansas, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: The Panhandle Teachers' Association, assembled, declares its unfaltering faith in your judgment and ability to handle the affairs of state in this impending crisis, and shall support you and your policies to the last extreme.

LOUISE A. WILSON, Secretary.

The following telegram has just reached me embodying resolutions passed by the Chamber of Commerce of Topeka, Kans.:

TOPEKA, KANS., April 10, 1917.

HON. JOUETT SHOUSE.
House of Representatives, Washington:

Resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce, Topeka, Kans., April 10:

"Whereas the Government of the United States has declared that a state of war exists, a war not of our own choosing but rendered necessary by the arrogant, illegal, and inhuman course of the Imperial German Government; and

"Whereas it is imperative that this country prepare to defend itself and to protect its citizens on both land and sea, as well as to promote the principle of universal democracy: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the members of the Chamber of Commerce of Topeka hereby unhesitatingly and unequivocally indorse and commend the action taken by the President and Congress of the United States against the Imperial German Government and that we pledge ourselves to uphold and maintain this action to whatever extent is demanded of us; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the necessity of immediate legislation necessary to carry the war in which we are now engaged to a successful conclusion, and also the passage of whatever laws may seem necessary to provide for universal military training, not with a view of becoming in any sense a military nation but that we may be placed in a position to defend ourselves at all times against the aggressions of any and all enemies; and be it further

"Resolved, That we earnestly pledge ourselves to the support of the President in his recommendation for raising the armed forces necessary for this war by the application of the principle of general liability for service under the plan as proposed by the General Staff, and we believe that any attempt to rely upon the volunteer system in this great emergency would be productive of injustice and inefficiency and might result in grave peril to this Nation; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the Topeka Chamber of Commerce be, and hereby is, instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States and to each Member of the upper and lower Houses of Congress from the State of Kansas."

J. WILL KELLEY,
Secretary Topeka Chamber of Commerce.

It would seem, Mr. Speaker, that such expressions as these leave no doubt as to the attitude of Kansas in the great war crisis in which we are involved. Kansas men, Kansas money, Kansas food products, Kansas brains, Kansas ingenuity will be tendered to our Government without stint, and within the confines of Kansas there will be no room for those who would attempt to incite sedition or harbor treason.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAN V. STEPHENS,

OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the President has made up the case of the United States against the Imperial German Government in his message delivered to Congress yesterday. He charges the German Government with violating its pledged word to the United States; with destroying our ships of commerce and murdering our sailors and innocent noncombatant men, women, and children; with sinking hospital ships on errands of mercy that the Government of Germany itself had provided with safe-conducts; in short, with making war against mankind; and asks that this Congress declare that the acts of the German Government are acts of war against the United States, and that provisions be made at once to prosecute the war thus thrust upon us with a view of bringing the German Government to terms.

The case is a strong one. There is no dispute among us about the facts upon which the case rests. Therefore the question is simple enough. Shall the Congress adopt the recommendations of the President, which are in line with the traditions of our country, or, by our voting down this resolution, in effect accept the policy of ruthless and inhuman warfare now waged on our people by the German Government? Whatever we may say about it, in the last analysis we must either adopt the President's course or by our refusal accept the Kaiser's course. There is no middle ground.

I abhor war. It is a resort to the methods of the beasts of the field. It is most repugnant to me, but when I am compelled to take a choice between the doctrines of liberty and humanity, as outlined by the President and fought for by our forefathers, or accept the doctrines of ruthless and murderous warfare of the only autocratic power left in Europe, I unhesitatingly take my place with the President. No one has been more opposed to war than I have, but we have no choice in the matter. War has been thrust upon us, and there is nothing left to us but fight for our lives and the sacred rights of our people.

Let us examine the President's recommendations. Are they in line with the traditions of our country? The Declaration of Independence was the basis of the first government made by free men for themselves in this world, and they earned the right to make it with their blood. It is our Government and it was consecrated to freedom and humanity. It was born because our forefathers refused to be taxed by a government across the seas in which they had no voice. When the lovers of liberty talked about refusing to pay the small tax Great Britain wanted to collect, they knew it meant war. There were men among them then who said the tax was not worth fighting about. They measured up the blood that would be spilled if war was waged and set it against a small tax on our shipping and thereby settled the matter in their own minds. But not so with the red-blooded men who loved their liberty. No government could tax them without their having a voice in it. The difference between the doctrines of the tories and patriots involved the difference between free men and slaves, and had the arguments of those who would rather pay the odious tax than fight prevailed free America would never have raised her head to gladden the hearts of oppressed peoples the world over. It was a glorious sacrifice those patriotic backwoodsmen made for the cause of human rights, but there were those then, as now, who could not make the sacrifice. They were not willing to fight for a sacred principle, because it would require a blood sacrifice.

The difference between the doctrines of those who felt the tax was not worth fighting about and those who stood out against it is the difference between a world in blackness and despair as it then existed and a world of light and hope as it is to-day, with the last of autocratic Governments crumbling in the hands of their enslaved millions, whose eyes have never lost sight of the great beacon light of liberty—America—since the day the embattled farmers of New England took up arms against King George.

These patriotic farmers in the wilderness of Americe not only had to fight a great and despotic king, but they had also to fight those of their own brethren who loved peace so well they were willing to be enslaved for its sake. It was a wonderful struggle for liberty—a fight for a principle, and not to escape a little tax as their beloved brethren, the Tories, believed in that day. The struggle was for an ideal. A Government was established by free men for themselves. It was the only one of the kind in a world of cruelty and slavery. It was the light of liberty. It shone out weakly in a world of blackness. It grew with the years and gave hope to other men in other lands who struggled to break their shackles, with the results that one people after another broke down their despotic Governments and established republics like our own. Ours was the great experiment, and as the years went by new tests were given us.

THE WAR OF 1812 A TEST.

In 1812 England, still holding us in contempt, began to insult us by stopping our merchantmen at sea and searching them for British subjects. Under this guise, illegal as it was, the King's ships took our sailors and impressed them into the British service. We were patient, we were poor, and did not want war. There were many of our good people then who said a few ragged, worthless sailors were not worth sending the Nation to war for.

What possible good could it do to go into a bloody war for these men who were just as well off on a British ship as they were on our own? Besides that, it would plunge us into an awful debt, all for the sake of a few manufacturers and bankers who would profit by the country's suffering. It was a plausible argument, and many accepted it. But there was a great man at the helm of state, and great men in Congress, who did not lose sight of the insults to our flag and the principle of the freedom of the seas involved in the question. We had not yet taught the world that we were like busy little bees wanting to be left alone, but that no one could heave a brick into our hive in the form of insults and violation of our sovereign rights that exist on every ship flying our flag without getting stung for his pains. The result was we went to war with England for the second time for the vindication of our honor and for human rights. The soft arguments that the life of a poor sailorman was not worth going to war for was seductive, but it did not mislead the men of Congress in that day any more than will the arguments advanced to-day about this war being a dollar war mislead this Congress.

THE THIRD WAR FOR IDEALS.

Then our great Civil War gave us another test in the faith of our fathers. Human slavery was at the root of our trouble, and disunion followed for the purpose of perpetuating slavery. The subject was as usual obscured by materialism. There were plenty of men in those days who objected to the war because of its blood cost. They measured up the blood and treasure that would be spent in a civil war and set it against human slavery and a divided country, and they were convinced that the war would be useless and wicked. They also insisted that those who stood against human slavery and disunion as a principle worth fighting for were placing the dollar mark on the flag—were making war for the benefit of those who would profit by it. But those who had a clear vision of the destiny of the Nation and an understanding of the sacred principles on which it was founded were ready to follow in the footsteps of their fathers and fight for it.

The far-seeing dreamy Lincoln and the courageous men of his time never wavered in their faith that the cause was just and would ultimately prevail. The results were greater than any mortal man of that time ever dreamed. It is a shock now to even picture the spectacle of free men owning four and one-half million human slaves under our charter of liberty. Yet there were plenty of good men of that day who believed the war was a failure, just as men to-day are filled with doubt about the step we are about to take. Let them apply the principles to the case in point and go ahead. No nation ever made a mistake or spilled blood uselessly in behalf of humanity.

AN UNSELFISH WAR FOR CUBA.

We went to war for the sake of an ideal to free poor, bleeding Cuba, and lest our intentions might be misunderstood we pledged the world to make Cuba free and independent, and we did it so effectually and Cuba is so happy, prosperous, and grateful to us for the sacrifice we made that every American is glad that we were able to render these poor and oppressed people this service. This unselfish sacrifice made for the sake of humanity has brought its reward, and the little Republic of Cuba rejoices in its big brother and protector and is ready to fight for us. Even in destroying the last power of despotic Spain in America we did so with profound sympathy for the oppressed people of that Kingdom. We paid them $20,000,000 for the Philippine Islands that were being misruled by their King and are gradually teaching them self-government in order that they may become an independent people. It was a war for the sake of a principle, for humanity, and it cost us uncounted millions in money to wage it and bear the responsibility of the results that have followed. There were those materialists in that day who thought that we were making a mistake, but the heart of the Nation beat true to its traditions. When we lose this fine sentiment from our political life, then indeed will we begin to decay. There is no man in America to-day who is not proud of the fact that we wiped off the earth the two great blots of vice and crime that spread over Cuba and the Philippines, and who does not rejoice in the happiness and prosperity that has since come to the people of these islands under the protection of our strong arm?

THE WAR OF TO-DAY.

To-day we are going to war with a great autocratic Government, the German Empire, which is founded on force and not upon the consent of the people. It is one of the very few civilized governments left on earth that derives its power by force. Let us hope the splendid people of Germany, and there are no better anywhere, will emerge from this nightmare of war a free, self-governing people. Prussian militarism struck down their liberty and robbed them of their rights as free and independent people. This may, after all, be a war of liberation for the people of Germany. If it results in their liberation as it has already in the liberation of the people of Russia from the tyranny of the Czar, the war in Europe will have been justified. The sacrifice we will have to make in this war will be compensated by the self-respect we will feel in having done our duty to our country and to humanity in standing for the principles sacred to every American citizen.

Yet there are those among us who believe the ideals of our country will not suffer if we fold our hands and watch in silence and indifference while our sovereign rights under our own flag are trampled under foot; while our commerce is driven from the sea, while our poor sailors, and innocent, noncombatant men, women, and children are murdered or drowned like rats without being given a chance to escape; I say there are some who feel that these sacrifices are less objectionable than the horrors of war, but I am not among them. I can hear the cry of our sailors who live on the sea under the Stars and Stripes as they go down to death through the murderous and inhuman assaults of German submarines. This conduct of Germany involves a principle of humanity dear to every American, and I am not only willing to send my country to war in defense of human rights, but I am willing to go myself. This is the most sacred ideal of the free people of America, and countless thousands of our ancestors have laid down their lives in its defense. We can not permit this sacred heritage bought with the blood of our forefathers to decay in our own hands for want of spunk enough to resent with force, if necessary, the impudence of a European autocrat.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. A. H. VESTAL,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to address the Members, even for a few moments, on this question before the House, for the reason that I am a new Member of Congress; but I have been assured by Members from both sides of the House that there would be no impropriety in my making a few remarks, if for no other reason than the gravity of the situation before us.

I come from a great district in Indiana, a district formerly represented by a distinguished Member from the other side of this House. My situation is probably different from a majority of the Members for the reason that up until late last night I had received but very few letters and telegrams bearing upon this question, the few I did receive being about equally divided for and against the war measure. So I realize the responsibility that rests upon my shoulders in speaking for the people of that great district upon this all-important question. I have always contended that no man had a right or was worthy to represent his people in public office who did not have the courage to take his political life in his hands when great questions confronted the Nation and do the thing which he thought to be right. I realize that probably the easiest thing to do would be to run away from responsibility, but I shall not do that. I can not agree with some of the gentlemen who have spoken against this resolution, that if it were passed we would begin war with Germany.

The gentlemen may talk peace, but there is no peace. So far as the Imperial Government of Germany is concerned, the war has actually begun. Germany has already begun war against the United States by committing acts not only contrary to international law but without the pale of justice and right. By her imperial order she makes no distinction between a French or English battleship, bent upon German destruction, and a neutral American ship carrying nurses and food for the starving and dying. She has, under a recent order of the Imperial Government, mapped out a part of the open seas, hundreds of miles long and hundreds of miles wide, and declared to all nations that any ship entering within those limits, no matter what the kind, or what the character, or where the destination, would be blown to pieces without warning and without regard to human life. It is a question of either supinely disregarding our duty to protect American life and American property or of accepting the challenge and by force of arms maintaining our honor. For my part, I am not concerned so much with the kind of a government Germany may have, or any foreign nation may have—whether they be monarchies or republics does not concern me—but I am concerned, and I believe the people of the United States are concerned, with the vindication of American rights upon the high seas and the protection of American life anywhere and everywhere in the whole world.

War is horrible, and I realize the seriousness of the step we are about to take. I have asked the Supreme Ruler of the Universe to direct and guide me in my vote upon this question. I have counted the cost, and, although it may cost millions of treasure and blood, I shall support the resolution.

I do not know what you think about it, but, for myself, I believe that since the President of the United States, who is the spokesman for the people of this country in matters relating to foreign nations, has requested this action to be taken by Congress, and, since the Senate of the United States has passed this resolution almost unanimously, if we should fail to pass this resolution to-night, I believe it would greatly embarrass this Republic. A nation that fails to protect the lives of its citizens and their property has already begun to decay.

I am satisfied that there will be no division when the real test comes. I thank God that there is no geography in American manhood; that there are no sections in American patriotism. We are told by some one that it only takes a few weeks to change a New Yorker into a Hoosier or a Hoosier into a Texan, and, when the final test comes, the men from the North and the South, the East and the West, without regard to nationality or color, will all be found giving their loyal support to the United States, and with but one song upon their lips—

The Star-Spangled Banner,
Oh, long may it wave
O'er the land of the free
And the home of the brave!

An Eight-Hour Day for Women in Industry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD KEATING,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 10, 1917.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, on the first day of this session I introduced a bill establishing an eight-hour day for all women employed in mills, canneries, workshops, factories, or other manufacturing establishments situated in the United States.

In principle the bill is the same as the child-labor bill which I had the honor to introduce in this House in December, 1915, which was signed by President Wilson on September 1, 1916, and which will become effective on September 1, 1917.

The new bill proposes to set a standard for working women employed in manufacturing in the United States—an eight-hour day and a six-day week. Four States—Arizona, California, Colorado, and Washington—and the District of Columbia already have eight-hour laws for women. Many other States prohibit the employment of women in manufacturing more than 9, 10, or 11 hours in one day. Only six States have no such legislation.

It is indorsed by the National Women's Trade Union League and the National Consumers' League and many other organizations which are directing their efforts to the amelioration of the condition of the women and children who are employed in industry in this country.

Unfortunately the number of women so engaged is increasing rather than decreasing. The problem of safeguarding the health of these women is of vital importance to society. A working day limited to eight hours has been found reasonable by the universal experience of mankind and has received legal sanction from the Supreme Court of the United States when it upheld the California eight-hour law for women, a statute which covers a very wide range of industries.

To my mind, there is no question about the power of Congress to enact the suggested legislation. That matter was pretty well thrashed out when the Federal child-labor law was under discussion in this House, and I believe that the contention then made by the proponents of the legislation will be sustained by the Supreme Court whenever the question is brought before that body.

Briefly, we hold that under the commerce clause of the Constitution Congress may bar from the channels of interstate commerce any article produced under conditions which jeopardizes the public health, the public morals, the public safety, or the public welfare.

Of course, Congress must exercise this power in a reasonable way, but surely a measure designed to safeguard the physical well-being of the mothers of the land is a reasonable exercise of constitutional power.

For girls over 16 years, to whom the Federal child-labor law does not apply, this measure will afford a much-needed protection. They are to be the mothers of the future and their strength must not be sapped by excessive daily hours of toil.

As regards older women, it must be remembered that mothers of families work for wages because the normal breadwinners are disabled or are deserters or are in prison, or in thousands of cases because the wage of the man of the family is insufficient for the wife and children. The health of the mother and the welfare of the family life suffer when the daily absence of the mother is unreasonably long. The need of a short working-day for mothers is greater than for any other class of wage earners.

In general, modern manufacturing is characterized by increased strain upon the workers. Machinery is being constantly speeded up. The number of machines tended by individual workers grows larger. Processes become more and more complex. Specialization has been carried so far that the monotony of work has become extreme, requiring constant repetition of the same motions and processes. All these things hasten the onset of fatigue and require for relief the establishment of a short workday. Fatigue constitutes the most eminent danger to the health of the workers, because it undermines vitality and lays the foundations for many diseases. The shorter workday is the only remedy.

I submit the following copy of my bill in order that Members may familiarize themselves with its provisions:

A bill (H. R. 20947) to prohibit interstate and foreign commerce in certain products of female labor, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That no producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any article or commodity the product of any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, situated in the United States, in which within 30 days prior to the removal of such product therefrom for any purpose females 16 years of age and over, hereinafter referred to as females, have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one day, or more than six days in any one week: Provided, That a prosecution and conviction of a defendant for the shipment or delivery for shipment of any article or commodity under the conditions herein prohibited shall be a bar to any further prosecution against the same defendant for shipments or deliveries for shipment of any such article or commodity before the beginning of said prosecution.

SEC. 2. That the Attorney General, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor shall constitute a board to make and publish from time to time uniform rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of securing proper enforcement of this act the Secretary of Labor, or any person duly authorized by him, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time mills, canneries, workshops, factories, manufacturing establishments, and other places in which goods are produced or held for interstate or foreign commerce; and the Secretary of Labor shall have authority to employ such assistance for the purposes of this act as may from time to time be authorized by appropriation or other law.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of each district attorney to whom the Secretary of Labor shall report any violation of this act, or to whom any State factory inspector, commissioner of labor, State medical inspector, or health officer, or any other person shall present satisfactory evidence of any such violation to cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States without delay for the enforcement of the penalties in such cases herein provided.

SEC. 5. That any person who violates any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, or who violates any of the rules or regulations promulgated and published by the board constituted by section 2 of this act, or who refuses or obstructs entry or inspection authorized by section 3 of this act, shall for each offense prior to the first conviction of such person under the provisions of this act be punished by a fine of not more than $200, and shall for each offense subsequent to such conviction be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, nor less than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That no dealer shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this act for a shipment, delivery for shipment, or transportation who establishes a guaranty issued by the person by whom the goods shipped or delivered for shipment or transportation were manufactured or produced, resident in the United States, to the effect that such goods were produced or manufactured in a mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment in which within 30 days prior to the removal of such goods therefrom no females were employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one day, or more than six days in any one week; and in such event, if the guaranty contains any false statement of a material fact, the guarantor shall be amenable to prosecution and to the fine or imprisonment provided by this section for violation of the provisions of this act. Said guaranty, to afford the protection above provided, shall contain the name and address of the person giving the same.

SEC. 6. That the word "person" as used in this act shall be construed to include any individual or corporation or the members of any partnership or other unincorporated association. The term "ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce," as used in this act, means to transport or to ship or deliver for shipment from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia to or through any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia or to any foreign country; and in the case of a dealer means only to transport or to ship or deliver for shipment from the State, Territory, or district of manufacture or production.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect from and after one year from the date of its passage.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. IRA G. HERSEY,
OF MAINE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has called the Congress into extraordinary session, and in a notable message he has made very clear and plain our duty to declare war against Germany. The Senate yesterday, by an almost unanimous vote, adopted a resolution which is a formal declaration of war, and that resolution is now before the House.

"This day we fashion destiny." Gentlemen may talk about the beauties of peace and attempt to explain how they can not as a matter of conscience vote for war; but we as Representatives should not forget on this solemn occasion that we are not here to express our private opinion as to war or peace; we are here to represent the people and by our vote to give to the world the voice of the American Republic.

If I mistake not the signs of the times, if I read aright the wishes and desires of our people, they everywhere demand that this House of Representatives at once concur with the Senate in the adoption of this resolution. To defeat this declaration of freemen would be a crime against civilization and almost treason to the Republic.

On last Monday evening the President gave to us his splendid message of patriotism, and the next morning the legislature of my State, within an hour after it assembled, by a unanimous vote, approved and indorsed that message, demanded of Congress a declaration of war, and appropriated a million dollars for that war. In the face of this shall I, a Representative, attempt to delay or defeat the will of my people because I hate war and love peace?

I am, however, exceedingly grateful that personally I am in hearty accord with the views of the people of my State. I remember that it was in Maine that Germany committed against this Government her first overt act of war. As early as February 2, 1915, Werner Horn, a German military officer and spy, acting for and with the knowledge of his Government, attempted to dynamite and destroy the international railroad bridge between Maine and New Brunswick at Vanceboro, Me. This was an act of war against the United States. It was a deliberate attempt on the part of Germany to deprive us of the use, benefit, and safety of our public highways on the land, as she has deprived us of the public highways of the sea.

My people can not forget that on February 12 last the Lyman M. Law, a Maine-built ship, owned by an American citizen, manned by American sailors, loaded with box staves manufactured by Maine men from the forests of Maine, not armed, with no contraband goods, bound for a neutral port, engaged in peaceful trade, as pursued for 50 years, was torpedoed and sunk by Germany. This act of war was also without excuse, and nothing less than a premeditated attempt to sweep from the seas the commerce of the United States and to ignore and defy the rights of American citizens.

And that is not all that has stirred to earnest action the people of Maine. Only the 23d day of last month, at Fort Williams, near Portland, Maine, two spies crept into that fortification past the guards, and when discovered they shot to death the guard and in the darkness made their escape. German dynamiters are making unsafe the public highways and institutions in our land; German submarines are destroying the ships and lives of Americans on the high seas; German spies infest the land, and when discovered they shoot to kill. Is it any wonder that our people demand an immediate declaration of war?

The oft-repeated argument of gentlemen who oppose this resolution is that they can not in conscience vote to send our young men to war, and knowing that this resolution will pass they seek to amend it by keeping the boys at home. Our duty as Members of Congress is to assert the will of the people. We have no special instruction from the youth of our land. Our young men have not delegated us to exempt them from the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. The boys are more interested than we in the prompt passage of this resolution. The gray-haired men that largely compose this Congress have about completed their work; the future will hold very little for you and I. This country with all its glorious history and matchless achievements is the proud heritage of our young men. It is their privilege and desire to defend, protect, and make great among the nations this Republic of Washington and Lincoln. To the young men has been given the mighty task of perpetuating the institutions and preserving the liberties and faith of their fathers.

In the late War with Spain our boys did not ask to stay at home but they like true Americans fought our battles in foreign lands and the islands of the sea, and they willingly and gladly to-day will follow the flag if necessary to the ends of the earth.

In opposition to this resolution certain gentlemen say they are but followers of Washington who warned us against alliances with other nations, and that now to enter this war would place us on the side of England and France and other nations which are now fighting Germany. We must remember, however, that Washington warned against "entangling alliances," and nowhere did he oppose all alliances. A union of forces of those who have a common interest against a common enemy can never be an entangling alliance. Surely Washington, who gladly accepted the valuable aid of France in the dark days of the Revolution, never intended to oppose the union of freemen against a tyrannical foe. The time has come when all nations that love liberty must unite to oppose this common foe of civilization engaged in an inhuman warfare against all mankind.

As one of the Representatives of the people of this Republic I shall vote for this resolution, and after its passage I shall do all I can to support the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy in the prosecution to success of this last great war, to the end that this Nation may still remain, as it ever has been, the last best hope of the world—"the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Letter From C. W. Brown, of Cleveland, Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the record by including a very instructive letter from C. W. Brown, of Cleveland, Ohio.

The letter is as follows:

EAST CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 9, 1917.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON.

DEAR SIR: Am watching with interest the war situation in the daily papers, and there is one request I would like to make, but before making it will jot down a few statements.

This letter was not dictated by anybody else, nor is it copied from some original laid down by some one else, neither is there any peace-at-any-price organization's influence behind it.

I am not German, pro-German, English, or pro-English, but an American citizens whose ancestors came to this country in the Jamestown settlement, and they were not German.

But I am a poor man with a family to support, and am pro-poor man all the way through, all the time, and antimoney man just as emphatically as I am pro-poor man.

My idea of the thing is that the money man of this country is just as domineering and overbearing as the Kaiser or any other king in Europe ever dared or thought of being.

So I will watch with interest your work in Congress when the questions of drafting men and conscription of incomes are before the House.

I think the President ought to issue a call for volunteers first, just the same as all Presidents before him did, and then when he needs more men, if he can not get them, it is time enough to talk draft.

I am for conscription of incomes and against militarism, and my request is, I would like to see you in line with my ideas when the votes are taken on these two subjects, so that I will be able to vote for you again, as I did last time.

For I am persuaded that I will have to make these two items the pivot on which my vote and all my influence for or against you will swing if you ever run again.

Hoping this little note will at least help keep your influence on the side of the majority of poor people in the country, I am,

Yours, with respect,

C. W. BROWN,
287 Potomac Avenue, East Cleveland, Ohio.

Resolution Adopted by a Mass Meeting at Mobile, Ala.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR L. GRAY,

OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 10, 1917.

Mr. GRAY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to me I desire to have printed in the RECORD the following telegram from Mayor Pillans, of Mobile, Ala.:

MOBILE, ALA., April 5, 1917.

Hon. OSCAR L. GRAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The people of Mobile, in mass meeting assembled this date, above 5,000 strong, adopted by acclamation the following resolution:

"Whereas our country now finds itself forced, however unwillingly, into war by the aggressions of the German Government: Now, therefore

"The people of Mobile, in mass meeting assembled, hereby declare their profound and unswerving loyalty to the Government in the measures which it may take for the due and energetic conduct of the war, and urge for the protection of our homes and institutions the adoption of a system of universal military training, and the amplest provision of war materials, by the Congress of the United States."

H. PILLANS, Mayor.

The resolutions passed at that great meeting, referred to in the telegram, assert in no uncertain way the devotion, loyalty, and patriotism of the people of Mobile, the city that gave to the world Raphael Semmes and Father Ryan. The same patriotic spirit that inspired these and others burns to-day in the hearts of those who live under the same flag and love the same country.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in a very few hours a large majority of the Members of this House will vote for the resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany, and a vote for that resolution is a vote to "instruct the President to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial German Government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are to be pledged by the Congress of the United States." The responsibility of casting a vote upon this measure weighs heavily upon every Member of this body, because the consequences of that vote will directly affect the lives and fortunes of every citizen of this Republic, and no one can even approximate its ultimate effect. Never again, I hope, will such a responsibility rest with me.

Many Members of this body now present were, like myself, elected in 1914, after the beginning of the European war. At that time, as at the present, there was much difference of opinion as to the part that the United States was to play in that struggle, and apparently every effort was made by the President and the Members of Congress to preserve a studied neutrality. The difficulty of preserving this neutrality, however, and its uncertainties forced every thinking individual in this country to study the question of preparedness, and it was necessary for the United States to determine the condition and efficiency of its Army and Navy and decide if they needed to be strengthened.

On December 8, 1914, the President outlined the policy that we should pursue with reference to preparedness, and in his message, found on page 21 of the RECORD of that date, he said:

The other topic I shall take leave to mention goes deeper into the principals of our national life and policy. It is the subject of national defense.

It can not be discussed without first answering some very searching questions. It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war. What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a nation in the field, a nation of men trained to arms? Of course, we are not ready to do that, and we never shall be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested we should be prepared to do? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in time of peace.

* * * * * * *

We are at peace with the world. No one who speaks counsel based on fact or drawn from a just and candid interpretation of realities can say that there is any reason for fear that from any quarter our independence or the integrity of our territory is threatened. Dread of the power of any other nation we are incapable of. We are not jealous of rivalry in the fields of commerce or of any other peaceful achievement. We mean to live our own lives as we will; but we mean also to let live. * * * Just now we should be particularly jealous of it, because it is our dearest present hope that this character and reputation may presently, in God's providence, bring us an opportunity such as has seldom been vouchsafed any nation, the opportunity to counsel and obtain peace in the world and reconciliation and healing settlement of many a matter that has cooled and interrupted the friendship of nations. This is the time above all others when we should wish and resolve to keep our strength by self-possession, our influence by preserving our ancient principles of action.

From the first we have had a clear and settled policy with regard to military establishments. We never have had, and while we retain our present principles and ideals we never shall have, a large standing army. If asked, Are you ready to defend yourselves? We reply, Most assuredly; to the utmost. And yet we shall not turn America into a military camp. We will not ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves. There is another sort of energy in us. It will know how to declare itself and make itself effective should occasion arise. And especially when half the world is on fire we shall be careful to make our moral insurance against the spread of the conflagration very definite and certain and adequate, indeed.

Let us remind ourselves, therefore, of the only thing we can do or will do. We must depend in every time of national peril, in the future as in the past, not upon a standing army, nor yet upon a reserve army, but upon a citizenry trained and accustomed to arms. * * *

More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our policy. More than this, proposed at this time, permit me to say, would mean merely that we had lost our self-possession, that we had been thrown off our balance by a war with which we have nothing to do, whose causes can not touch us, whose very existence affords us opportunities of friendship and disinterested service which should make us ashamed of any thought of hostility or fearful preparation for trouble. * * *

But I turn away from the subject. It is not new. There is no new need to discuss it. We shall not alter our attitude toward it because some amongst us are nervous and excited. We shall easily and sensibly agree upon a policy of defense. The question has not changed its aspect because the times are not normal. Our policy will not be for an occasion. It will be conceived as a permanent and settled thing, which we will pursue at all seasons, without haste and after a fashion perfectly consistent with the peace of the world, the abiding friendship of States, and the unhampered freedom of all with whom we deal. Let there be no misconception. The country has been misinformed. We have not been negligent of national defense. We are not unmindful of the great responsibility resting upon us. We shall learn and profit by the lesson of every experience and every new circumstance, and what is needed will be adequately done.

I did not agree with the contents of that message at that time any more than I do now, although apparently, in the mind of many people, it was treason to disagree with the President of the United States. That message lulled this country to sleep, and we will pay for it and for its consequent lack of action in the flesh and blood of the manhood of this country just as soon as this House passes the resolution now before it. Practically every Member of the body on the Democratic side of this House tumultuously applauded that message exactly as the message of last Monday was applauded, and exactly as they would commend any message of any purport from that source at the present time. They did more than commend it. They adopted it in toto, and as a consequence this country criminally neglected its defense.

I am not disposed to criticize any Member of this body for their vote on this occasion or on this resolution, because I feel that every man will vote his convictions, but before some Members of this body criticize those of us who do not believe it is necessary for this country to declare war before the sun rises I want them to have a full realization of the fact that because of their votes in 1915 and 1916, when they opposed preparedness measures, this country is not equipped as it should be to conduct a war of magnitude; that it has neither trained men nor sufficient arms or munitions. And I want them and the country to know that the men who are responsible for the lack of preparedness are the ones who will be responsible for the declaration of war to-day.

During the Sixty-fourth Congress many of us were voting for legislation that would prepare us for the situation that faces us to-day, feeling that the conduct of our foreign affairs was such that war with Mexico or Germany, or both, was inevitable; and I can not see how men on this floor can to-day vote for war when for three years they have opposed every measure that would tend to prepare for it. The Navy bill for 1917 came before this House for action on June 2, 1916, on a motion to recommit, and the record of the vote is found on page 9188 of the RECORD of that day. In that motion an attempt was made to add approximately $100,000,000 to the bill for better equipment and more vessels and to increase the number of men to about 85,000, and this motion was voted down by a vote of 183 to 189, with the men in this House who now wish to put the taint of treason on everyone who disagrees with them voting against the motion.

Again, on August 15, 1916, this Navy bill came back from the Senate amended so as to include a building program that ought to have appealed to every warlike individual in the United States, and many of the men who now favor this resolution vociferously opposed the Senate amendment—51 in all.

The Army bill for 1917 came before this House for action on March 23, 1916, on the Kahn amendment, which had the effect of increasing the Army from 140,000 to 220,000. This amendment was voted down, and a record of the vote is found in the RECORD of that date on page 4729.

The 213 Members of this body who cast the negative votes on that day were simply carrying out the desires of the President as expressed in his message of December, 1914; but time has demonstrated that the President and those 213 Members who voted in the negative were wrong at that time; and when they vote for war to-day it may be that they are again mistaken, and those of us who feel that nothing would be lost by a few days' negotiations or by another attempt to persuade Germany to abandon her present submarine warfare are adopting the right course. We were right then, and the adoption of our views at that time would save the lives and prevent the suffering of many thousand American boys who will be conscripted and sent into the war without proper training.

During the years I refer to I have supported every measure and every amendment that would appropriate an increased sum for the Army or Navy or increase the number of men in military service, and took this attitude when I was practically the only Member of Congress from the Central West who did so. Many of the men who are to-day writing me that we ought to enter the European war a year ago were vigorously condemning me for voting for adequate preparation. During that time I have been a strenuous advocate of universal military training in time of peace, so that every young man in the United States would be equipped in every way to defend his country in time of war, and in that attitude I have been in opposition to the President and a majority of the Members of this House who will now vote for war.

Never again will a Member of this body or a citizen of the United States be able to express an opinion concerning the advisability of the United States entering the war or against the conscription of millions of men to send to the European trenches, because the moment this vote is cast and the resolution is adopted we must all not only acquiesce in the administration's program but insist upon the raising of an immense army and upon the appropriation of all of the money that is necessary to push the war to a successful termination.

I can not vote in the affirmative upon this resolution for many reasons. It would be as well not to express them, because in a few minutes the question as to whether we should or should not enter the war will not be debatable, and I will only say, therefore, that in my opinion the entry of the United States into the world war would not have been necessary had the proper course been taken in our negotiations with the European countries and had the same rule been applied to every country in both the Old World and the New.

Again, a vote for this resolution adopts as a whole the recommendations contained in the President's message of Monday last, where he says:

> It will involve the utmost practicable cooperation in counsel and action with the Governments now at war with Germany; and, as incident to that, the extension to those Governments of the most liberal financial credits in order that our resources may as far as possible be added to theirs.
> It will involve the organization and mobilization of all the material resources of the country to supply the materials of war.
> It will involve the immediate addition to the armed forces of the United States already provided for by law in case of war at least 500,000 men, who should, in my judgment, be chosen upon the principle of universal liability to service, and also the authorization of subsequent additional increments of equal force so soon as they may be needed and can be handled in training.
> In carrying out the measures by which these things are to be accomplished we must keep constantly in mind the wisdom of interfering as little as possible in our own preparation and in the equipment of our own military forces with the duty—for it will be a very practical duty—of supplying the nations already at war with Germany with the materials which they can obtain only from us or by our assistance. They are in the field, and we should help them in every way to be effective there.

I should vote for this measure if it involved an immediate attack only upon the unlawful practices of which we are complaining and in casting that vote would feel that the responsibility would then rest upon Germany for any further breach in its relations with the United States. I trust that everyone will realize that the entry into this war means that every individual in the United States of military age will be conscripted into the service and I shall vote for such conscription because no man should be exempted from doing his full duty, and when war is declared his full duty is to render every service that he can to his country. I think, however, that no man should be compelled to enter into military service when he does not desire to do so when others who do desire to enter it will be kept from enlisting thereby, and feel, therefore, that everyone ought to be given an opportunity to voluntarily enlist, if he desires to do so, before conscription is enforced.

I am not unmindful of the effect this vote may have upon the personal political fortunes of Members of Congress, but regardless of that effect and regardless of the change of the attitude that it may bring to many men who have previously been in accord with me, I shall cast this vote in accordance with my convictions and will not complain nor shrink from the consequences. It is the right of every man, whether he be a private citizen or Representative, to vote his convictions, and I concede that right to others and demand it for myself.

In conclusion, allow me to suggest that men of military age who disagree with me at this time will find that no Member of Congress will do more to assist in the vigorous prosecution of the war than I shall do, and instead of complaining of my attitude to-day they could render better service to their country by going to the nearest recruiting office and enlisting in the Army or Navy.

War and Neutrality.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN M. NELSON,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 11, 1917.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, under general leave to print for 10 days on the subject of war and neutrality I include the following editorial from La Follette's Magazine of March 29, 1917, as an expression of my views:

[Editorial from La Follette's Magazine.]

THE ARMED-SHIP BILL.

I.

I was opposed to the armed-ship bill. Under my oath as a Senator it was my duty to do everything legitimately within my power to defeat it, and I exercised my constitutional rights and discharged my constitutional obligations to defeat the measure, in so far as permitted by the tyrannical action of a majority. This majority, as I believe, and as I think the record plainly shows, resorted to a perversion of the rules and to the very filibustering methods which it so violently condemned in order to prevent me from obtaining the floor to speak against the bill.

1. A plain statement of the facts will, I believe, convince any unbiased mind that the majority, in dealing with the armed-ship bill and matters connected therewith, was not acting upon its own volition, but that it was itself so coerced by an arranged order of events that it was deprived of all independence of legislative judgment and legislative action.

It is well to remember that the Sixty-fourth Congress was to expire by limitation at 12 o'clock noon on the 4th day of March.

The next regular Congress would not meet until December 3—a period of more than nine months.

If Congress was to complete its work by March 4 it was absolutely necessary to report from committee the appropriation bills supplying the money necessary for the several departments of Government and to report the bills in time to give them fair consideration. This was the more necessary because of the wanton and reckless extravagance in appropriations last year and the enormous increases urged upon this Congress by the executive departments, imposing upon every Senator regardful of the interests of taxpayers already overburdened the obligation to scrutinize these measures with the greatest possible care.

But the appropriation bills were held back for some reason until it became a matter of comment among Senators and Representatives that the bills were to be jammed through in a rush at the end of the session.

As the committees of Congress are organized a few of the majority party leaders control the business and expedite it, or otherwise, at will.

2. For some unexplained reason six bills carrying an aggregate appropriation of more than $500,000,000 were so delayed by those having them in charge that they were not even placed before the Senate for consideration or attempted to be passed at all.

Six other great appropriation bills carrying an aggregate of nearly a billion dollars were so held back by those responsible for them that they were not passed and finally disposed of by the Senate until the last 48 hours of the session, while another measure had the right of way and was the all-absorbing subject for consideration.

What was the real underlying significance of such a proceeding?

Was it to create a situation where a number of the bills might escape thorough investigation and debate? For example, the naval appropriation bill will cost the people the enormous sum of $523,000,000 for the coming year. Such a bill ought to be carefully considered and thoroughly discussed. So, too, with the Army appropriation bill, carrying $278,000,000, besides a provision to force military training upon the American people. Think of attempting to drive that proposition through without opportunity for deliberation and debate!

Whatever may have been the reason for the condition of legislation described, it had been brought about. It existed and presented a situation most favorable for bringing forward a measure such as the armed-ship bill.

3. The closing days of a Congress is always a time of tremendous pressure and severe tension.

It is the one time when a measure of debatable right that has not been thoroughly considered should be kept out.

It is the one time of all others when a matter of great and momentous import to the peace of the Nation should not be thrust into the gorged and swollen flood of legislation.

And it was at this time in the last 50 hours of the life of the Sixty-fourth Congress, with pending bills appropriating more than a billion and a half of the people's money calling for the most critical examination of Congress, that the President demanded the passage of the bill which sought to invest him with powers which, if executed, must inevitably bring on war.

4. If Congress was to be called upon during that session to consider and pass upon that question fraught with its certain consequences the country has a right to know why he waited until the last hour to present the bill.

As early as the 31st day of last January Germany had declared her determination to prosecute, from and after February 1, relentless submarine warfare within the limits of her designated war zone. We had definite warning. Her purpose was unmistakable.

Within 14 days thereafter German submarines had sent two American vessels to the bottom of the sea.

And still the President waited day after day without an intimation that he would seek to secure from Congress extraordinary and unconstitutional powers to bring on war at his discretion.

Finally, in the last week of the session, the word came.

Even then his bill was not presented for consideration by committee until 68 hours before the expiration of Congress, and came before the Senate for debate less than 50 hours before adjournment, with appropriation bills carrying hundreds of millions of dollars of tax burden still to be disposed of.

5. At this point it is well for the public to understand that the right of Congress to deal with the great issue raised in a calm, thorough, and dispassionate manner, which its gravity and magnitude demanded, could have been disposed of in a word from the President.

If his bill had been accompanied with a call for Congress to meet on the 5th day of March to consider the question of arming ships and employing all means and instrumentalities in the hands of this powerful Government against Germany or any other foreign nation, there would have been no occasion for forcing immediate action upon the bill.

The appropriation bills could have been properly discussed and disposed of, and then Congress could have addressed itself to the orderly consideration of this war issue.

The Constitution makes Congress the only authoritative body to consider and determine the question of war with another nation.

One calmly reflecting upon this whole proceeding will find it difficult to discover a rational reason why the President should not, above all things, desire the presence of Congress at a time when the question of meeting violence with violence is to be determined.

II.

1. The armed-ship bill provided that the President be authorized to supply our merchant vessels "with arms and also the necessary ammunition and means of making use of them," also that the President be "authorized and empowered to employ such other instrumentalities and methods as may in his judgment and discretion seem necessary and adequate to protect such vessels." It appropriated $100,000,000 to be expended by the President "for the purpose of carrying into effect the foregoing provisions."

The bill attempted to confer upon the Executive not only the authority to place guns and gunners upon merchant ships and send them to sea with orders to fire on German submarines at sight but sought to empower the President to use any other methods and any other instrumentalities in his judgment necessary to protect such merchant ships.

2. Give validity and effect to such provisions and it removes every limitation upon his acts.

He might do whatever it pleased him to do and there could be no check or halt upon him.

He might decide to order our Navy out to convoy merchantmen loaded with arms and ammunition, or with food and clothing and shoes for the allied armies.

He might decide that our Navy should patrol the trans-Atlantic lanes through the German war zone hunting submarines in the interest of the owners of our munition ships.

He might decide that the best way to protect our merchant ships would be to land an army in Germany and destroy the Krupp works and any other manufacturing plants where Germany is constructing submarines.

Nowhere would there be lodged any power to prevent any President from doing anything his judgment dictated with the Army and Navy to protect the merchant ships of our war traders.

If the language of this bill does not seek to confer authority which would leave it in his discretion to make war, then there is no power in human language which could accomplish that result.

3. The armed-ship bill is therefore contrary to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, which expressly vests the war power in Congress—without which provision the Constitution could not have been adopted. It was again and again affirmed in the constitutional debates that it would be dangerous to the liberty of the people to place the war-making power and the control of the Army and Navy in the hands of the Executive. In breaking away from the autocratic power of King George, the first thought of the framers of the Constitution was to be clear and specific as to this vital principle. The people of Europe, we are told, were plunged suddenly and hopelessly into the awful maelstrom of war through the autocratic agencies of monarchy and secret diplomacy. But the crowned heads of Europe and their diplomatic agents exercise their absolute authority under government sanction. If the President exercises it, it is in violation of expressed provisions of the Constitution.

Our Supreme Court in Bas v. Tingy (4 Dall.) expressly decided that when Congress authorized private armed ships of the United States to defend themselves against the armed ships of France it was a declaration of war on the part of Congress, and the Court said:

"Every contention by force between two nations in external matters, under the authority of their respective governments, is not only war, but public war."

Congress can not confer upon the Executive the powers invested in it. In the case of the Nereide, reported in 9 Cranch, the Supreme Court said:

"To the legislative power alone it must belong to determine when the violence of other nations is to be met by violence."

III.

The armed-ship bill meant war. The public need not rely on opponents of the measure for proof of the fact; supporters of the bill, in the course of the debate, again and again specifically stated that it meant war.

Senator LODGE, supporter of the bill and ranking Republican member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, said:

"Mr. President, in my opinion for us to arm a vessel loaded with contraband, or to convoy a vessel loaded with contraband, would be an act of war."

Senator FALL, Republican supporter of the bill, said:

"This act of Congress, the Senate act, if adopted, is a declaration of war, a limited declaration or a declaration of limited war."

Senator BRANDEGEE, a Republican supporter of the bill, said:

"I am aware of the effect of this bill. * * * For myself, I would vote to-day * * * that 'whereas a state of war exists between the Teutonic alliance and the United States of America, the President of the United States is directed to use every means to carry that war to a successful conclusion.'"

Senator REED, an administration supporter of the bill, said:

"The proposition is to take naval guns, perhaps to take expert gunners from our warships, and put them aboard those vessels, to sail into the prohibited zone, and, if a German periscope shows itself, to fire at the periscope, and if the boat shows itself, to send a shot or shell through it. Of course we know the minute that is done by a vessel thus equipped it will be treated as though it were done by a war vessel of the United States; in other words, the act will be the beginning of war. * * *

"It seems to me that it is conceded that vessels shall be armed and shall fire upon German submarines the moment they come in sight. If that is the purpose might we not just as well plainly provide that our war vessels shall convoy our merchant vessels?"

To this Senator WALSH—next to Senator HITCHCOCK the most active advocate of the bill—replied:

"The principle is exactly the same."

And other Senators who championed this bill can be cited to the same effect.

IV.

1. The 12 Senators who opposed the grant of such indefinite unascertained and unconstitutional power as the armed-ship bill sought to confer upon the President were exercising their rights and discharging their obligations under the Constitution in the same spirit that governs the Executive in the constitutional use of his veto power, through which one man overturns the majority action of both branches of Congress.

2. As a result of their opposition, the President has convened a new Congress. The time of calling an extra session of Congress is within the President's discretion, and the Sixty-fifth Congress might have been convened immediately upon the expiration of the Sixty-fourth, making a practically continuous session, and it should be noted that while a new Congress must necessarily be reorganized, the change in the personnel of the two branches of the Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Congresses is relatively very small. There are only 62 new Members out of 435 in the House of Representatives and 16 new Senators out of 96 in the Senate. The support and opposition to the bill as developed showed plainly that it was not dealt with as a partisan question by a single Member of either House. Hence no party issue would have been raised on it when the new Congress convened.

3. In attempting to force the armed-ship bill through in the last hours of the Sixty-fourth Congress, the President made it plain that he desired to be left alone to exercise extraordinary and autocratic power affecting the destinies of this country and the world, from the 4th of March to the assembling of the new Congress the following December—a period of nine long months.

V.

The lessons of the European war and recent events on our own continent force the conclusion that there should be no haste in taking steps that lead to war, and emphasize the fact that time to reflect is an important element in averting war.

1. It was the evil system of one-man power and secret diplomacy in government that plunged the helpless peoples of Europe suddenly and hopelessly into the awful war that has been raging for the past three years with ever-increasing fury.

The one universal conviction of those who yet believe in democracy is that the first step toward the prevention of war and the establishment of permanent peace is to give the people, who must bear the brunt of war's awful burden, more to say about it. The armed-ship bill by every standard of progress and democracy faced backward, not forward.

2. We might have been at war with Mexico. No one accords the President higher commendation than I for resisting the pressure of the jingoes who would have forced us into war with our neighboring State; and I believe it reflects honor on our Nation and that we should be profoundly grateful that instead of being at war with Mexico, we can to-day congratulate our sister Republic on the peaceful election of a President by the largest vote ever cast in that country.

3. And yet, in order to avoid war, we had to submit to the sacrifice of property rights of our citizens in Mexico. Hundreds of citizens were killed. Women were outraged. President Wilson, however, even though American property and American rights were violated, very rightly, I believe, under the conditions, exercised his great influence to keep us out of war with Mexico. There are times when it is the highest national duty to submit for good reasons to the sacrifice of undisputed rights for the sake of greater service to the country and to humanity.

VI.

I am aware that many good people contend because the President has thus far succeeded in keeping us out of war, he can be intrusted with the exercise of the war power more safely than Congress. To such I would say that even if Congress could legally abdicate any of the sole powers with which it is vested by the Constitution, yet the President may err. President Wilson did err at Vera Cruz, where wholly without authority, under the guns of an American battleship, American marines were landed on foreign shores and fought a battle in which 19 American soldiers and 200 Mexicans were killed, and the city of Vera Cruz captured. Had this unauthorized act of war been committed upon the soil of Great Britain, France, Germany, or any other world power, instead of poor, weak, distracted Mexico, it would have involved us in war—and President Wilson would have taken a place in history beside President Polk, of whom Webster caustically remarked when reviewing a less flagrant act, "No one declared war; Mr. Polk made it."

VII.

The armed-ship bill was not only unconstitutional, it was in my judgment foolish and inadequate. It pleased the supporters of this bill to assume that it was only necessary to place guns on merchant ships in order to defend them successfully against submarine attack. There was no evidence before Congress that would warrant the conclusion that arming these ships would afford protection.

1. The available evidence points to the futility of such armament. The Laconia was armed, but she was torpedoed twice and sunk without a chance to fire a shot. Merchant ships of the allies are armed. Their great loss of tonnage is conclusive evidence that guns planted on merchant ships are ineffectual in warding off submarine attack. It is criminal to lure from our harbors our merchant ships with passengers, crew, and freight, to embark on a voyage fraught with such imminent peril, in the belief that they may resist attack.

2. The first question we should ask ourselves before we enter on this war with our armed merchantmen or our Navy, for the expressed purpose of maintaining our right to the seas, is what will happen to our ships? If it is so easy to clear the transatlantic lanes of submarines, why is not the British Admiralty keeping them open and free for our commerce—since our carrying trade across the Atlantic now consists of supplies for the allies—food, and ammunition? From all we can learn it appears that the British Navy is not attempting this perilous task, but is keeping inside carefully guarded harbors.

What assurance have we that we can clear the German war zone with armed merchantmen, or with battleships as convoys, or with any of the so-called "submarine chasers"?

Manifestly it is an undertaking which the British Admiralty declines for good and sufficient reason.

The American public is being woefully deceived; we are derided for hiding behind the British Navy; moving pictures portray our fleet firing on submarines that instantly go to the bottom. The daily papers are filled with stuff that would lead us to believe that we need only declare war, order out our fleet to scour the seas, and the war is ended and won.

It is admitted that the submarine discharges its torpedo with deadly accuracy at a range of 2 to 4 miles.

It is admitted that the submarine, with its hull submerged several feet below the surface and exposing nothing but its periscope, can discharge its torpedo with equal chance to achieve its purpose.

The periscope furnishes a target no larger than a sailor's cap for merchant and naval gunners to fire at.

I have the best authority for the statement that the chances of hitting a target of that size at the distance of two miles, or of damaging a submarine so submerged, would in a hundred shots be practically zero.

Would not a command to clear the seas of German submarines be analagous to the order to bring Villa out of Mexico, dead or alive? Would it not again be attempting to cope with forces beyond our power successfully to control? Are we to blindly and blunderingly enter upon an experiment such as the British Admiralty attempted at the Dardanelles, the results of which are almost sure to be disastrous?

The one overpowering motive that might justify our entering this war is that of carrying food to the hungry in Europe; but then we should go to all the starving nations, through the Baltic to the Poles, who are suffering as terribly from the effects of war as the Belgians, and getting no relief; we should force our way through the Mediterranean to the Greeks, whose poor, we are told, are subsisting on roots and grass.

But food riots in our own great cities and the ever-increasing difficulty of the masses of people to maintain the normal standard of living, because of the world's shortage and the wicked speculation of Wall Street in the necessaries of life, imperatively demand that we should not enter upon an aggressive war for humanitarian ends, much less for commercial profits in carrying munitions.

VIII.

1. The armed-ship bill asserted the purpose to maintain our neutral rights upon the high seas. If we really mean to reclaim and assert our neutral rights to the freedom of the seas by using the armed forces of the United States, then we should as a neutral nation—neutral in fact as well as in name—assert those rights against Great Britain and her allies, as well as against Germany; insist on access to the port of Bremen, as well as that of Liverpool, and hold all belligerents alike to strict accountability for unlawful interference with those rights.

It was the declared purpose of the Executive to use the authority which the armed-ship bill attempted to confer upon him to enforce our neutral rights against Germany alone. If we are to attempt to reestablish and maintain our neutral rights with the armed forces of the Government we are bound by every principle which controls in international law to assert and maintain those rights against all belligerents impartially.

2. Perhaps some consideration of the source of the clamor for arming our ships may shed light on the real motives back of that movement. The demand came chiefly from the American Line, whose tonnage is less than 5 per cent of the total tonnage of the United States engaged in foreign trade. The American Line is a subsidiary of the International Mercantile Marine Co., which in December, 1916, had 102 vessels flying the British flag, 2 flying the Belgian flag, and 8 flying the United States flag. The control of the International Mercantile Marine Co. prior to the war was in England. Whether the stock control is now English or Morgan is immaterial. J. P. Morgan is its financial head in the United States to-day, and he is the official financial agent of Great Britain in all her dealings with the people of this country.

Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, whose visits to the Navy Department to secure guns for his ships, whose interviews and movements have been featured as though he were head and front of the American merchant marine, is the active manager of these combined properties—British, Belgian, and American. When one of the American Line ships, armed with United States guns, sails out to sea, the orders to fire will be given by Mr. Franklin's master of the ship, not by the United States gunner. The English owners give orders to Franklin. The English owners take their orders from the British Admiralty. Hence we, professing to be a neutral nation, are placing American guns and American gunners practically under the order of the British Admiralty.

3. England established the first war zone, in violation of international law. On November 2, 1914, she declared the North Sea and the Atlantic Ocean from the Hebrides to Iceland a military area. She sowed the seas with submerged mines. Our Government submitted to this sweeping order, destructive of our neutral rights, without protest. Thereafter, with feeble and ineffectual protest, we submitted to her rifling our mails, prohibiting our commerce with the civilian population of Germany, although that country is not legally blockaded, restricting our commerce with other neutral countries, blacklisting our merchants, seizing our ships and impressing them into her own service, confiscating their cargoes, and with her submerged mines sinking some of our ships and destroying American lives.

IX.

I am opposed to the United States making war upon England for her ruthless violations of our neutral rights, just as I am opposed to making war upon Germany because of her relentless violation of our neutral rights.

The belligerents upon both sides are desperate to the verge of madness. Germany is bordering upon starvation. England, according to Lloyd-George, is facing actual want. France is beginning to feel the pinch of hunger. Revolution, whose first warnings were food riots, has taken place in Russia. Shall we, to maintain the technical right of travel and the pursuit of commercial profits, hurl this country into the bottomless pit of the European horror? Shall we bind up our future with foreign powers and hazard the peace of this Nation for all time by linking the destiny of the American democracy with the ever-menacing antagonisms of foreign monarchies?

If the neutral nations had been brought together early in this war, by united action, they might have compelled the belligerents to respect neutral rights, and the force of moral power of the half of the world still at peace might have aided an early termination of the war.

The United States might even now render the greatest service to itself, to humanity, and to the world by calling a conference of neutral nations, whose object would be to enforce the rights of neutrals. The mere suggestion that food and other supplies would be withheld from both sides impartially would compel all belligerents to observe the principle of freedom of the seas.

But so long as we have not risen to our opportunity and met our first manifest obligation, let us not in this later hour of a world crisis exercise less forbearance than the other neutral powers of the world—neutral powers whose example we may well follow in keeping out of war, rather than urge upon them a policy that would certainly involve them in this terrible strife.

Whatever violation of rights or commercial loss Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Spain, Central and South America may tolerate, without sacrificing their dignity or honor, the United States is strong enough and brave enough to endure for the sake of saving the world from being drawn into this dire catastrophe.

X.

For the United States to enter this war without consulting the other neutral nations is a fearful responsibility. All hope of concert of action is lost and we know not what degree of chaos may follow.

And now at this time when a crisis is approaching, when internal forces that have been gathering momentum appear to press the war to a conclusion, our intervention will confuse the issue, bring new alignments, force other neutral nations to take sides, giving to the horrible conflict now approaching a climax, a fresh intensity, increased fierceness, and prolong it indefinitely.

We are quick to believe that we shall be able to hasten the end. It is being said now on every hand, "We do not want war, but if we go in, we will go in with all our might and make a quick finish of it."

We thought when the war broke out in Europe that it would be a bloody, but a very brief conflict. The people of the world, shocked and paralyzed by the threatened cataclysm, took refuge in the hope that it could not last, not more than three months at most they said. With the modern enginery of destructive warfare, we expected to witness a crushing blow and speedy termination of the struggle. Even those trained in military science looked for a terrific death grapple that would make it the greatest and briefest war in the world's history.

As it progressed, one country after another was drawn in. That did not end it. On the contrary, it but added to the numbers and multiplied the battle fronts.

And now in the third year of the war, the stricken world finds that all these efficient instruments of woe to mankind can not accomplish a big enough slaughter to force a victory. Starvation—race starvation—starvation of men, women, and children has become the terrible, relentless, merciless issue of this war madness among civilized Christian nations.

How can we, with the history of the past three years mapped out so vividly before us, assume that the entrance of the United States upon the bloody field will stop the war?

In God's name, let us not deceive ourselves. We stand at the head of the neutral nations, outside the territory swept by this war mania. Shall we break the peace of the neutral half of the world? Shall we take on the awful responsibility of dragging in on one side and pushing in on the other, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, Spain, and it may be South America, until every quarter and corner of the earth is one battlefield?

Who shall then set limits of time or space upon its ravages?

And for what? For commercial advantage and fat profits beneficial to a limited number of our dollar-scarred patriots, for neutral rights which were surrendered to the belligerents on one side during the first three months of the European war.

For my own part, I look upon Europe as cursed with a contagious, a deadly plague, whose spread threatens to devastate the civilized world. If it were, indeed, the Black Death that was mowing down its millions of victims, instead of this more ghastly war, we should not hesitate to quarantine against it; we should keep our ships in their ports and our people at home without any hesitation whatsoever; all personal consideration, all thought of material loss or commercial inconvenience would fall before the necessity of protecting our people from being stricken with the dread disease.

I am not an extremist—I do not say there may not be supreme principles for which men must fight to the death as a last resort. But I do believe that as organized society in its slow evolution has developed more rational means of settling individual differences than brute force, so must the nations of the world ultimately find other ways of deciding their disagreements than war.

So far as the masses of men who are killing each other are concerned, the European war is a bootless conflict. The multitudes who are dying in the trenches and the millions who are suffering more agonizing pain at home do not know what it is all about. They are doing their patriotic duty as they have been told to do it, and obeying orders without daring to question.

It is unthinkable that with this awful object lesson before them the American people nevertheless to-day being stampeded into war in blind though lessness of its awful consequences. Thirty-seven million men are now under arms in Europe. The peace strength of the standing armies of Europe before the war began was less than 5,000,000. It follows that more than 32,000,000 have been drawn from the field, farms, and industrial pursuits and placed in the trenches to be mowed down at the rate of 5,000 a day. The United States, once in, will stay in to the end. Who can foretell what it means?

The United Press, from the casualty lists of the belligerent nations, estimates that more than 21,000,000 men have been killed or wounded or reported missing to date, affecting 100,000,000 noncombatants. And these brutal facts of death and mutilation only suggest the horrors of the insane conflict—women and children homeless, desecrated, starving. Already $70,000,000,000 of debt piled up. For unnumbered years to come generations of helpless people must bow their bended backs under the tax burdens entailed by this war of destruction. For long years to come all the resources that should go to the world's betterment mortgaged beyond redemption to pay for this awful holocaust Think of it, any economic loss, because of the interrupting of commerce, is but a grain of sand compared to the colossal costs of war.

Ask any plain citizen if he wants war. The involuntary answer is "We ought to know better from the lesson in Europe." How can we justify the insistence of our right to push through the mines and submarines of the war zone when that right is compared with the obligations to protect all our people here at home from the terrible effects of war?

If the silent masses who found opportunity for expression at the November election could to-day make themselves heard above this clamor for war, instigated and sustained by the money power and a subjugated press, they would, with even a stronger voice, pray God that this country be kept out of war.

Very truly, yours,

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK W. MONDELL,

OF WYOMING,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, for two years and more the specter of the European war has spread its pall of terror over the earth—to us a nightmare of frightfulness, to the nations engaged a reality of unspeakable horror.

As the titanic conflict on and under and over land and sea has extended its area of destruction we have fervently hoped and devoutly prayed that we might escape the spread of its devouring flames.

Our patience and forbearance, as our rights have been ignored and denied, as our honor and power has been mocked, our citizens subjected to humiliation, to fearful suffering and to awful death, have been the outward and visible signs of our profound and sincere longing for honorable peace.

But there is no peace. Arrogant and despotic power has decreed slaughter and death to all who venture the sea lanes where all have the right under the laws of God and man to pass unharmed. Our flag has been fired upon, our power contemptuously ignored, our citizens wickedly slain.

Amid conditions such as these continued patience and forbearance cease to be a virtue; they come to be accepted as signs of cowardice and weakness, the evidence of supine submission to insult and outrage. They no longer express the attitude of a brave and free people.

And so, regretfully but with firm and steadfast determination, the Republic draws the sword, firm in the conviction that we fight for human rights against the excesses of despotic power.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES H. SLOAN,

OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, when the war resolution was before the House for consideration I presented upon the floor my reasons for opposing that measure. The large question which concerned me was the character and extent of force to be used.

I thought that thorough preparation for our defense, authorization of the use of all the force of our Army and Navy, and our immediately available Government resources to protect the lives of our citizens and our ships, especially in the blockade zones, was all that was necessary. The other view which prevailed was that we should wage maximum war to overthrow a Government and free the German people who seemed reasonably satisfied with their chains.

My vote was dictated first by the question of right. I voted that way. I was supported by the overwhelming expression of those who communicated with me by letter, telegram, or petition. This was without having called for a single expression. While this last fact is comforting, yet it is not binding and should not be controlling.

Under our form of government, and whose oath I took, Congress alone should determine, regardless of wish of people or President, whether we should have war. The cry "Stand by the President" is all right after the declaration is finally adopted, but not before final deliverance of Congress.

It is passing strange that war is being declared against Germany alone in the interests of her people, none of whom have appealed to us for relief, while Austria is not declared against. Her unspeakable record for oppression of many small countries and distinct peoples call loudly for redress. Prominent among these is Bohemia whose history and people through centuries of heroic resistance to Austrian tyranny and persistent attachment to and defense of their language, literature, and racial rights make them one of the heroic peoples of the earth. Their voice should be heard and heeded whenever and wherever might is resorted to in the interests of mankind.

To show the state of Nebraska's minds before the war message was delivered, I submit a motion adopted by the Nebraska House of Representatives on the 31st day of March, 1917:

LINCOLN, NEBR., March 31, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES H. SLOAN,
Congressman Fourth District, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following motion has been adopted in the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, March 31, 1917:

"I beg leave to move the assurance to our great President of our unswerving loyalty to him in anything he may undertake to protect the honor and dignity of the United States in the present world crisis, but we believe the President expresses the true sentiment of the American people when, on February 3, 1917, before Congress he said:

"'We do not desire any hostile conflict with the Imperial German Government. We are the sincere friends of the German people, and earnestly desire to remain at peace with the Government which speaks for them.'

"We honor the President for up to this time keeping America out of war and its attendant consequences, and, as representatives of the people of the State of Nebraska, we earnestly hope that he will continue to do so.

"We feel that war would only increase the loss of life and property and that it is the duty of America to prevent suffering, not to join in the work of further destruction. We fear that war would not quench, but feed the fires of militarism. If we become belligerents, we cease to be neutrals and become engulfed in European politics.

"We believe that a course by our Government which will defer settlement of grievances until the present war is over will give the United States the opportunity to be the leader in the great international peace movement crying to be born. To stay out of war demands more courage, more patriotism, and more self-sacrifice than going to war, but it will give America the moral leadership for all time to come.

"I ask the foregoing as the sentiment of this house on the great question agitating the Nation.

"I move that a copy hereof be sent to our Congressman and Senators at Washington."

J. J. MCALLISTER.

Mr. McAllister moved the adoption of the motion, which was carried.

G. W. POTTS,
Chief Clerk.
GEORGE JACKSON,
Speaker.

I submit an able editorial of the Nebraska State Journal of March 31, 1917:

A QUESTION OF WAR POLICY.

As the situation is being framed in the United States, the Government will settle the war question only to face a struggle over an ensuing question. Suppose that we declare that Germany has brought about a state of war. What shall our war activities be? On this point the President will have the making of important history. The decision may be a turning point.

It has been made clear that the radical war party, which has from the beginning of the European war wanted the United States to join the allies, is determined that we shall send an army to Europe. That is what Mr. Roosevelt meant when he demanded that if we go to war we make it a real war. The moment war is declared a big movement will be launched to hasten an expedition of troops to the Continent.

That would mean the most radical possible departure from past American theories and policies. It would make us at once a party to the issues of Europe, including its territorial disputes. More conservative Americans will oppose this, preferring instead that America should limit itself to its original field as a defender of neutral rights. We should use the Navy to the fullest extent and apply our economic force in whatsoever way best promised to bring the war to a successful issue. But we should keep our troops off European soil. In fine, we should fight a purely defensive war.

The President's course thus far has pointed to the latter alternative. Should his message to Congress next week indicate that he still holds to the defensive course we may expect an immediate clamor for a European army.

I also submit an editorial from the Morning World-Herald, of Omaha, of March 30, 1917:

UNFORTUNATE SMALL NATIONS.

The Kaiser's Government is not the only one of the belligerents that wrongs and oppresses small and weak nations. Neither is militarism their only menace. The command of the seas attained by the superior naval strength of any nation is a menace potentially as great.

Washington dispatches tell of Dutch ships in English ports having been confiscated by the British Government. The dispatches say further:

"About 40 Dutch ships are now in ports belonging to Great Britain, and a fleet of 15 grain-carrying vessels is understood to be on its way from a Holland port to the United States. Many of the Dutch ships now in English ports have been detained for from six to eight weeks. The British Government for some time has been insisting that a certain percentage of Dutch merchant tonnage carry cargoes to British destinations and the Dutch Government has refused."

In other words, Holland is not to be allowed to use its own ships to carry foodstuffs to its own people exclusively, though their need is increasingly great, and it is reported that the grounds about the royal palace are plowed up to be planted in grain. Holland, willy-nilly, must serve Britain's purpose or the British Government, without the shadow of legal right, will seize the Dutch ships which she compels to put into British ports and leave the Hollanders to starve.

Now, is Holland the only victim of this governmental brigandage? A New York dispatch tells that "more than 200,000 tons of Swedish ships are being held in ports controlled by England and her allies. Among these ships is a passenger liner which left New York more than a month ago with 40 passengers on board."

The fate of Greece is known to all men. A starvation blockade has been imposed upon that unhappy country because its Government refuses to join the allies in making war on the central powers. The entente seeks to justify this course on the ground that Greece has failed to live up to a treaty requiring it to join Serbia in war against Bulgaria. But Italy was bound by a similar treaty with Germany and Austria-Hungary, and not only disregarded it but joined with the enemies of those countries in waging war upon them.

President Wilson is entirely right in his repeated declarations that one of the terms of peace should assure the freedom of the seas. It is just as fatal to be starved by a "mistress of the seas" as it is to be overrun by the armies of an imperator.

As to the general situation there can be no room for argument. Both the entente and central powers are desperate and thoroughly frightened. Both see ruin by starvation threatening them. Each is ruthlessly bent upon starving the other first. Neither will permit itself to be bound by international law nor by consideration for the rights of neutrals.

It is largely due to force of circumstances that the aggressions of one of these groups against the United States are bloody while those of the other group are not. Because aggressions against the lives of its citizens may and do become intolerable to a self-respecting State, this Republic properly has armed its ships to protect the flag they fly and the lives they carry. If our Government deems this comparatively mild policy insufficient, war itself may result. But even though we warred against the same enemy we would not thereupon become the ally of the entente powers. We would not therefore become committed to their ends and aims, nor to a sanction of all their war-time policies and methods. We would retain, let us hope, our Americanism undiluted and unadulterated, free from entanglements and liaisons, and open eyed to recognize wrong by whomsoever committed and to hate evil wherever it was found.

The war resolution introduced in the Senate and House was as follows:

Joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

Whereas the recent acts of the Imperial German Government are acts of war against the Government and people of the United States:

Resolved, etc., That the state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to take immediate steps to put the country in a thorough state of defense, and also to exert all of its power and employ all of its resources to carry on war against the Imperial German Government and to bring the conflict to a successful termination.

It was amended by the Foreign Affairs Committee to read as follows:

Joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same.

Whereas the Imperial German Government has committed repeated acts of war against the Government and the people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial German Government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States.

It will be noted that the principal change was cutting out the provision for immediate and thorough defense. Believing that the war we wage should be first defensive and after that protection of our American lives and shipping on the high seas, I presented at the earliest possible moment the following as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the resolution:

Amendment offered by Mr. SLOAN: Strike out all of the resolution, beginning on page 1, line 1, and substitute therefor the following:

"Resolved, etc., That the said state of war between the United States and certain citizens on the one hand and the Imperial German Government, brought about by the Imperial German Government, is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to take immediate steps to place the country in a thorough state of defense and enforce American rights both as to citizens and ships on land and on the high seas, and especially within the zones where said rights have heretofore been interfered with, and to that end the President is authorized to use the military and naval forces of the United States, together with all the immediately available resources of the Government."

In offering this amendment I spoke as follows:

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I will not use all the time that is allotted to me, but there are two propositions: First, in the resolution before the House there is no provision for placing this country in a state of defense, which, in my opinion, will, during the next six months, be found to be of more importance than the prosecution of a foreign war.

The second proposition is that the war to be prosecuted is restricted to meeting the injuries or attacks of the character which we have suffered. With these propositions I simply ask for a vote on the amendment. I think it expresses more fairly the wish of the American people than the prosecution of a foreign war for the regulation of European affairs; that is, the redress of our own grievances and the preparation for a defense of the United States against attacks which we may have within the next few months.

To this I add under the leave of the House that my amendment tenders the President the immediately available resources, including Treasury funds and credit of the Government, while the war resolution pledges all the resources of the country.

As time proceeds during the conflict and after it I submit to the impartial judgment of my constituents and posterity the wisdom or lack of it in the course I have taken.

Aeronautics.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MURRAY HULBERT,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 13, 1917.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, on the opening day of the present session the speaker introduced in the House, and two days later my colleague on the National Aerial Coast Patrol Commission, the Senator from Texas, Mr. SHEPPARD, introduced in another body, the Sheppard-Hulbert bill, to create a department of aeronautics, with a secretary having a portfolio in the President's Cabinet.

When one considers the tremendous strides which were taken in the development of aeronautics in the Sixty-fourth Congress it is not too much to expect that this measure will receive favorable consideration during the Sixty-fifth Congress, and it is to be hoped at the present session.

Its importance is particularly accentuated by more recent developments. At present, it is to be remembered, we have a Division of Aeronautics attached to the Signal Corps in the War Department, which has 135 machines in active use; a section of naval aeronautics attached to the Office of Naval Operations in the Navy Department with only 40 machines in active use; the establishment of another subdivision in the Treasury Department, attached to the Coast Guard Service—which in time of war, by operation of law, passes under the jurisdiction and control of the Navy Department—has been authorized, and several officers of the Coast Guard Service have been detailed to put the same into operation, but no appropriation has ever been made, and consequently no machines have ever been provided, while the fourth source of aeronautical activity is to be found in the Post Office Department, which has so far been limited to specific contracts with private individuals for experimental purposes in Alaska and over exceedingly short routes elsewhere.

The need of coordination is self-assertive. The lack of it was particularly brought home to me when, recalling that the British Government, after two years of experimentation, had found it necessary to establish an independent department, the chief of which is Lord Cowdray, who, with the title of air minister, is a member of the British cabinet. I read in a New York newspaper of April 6 a dispatch from the aerial headquarters in France, pointing out what the allies considered they most needed from us:

In army circles, it is suggested that it might be well for the United States to specialize in the war, say, in aviation and machine-gun detachments

And I wondered just how much cooperation the United States Government, with its 175 machines in active use, could afford France and Great Britain, who combined have 20,000 trained pilots, 20,000 machines, and an air personnel of 200,000 officers and men.

And recalling further the fact that the War Department and the Navy Department must be taxed to their capacity in perfecting the organization of their land and sea forces, the need of a special department for the development of our aeronautical resources was to my mind absolutely convincing.

But, thanks to the patriotism, loyalty, and devotion of public-spirited citizens actively identified with the Aero Club of America, by whose liberality, talent, and earnest and efficient cooperation very effective results have already been accomplished, its advisory committee on aeronautics, of which Alan R. Hawley, president, and Henry Woodhouse, governor, respectively, of the Aero Club of America, and the speaker are members, cooperating with the commandant of the third naval district in the organization of the naval reserve forces, have presented a report which contains such a complete analysis and such a clear and comprehensive plan of operation that I deem it a duty to present the matter for the information of the Members of this House, and insert it in the RECORD.

To further emphasize the importance of the work of this committee, I would make mention of the fact that when recently two U boats were reported off Montauk Point the committee found, upon investigation, that there was not a seaplane available, the few of them that we had there having been taken to Pensacola, Fla., for the training of men for the aerial coast patrol, which we need so badly for the protection of our shipping. Suppose the submarines reported had actually been on a mission of destruction, they could within 24 hours have sunk ships and destroyed other property valued at more than twice the cost of the establishment of a complete aerial coast defense system for the entire United States.

The success of Great Britain at sea has been greatly due to the excellent British air service, particularly since its reorganization as a separate department. Sir Edward Carson, first lord of the Admiralty, on February 21, 1917, stated that since the commencement of the war the British Navy, with the cooperation of its very efficient air service, have examined 25,874 ships. During the first 18 days of February last, 6,076 ships arrived in ports of the United Kingdom and 5,873 ships cleared from United Kingdom ports. Practically every ship that arrived was inspected as it neared port, and all of these ships were convoyed by dirigibles or aeroplanes, which have thus cooperated effectively in the defense of the British seacoast. He further pointed out that from the beginning of the war up to October 30, 1916, the British Navy had transported across the seas all of their troops now engaged in northern France and those who have returned home, and millions of tons of explosives and other material, the safety of which was insured and maintained by well-organized and thoroughly trained aeronautical squadrons.

The air service can be much more quickly and effectively developed; why wait to enlist and train 60,000 infantrymen—nearly three divisions—when 100 large battle planes, equipped with 3-inch guns, afford the same defensive power, and can be organized, equipped, and trained in a fraction of the time?

It seems to me to be of vital importance that steps be taken to carry out the plan recommended by the advisory committee on aeronautics of the third naval district in every one of the 13 continental and 2 insular naval districts, and I am satisfied that anyone who will take the trouble to examine this report with the painstaking consideration which it merits will be readily convinced.

THE AERIAL DEFENSES NEEDED FOR THE THIRD NAVAL DISTRICT—A BASIC PLAN OF AERIAL DEFENSE SUITABLE FOR THE 15 NAVAL DISTRICTS.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON AERONAUTICS, COOPERATING WITH THE COMMANDANT OF THE THIRD NAVAL DISTRICT IN THE ORGANIZATION OF THE NAVAL RESERVE FORCES.

The committee, which was appointed on March 2 at the request of the naval authorities and is cooperating with the other committees working in organizing the naval reserves of the third naval district, includes:

Chairman, nominated by Rear Admiral Usher, Mr. Alan R. Hawley, president of the Aero Club of America, member Aerial Coast Patrol Commission, Mayor Mitchel's committee of one thousand; chairman aeronautic committee National Security League, etc.

Operations and coordination: Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, chairman of the National Aerial Coast Patrol Commission, member of the board of governors Aero Club of America, and other national organizations; Eugene S. Willard, member committee on naval aeronautics, Aero Club of America, New York Yacht Club, member board of governors and chairman of New York State enrollment committee Naval Training Association of the United States; member executive committee Power Craft Association, H. P. Davison.

Enrollments: F. Trubee Davison, organizer Volunteer Aerial Coast Patrol Unit No. 1; Lewis S. Thompson, Augustus Post, Evert Jansen Wendell.

Instruction: Robert A. Lovett, son of Judge Robert Lovett, president of the Union Pacific Railroad, member of Volunteer Aerial Coast Patrol Unit No. 1, organizer of Aerial Coast Patrol Unit No. 2; F. C. G. Eden, who is in charge of the Dodge aviation training camp for college men; Congressman F. H. LA GUARDIA.

Aviation training camps: Lewis S. Thompson, in charge of the aviation training camp of Volunteer Aerial Coast Patrol Unit No. 1; W. Earl Dodge, founder of the Dodge aviation training camp for college men; Harold Irving Pratt, Harry Frank Guggenheim, Congressman MURRAY HULBERT, J. K. Knapp, jr.

Flying equipment: Henry Woodhouse, member board of governors, Aero Club of America, National Aerial Coast Patrol Commission; chairman committee on aeronautics, National Institute of Efficiency; member Mayor Mitchel's committee of one thousand on national defense, National Security League, etc.; F. Trubee Davison, W. Earl Dodge, Harold Irving Pratt, Howard S. Borden, August Belmont.

Torpedo planes, aerial guns, and explosives: Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, retired, president Naval Institute of the United States; member of committee on naval aeronautics, Aero Club of America, etc.; Frank M. Leavitt.

Naval antiaircraft defenses: Eugene S. Willard, member of Aero Club of America, New York Yacht Club, and chairman New York State enrollment committee, Naval Training Association of the United States, etc.; Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, president of the Crocker-Wheeler Co., inventor of numerous important electrical and mechanical devices, vice president Automobile Club of America, who is developing several aeronautic devices of importance; Capt. Robert A. Bartlett, who was captain of Peary's ship the Roosevelt in the North Pole expedition and of the Karluk on Stefanssen's expedition (Capt. Bartlett has been preparing an Arctic expedition which is to include aeroplanes in its equipment, but is now putting his efforts in developing the aerial defenses); Henry Woodhouse, Charles Elliott Warren.

Communications (radio signaling, etc.): John Hays Hammond, jr., member board of governors Aero Club of America; conference committee on national preparedness; treasurer and chairman Institute of Radio Engineers; Lawrence B. Sperry, aviator and inventor, expert in instruments for signaling and aerial navigation; Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, William Dubellier.

Observation balloons: Rear Admiral William N. Little, retired, member of numerous organizations.

Secretary of the committee: Henry Woodhouse.

THE NAVAL DEFENSES NEEDED FOR THE THIRD NAVAL DISTRICT—A BASIC PLAN SUITABLE FOR THE 15 NAVAL DISTRICTS.

NEW YORK, April 2, 1917.

To: Rear Admiral Nathaniel R. Usher, commandant, third naval district.

From: Alan R. Hawley, chairman advisory committee on aeronautics, cooperating with the commandant in the organization of the Naval Reserve Forces.

Subject: Aerial defenses needed for the third naval district.

AERIAL DEFENSES NEEDED FOR THE THIRD NAVAL DISTRICT (EXTENDING FROM NEW LONDON TO BARNEGAT).

(1) General.

There is at present no air service in the third naval district or in any other of the 13 naval districts. The Navy has only one aeronautic station, which is at Pensacola, Fla.; but it is only a training station, and is not adequate to train even the naval aviators needed for the aeroplane mother ships for the fleet.

The advisory committee on aeronautics, cooperating with the commandant of the third naval district, has received hundreds of applications for admission in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps, and has also received offers of the use of seaplanes from a number of patriotic men who have placed orders for machines and are about to learn to fly themselves. Mr. Rodman Wanamaker has offered the use of a large 400-horsepower air cruiser, and within 30 days it is expected that there will be about 12 single-motored flying boats operating within a radius of 50 miles of New York, these machines being owned by men who have purchased them so as to train themselves, to be available in case of national need.

Owing to the fact that the naval aviation school at Pensacola is full and can not accommodate any more students, and that there are no other naval aviation schools at which men who enlist in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps can be sent for training, no progress has been made in enlisting men in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps. But hundreds of men can be enlisted as soon as aviation training schools can be established to train them.

(2) Duties.

The air service of the third naval district has the following duties to perform. All of these have been done in the great war:

(a) To locate and assist destroyers, trawlers, and submarine chasers in capturing or destroying hostile submarines (both seaplanes and dirigibles are needed).

(b) To locate submerged mines and assist trawlers in destroying mines. (Seaplanes, dirigibles, and observation balloons needed.)

(c) Searching the coasts for submarine bases. (Seaplanes and dirigibles needed.)

(d) To convoy troop and merchant ships on coastwise trips. (Dirigibles best adapted for this work.)

(e) To patrol the coasts, holding up and inspecting doubtful ships and convoying them to examining stations. (Dirigibles best adapted for this work.)

(f) Attacking hostile ships and submarines that may show up near the coasts, with torpedoes, bombs, and guns. (Large torpedoplanes and large seaplanes mounting guns best adapted.)

(g) Protecting ships at sea and in ports against attack from hostile submarines and battleships. (Seaplanes and dirigibles needed.)

(h) Communicating to incoming ships information regarding the location of mines, submarines, and the courses to follow to avoid disasters and confusion. (Seaplanes and dirigibles needed.)

(i) Serving as the "eyes" of mine planters, minimizing the time required for mine planting. (Dirigibles and observation balloons best adapted for this work.)

(j) Defending and protecting naval bases and stations from naval and aerial attacks. (Armed air cruisers and combat planes needed.)

Besides the above the naval air service in other countries has been used for many other purposes, but the air service of the third naval district need not concern itself with the other purposes, which are to be performed by the aviators connected with the fleet.

(3) Divisions.

The territory comprised in the third naval district should be divided into divisions to be served by aeronautic stations established in each division, so as not to weaken the efficiency of the service by sending aircraft on too extended cruises. The lack of large dirigibles capable of long cruises necessitates costly and inefficient makeshifts and it is necessary to follow as closely as possible the example of Great Britain and establish the aeronautic stations close enough to get utmost efficiency out of each type of aircraft available. Great Britain has an aeronautic station at about every 20 miles along her coasts, numbering 107 in all. The aircraft available for the air service of the third naval district within 60 days will be seaplanes equipped with two or three motors, which may be entrusted with flights of about 80 miles out to sea and return, at a speed of 80 miles an hour; and seaplanes equipped with a single motor which may, if supported by water craft, be entrusted with flights extending 20 miles out to sea and return at a speed of 60 miles an hour; and observation balloons which can be put on board ships or barges and can be used from whatever positions these ships occupy.

The limit on continuous flight out to sea is placed here because while many aviators have made flights of several hundred miles along the coasts, very few of our aviators have had experience in actual aerial navigation over water. Until they have gained this experience their flights seaward should be limited in distance and with every seaplane sent out on patrol duty there should be sent out one or two boats with observers, whose duty is to keep track of the flight with powerful glasses, and be ready to rush to the assistance of the aviators.

After 90 days it will be possible to get larger air cruisers, some of which are under construction, and small dirigibles of the coast-patrol type, 16 of which were ordered by the Navy Department on March 12.

(4) Location of divisions.

In considering the location of divisions there must also be considered the necessity of establishing one of the divisions as far as possible out at sea, where the aircraft may have the opportunity of detecting hostile submarines while they are on the surface. On approaching the land, hostile submarines logically submerge so as not to be seen. Therefore a division should be established at Montauk Point. On the other hand, the divisions having charge of keeping channels clear of mines and submarines must be located as near as possible to the channels. For instance, the New York division, having as one of its duties to keep the channel clear up to the 50-fathom curve, which is about 85 miles from Sandy Hook, must include in its equipment large multiple-motored seaplanes capable of long-distance cruises.

For efficiency, 10 aeronautic stations should be established in the third naval district, to be located approximately as follows:

(1) Sandy Hook (aeronautic base).

(2) Montauk Point (aeronautic base).

(3) Bay Shore (station being established by the New York Naval Militia).

(4) Port Washington (already established by the America-Transoceanic Co.; offices, 280 Madison Avenue, New York).

(5) Amityville (one hangar and workshop already established by the Sperry Gyroscope Co., Manhattan Bridge Plaza, Brooklyn, N. Y.).

(6) Ocean Beach, N. J.

(7) Seaside Park, Barnegat Bay.

(8) Rockaway or Manhattan Beach or Massapequa, Great South Bay, L. I.

(9) New Haven, Conn.

(10) Southampton.

(5) Equipment for stations.

The flying equipment of each station varies according to the duties of that station. In a general way, until dirigibles and observation balloons are obtained, the territory to be covered by each station will be covered by units consisting of one aviator and one observer, having at their disposal three aeroplanes, one of which must always be in flying order. Each of these units is expected to fly about 200 miles each day when the weather permits. Whenever the distance to be covered is so great that a unit only covers it once in the course of its 200-mile flight, as in the case of the unit which will have to protect the channel down to the fiftieth-fathom curve and back, starting from the Sandy Hook base, there will be required a sufficient number of units to make it possible for a unit to start every half hour, beginning with daylight and ending at sundown.

As at present the daylight lasts about 12 hours, there would be required 24 units to patrol the channel course, a unit starting every half hour. That would necessitate having 24 units, with 3 machines to each unit, or 72 machines in all. The same is true at the Montauk Point station, which would have to patrol part of Block Island Sound and go as far out at sea as possible to look out for hostile submarines. The smaller stations, the duties of which are essentially to search the bays for submarines and convoy coastwise shipping, would need a smaller number of units unless the call for aerial patrol and convoying was heavy.

The equipment required for each station depends on the importance of the station from a strategic standpoint. In some cases the station can consist of only a sufficient number of hangars to house the aeroplanes, with a workshop, storage for gasoline, oil, etc., and the necessary housing for the officers and men. In other cases the stations must have hangars for aeroplanes, dirigibles, and observation balloons; motor and machine shops; hydrogen plant, magazines, erecting shops, stores, an aerologic station, wireless station, listening towers, searchlights, and antiaircraft guns for the protection of the station; also provision for aeroplane mother ships, kite balloon ships, and mine-laying ships to cooperate with the aeronautic station and the necessary water craft.

Until dirigibles and observation balloons can be obtained the entire work must be done by aeroplanes.

A single dirigible of the Zeppelin type could do the work of patrolling the channel from Sandy Hook to the 50-fathom curve, which is 85 miles out at sea, better than the 72 seaplanes hereinbefore mentioned; but no number of small scouting dirigibles could do that same work, excepting in the best of weather conditions, because the small dirigibles would be carried away by or could not travel against the average wind to be met along the channel.

Under fair weather conditions there could be placed four or six observation balloons along the channel, anchored on barges or suitable ships. Slow-moving ships with the observation balloons could, under normal conditions, do the work of the 72 aeroplanes. On sighting a hostile submarine, or mines, the observers would wireless the information to the shore station and summon cruisers, air cruisers, submarine chasers, or the trawlers in charge of mine sweeping.

There should be, in addition to the stations, at least one aeronautic base in the naval district. It may be stated that all the personnel required for the air service of the district has to be trained, there being practically no trained personnel available. The personnel should be trained at the aeronautic base.

The Sandy Hook and Montauk Point stations should be most complete, their equipment including the 72 aeroplanes required to maintain a steady patrol for 12 hours daily and at least 2 dirigibles and 2 observation balloons.

The aviators, dirigible pilots, observation-balloon operators, and observers for the three kinds of aircraft would be trained partly at these stations and partly at two other stations which, while not so extensive in general equipment, would have extensive facilities for instruction. The equipment needed for the last-mentioned 2 stations would consist of about 24 seaplanes to be used for coast patrol, and about 18 aeroplanes and 1 dirigible and 1 observation balloon, respectively, for training.

The number of torpedo planes and of large sea planes mounting 3-inch guns needed for the aerial defenses of the third naval district is not estimated herewith, because the number required will depend entirely on how extensively shipping in the third naval district is subject to attack from hostile ships and submarines. The torpedo plane itself, which can be either a hydroaeroplane or a flying boat of the single-motored type, equipped with a small Whitehead automobile torpedo weighing about 175 pounds, having a range of approximately 1,500 yards at a speed of about 25 knots an hour, can be put in use in quantity within 3 months. The small torpedo will probably be tested within 3 weeks of date of writing. It may require a few weeks to adjust it and standardize it, after which it can be produced in numbers. The device for attaching the torpedo to any flying boat or seaplane is simple, and almost any trained aviator can launch the torpedo under ordinary conditions, as is proved by the experience of the British Navy in Europe. The torpedo plane was patented by Admiral Fiske in 1912.

Larger seaplanes can be put into service to launch larger torpedoes, but that will require considerable experiments and training, which is, however, heartily recommended by the committee. The small torpedoes are to be sufficiently powerful to sink destroyers, all kinds of unarmored ships, and submarines. The larger torpedoes would, of course, sink armored ships.

Large seaplanes equipped with 3-inch guns would be powerful factors of offense and defense also, as they can sink destroyers, submarines, transports, and so forth. The large seaplanes required for this purpose are obtainable, one having been delivered to the Navy recently. Larger types can be obtained; some made in the United States have already been delivered to allied countries. Both the torpedo plane and the seaplane equipped with a 3-inch gun represent an extraordinary combination of mobility and power, which combination promises to revolutionize naval warfare. Their great speed and their ability to fly in a straight line over all natural obstructions make it possible to mobilize their power at any point from Barnegat to Montauk Point within two hours.

The other six stations would require about 12 seaplanes each. The above is to some extent based on the British and French experience. At the beginning of the war Great Britain had only 18 aeronautic stations. To-day she has 107, one-fifth of which are large aeronautic bases. France has about 150 aeronautic stations.

(6) Personnel.

There is practically no trained personnel available, but it will be possible to get, to start, at least 20 civilian aviators, professional and amateurs, who have had some experience in marine flying, although no experience in actual naval operations or in the operation of twin-motored aeroplanes. There can also be had about 20 students who are about to complete their preliminary course in the operation of single-motored seaplanes. About 200 more students, mostly college men who have joined the Aerial Coast Patrol units, will be under training in the third naval district within two months, several large aviation training camps being established at private expense. These are part of the hundreds of college men who wanted to join the Naval Reserve Flying Corps, but could not because the Navy Department has not the aeronautic training schools at which to train them.

There are no dirigible pilots or observation balloon operators available, but there are a few civilian experts available to take charge of the training. It will therefore be necessary to train the entire personnel of the air service, which will comprise for the third naval district about 150 aviators and aviation instructors, 30 dirigible balloon pilots, and 30 observation balloon operators. Also as many observers as there are pilots and operators. While naval officers make the best observers, the European countries have found that civilians can be trained to make efficient observers. There will be required an average of one chief mechanic and three assistant mechanics to each aviator. For each dirigible in operation there must be a crew of mechanics and a company of enlisted men to act in docking the dirigible. To each observation balloon there is required a crew of mechanics and a company of men.

(7) Training of personnel.

As the personnel available is practically all untrained in naval matters, it will be necessary to teach the students the rudiments of naval discipline and naval regulations as well as aeronautics. Great Britain has had to do this to get military aviators, and the British system, which has been adopted by her allies and Canada, is undoubtedly the best system to follow.

By the British system the civilian who wishes to join the army or navy air service in Great Britain or Canada at present has first to join the service as a cadet and go through a course in the cadet's school, at which military subjects as well as aeronautic subjects are taught. He gets a grounding in drill and discipline, care of arms, interior economy, military law, and the use of the machine gun; this course lasts about two months. From this the cadet is sent to a flying corps training school, school of military aeronautics, where he begins his technical training on the ground. In Canada, and in some cases in England, he gets the first-mentioned military training at the same time as he gets the rudimentary training in flying or operation of dirigibles and observation balloons. He goes through a course in the care of engines and rigging, is given some ideas of the theory of flight, and is taught wireless signaling and receiving.

He gets instruction in the care of machine guns, in the use of the camera, in map reading, in the observation of artillery wire with models, and in his spare moments he gets a certain amount of drill. This course lasts another two months, and if he gets through this successfully he is given a commission on the general list. He then joins a preliminary training squadron as a pupil, and starts his instruction usually on the slow Maurice Farman aeroplane, his training both in military and technical subjects going on concurrently. After reaching a certain standard of efficiency and having completed a certain number of hours in the air, he is sent on to an advanced training squadron, or service squadron, where he learns to fly service types of machines for military purposes and eventually qualifies for his wings. He is then gazetted as a flying officer of the Royal Flying Corps and posted to a service squadron. If he shows exceptional promise as a pilot after his qualification, he is sent to the Central Flying School, where he is given extra higher instruction on flying scouts. During the period of advanced training he goes through a course of aerial gunnery away from his squadron. The total time in the air usually required to reach the qualification stage is about 30 hours' solo in present circumstances, but, of course, the length of time that it takes to reach this standard depends entirely on the weather and the number of aeroplanes available. During the winter it works out to about four months, but in the summer it is considerably shorter.

(This information is quoted from statements of Gen. W. S. Brancker, R. A., director of British Air Organization.)

The above may seem a long process, but it is the best, and will prove the shortest in the end, as it will produce well-trained aviators.

A number of naval aviation officers are needed to properly carry out this plan. They can be taken from Pensacola, where they are engaged in instructing, which can be done by civilian instructors, to be engaged for that purpose the same as the Army does.

(8) Immediate action necessary.

It is not necessary to emphasize that immediate action is necessary to carry out all or any part of this plan as it is or with modifications. The vital necessity of a substantial air service is too obvious. Likewise, no time should be lost in placing orders for several large dirigibles of the Zeppelin type. They are badly needed for patrolling the channels and to convoy ships on long cruises. Unless prompt action is taken, we may wake up some morning to find that a U boat has sunk a number of ships, which can be prevented by an efficient aerial coast patrol.

As it is necessary to make provision to send seaplanes on a tour of search for hostile submarine bases that may have been established along our coasts, and for other purposes, steps should be taken immediately to set up half dozen wooden runways, hangars, and gasoline and oil depots at each of the 10 mentioned stations. The runways and gasoline and oil depots should be established immediately. That would make it possible to send the half dozen flying boats now available on searching trips, eliminating the necessity of their coming back to their base to replenish their gasoline tanks, and removing the possibility of their being damaged by landing on rocks.

(9) Free use of land for stations.

The use of land required for stations can be had free. The advisory has received many offers of that nature. Mr. Rodman

Wanamaker has offered the use of his aviation station at Port Washington; the Sperry Gyroscope Co. has offered the use of its station at Amityville; Mr. Floyd Jones has offered the use of 350 acres of land at Massapequa, Great South Bay, Long Island, for one year. These are only some of the offers of use of land suitable for air stations. The Gallaudet Aircraft Corporation, Marbridge Building, 1328 Broadway, expects to establish a training school on the south shore of Long Island. Volunteer Aerial Coast Patrol Unit No. 1 is planning to establish a station near Port Washington. These stations will be available for use by the air service of the third naval district.

(10) Plan adaptable to the 15 naval districts as well as land defenses.

This report deals mainly with the third naval district and with the use of aircraft for coast patrol. But the plan is adaptable to the 15 naval districts, and it may be pointed out that the inherent qualities of combined power and mobility make the aeroplanes an effective weapon over the land as well. For instance, 100 battle planes properly distributed could make a military reconnoissance of the entire northern border of the United States in less than an hour. If distributed along the border between the United States and Mexico, they could make a military reconnoissance of the entire border in less than half an hour.

(11) Production of aeroplanes to carry out plan.

This plan can be carried out in part with the aeroplanes obtainable under present conditions, but the carrying out of the plan as a whole depends on greatly increasing the production, which can be done by placing substantial orders with manufacturers for steady, continuous deliveries. The National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics has investigated the conditions of the aeronautic industry and found that the production of aircraft of all types can be increased from hundreds to thousands by placing substantial orders for continuous deliveries extending over a period of two or three years, so as to enable manufacturers to secure the various machinery and materials required and train the large number of workmen required.

Orders should, therefore, be placed immediately, including orders for two or three large Zeppelin type dirigibles, to foster the development of this valuable type of aircraft.

(12) Report on the efficiency of American aeroplanes.

Regarding the efficiency of American aeroplanes, our committee has investigated the subject and has found that, type for type, American manufacturers supply aeroplanes equal to the very best European products. An investigation of statements of people who, on their arrival to this country, from Europe, state that American aeroplanes are not used at the front in Europe has brought out the fact that the aeroplanes ordered in this country so far, with the exception of our large seaplanes, which are superior to any European product, the orders have only been for aeroplanes of the training type. A further investigation has shown that the reason why only the training type of aeroplane have been ordered in this country by the allies is that the limited production in this country in the past two years did not permit deliveries of thousands of aeroplanes, and it would have been most inefficient to send to the front a few hundred aeroplanes of a type for which spare parts were not available. This inability on the part of American constructors to deliver aeroplanes by the thousand at the time when the allies needed the aeroplanes most made it necessary for the different countries to create their own sources of supplies for the bulk of the aeroplanes needed by them. The complaints from the representatives of different countries which have ordered aeroplanes in the United States are entirely of our limited output. They state that they could use thousands of additional aeroplanes of the training type—as well as of the remarkable large seaplanes which are not obtainable elsewhere outside of the United States.

These facts are substantiated by the fact that additional orders have been placed continuously in this country for aeroplanes and aero motors.

The committee's investigation shows that all the reports regarding the alleged inefficiency of American aeroplanes and motors are based on the fact that close to two years ago, when it was almost impossible to get the suitable metals for crank shafts, a shipment of American motors proved to be unsatisfactory and the motors had be reconstructed in England. But the investigation also shows that the allies had the same trouble at the time with British and French products. These facts were brought out by the recent investigation of the Royal Flying Corps of Great Britain.

(13) Investigation of the efficiency of American fighting aeroplanes.

Our investigation shows that the statements made recently to the effect that American fighting aeroplanes do not have the speed and climbing ability of foreign fighting machines is based on the fact that in America we demand a factor of safety of six, whereas foreign machines only have a factor of safety of three. Likewise, whereas foreign countries expect machines that land at a speed of close to 100 miles an hour, in the United States we expect our fast aeroplanes to land at a speed not exceeding 60 miles an hour. Considering that we have a factor of safety twice as large as the foreign machines and that we have a landing speed not exceeding 60 miles an hour, our fighting machines compare favorably with the foreign machines in speed. We get a speed of approximately 120 miles from our machines, while the European machines, with the lower factor of safety and greater landing speed, get only about 10 miles more.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM C. HOUSTON,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to discuss this resolution. I am not given to much speaking, and, indeed, this is a time that calls for action rather than words; but I feel constrained, as a Representative of a peace-loving though brave and patriotic people in casting my vote as their Representative, to say a few words as to the reasons that impel me to vote for this resolution.

With steadfast faith in the principles of this Government and unwavering belief in the maintenance of these principles, I do not hesitate to cast my vote for this resolution.

Our Government was founded in righteousness and justice, and we must maintain these principles or lose the blessing they afford. Our rights have been violated in the most inhumane way. Our people have been destroyed in ways that are murderous. These wrongs we have borne with patience, hoping that we might right them without entering into a horrible war. We have hoped and prayed for peace in vain. We have been denied the right to travel the high seas on peaceful missions in the pursuit of business, except at our peril. Our ships have been sunk and our people drowned without warning. These wrongs have continued until we must resist them. President Wilson has done all in his power to keep us at peace and out of this terrible warfare. Now, he has issued a call to us to resist the war already made on our people. Can we fail to respond? We must assert our rights and compel Germany to respect them.

That we are into a state of war already is a fact that can not be ignored. Our people have been killed deliberately and unlawfully. We can no longer submit to this in safety for ourselves to-day or in security for our peace hereafter.

The Kaiser believes in a government of force and the ruthless exercise of any power to accomplish an end, in order to carry out the purpose of his ambition. International law, justice, humanity, are recklessly set aside and we are made victims of the most ruthless methods of warfare ever practiced by a civilized nation. When this despotic power assaults the rights and lives of our people we can not submit, but must assert ourselves and do battle for the dearest principles of our existence.

This resolution calls us to action, and Americans will quit themselves like men in defense of their people, their rights, and in the defense of the rights of mankind.

I vote for this resolution recognizing that Germany has thrust war upon us, and I feel to the utmost the fearful import involved. I have considered it with serious and solemn thought. We all love peace and dread war, but I can only act as my judgment and my conscience tell me it is my duty to act, when such great interests are at stake and terrible consequences are involved. I know no way to determine my course except to stand for what I believe is right and do my duty. I believe we can not in duty to ourselves and our fathers or to our posterity tamely submit to the wrongs that have been inflicted upon us. We stand for the principles of human liberty; we stand for the rights of mankind; and if it becomes necessary when these are imperiled we should make the sacrifice necessary to maintain them. In defending our rights in this contest we are fighting the battles of liberty the world over. The great struggle is now on between democracy and autocratic despotism. We are enlisted now under the banner raised by our fathers when they asserted on this continent the principles of human liberty and the rights of mankind.

Our success—and I believe we will succeed—will, I trust, be the dethronement of despotism and the establishment of democracy and freedom in all lands.

Declaration of the Position of American Labor in Peace or War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CARL HAYDEN,

OF ARIZONA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 13, 1917.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of organized labor is more than ever a matter of vital concern to the Nation now that the United States has embarked upon a great war. The following remarkable document, printed only in small part by the newspapers, was formulated after three days of discussion by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor. The declaration is as follows:

"We speak for millions of Americans. We are not a sect. We are not a party. We represent the organizations held together by the pressure of our common needs. We represent the part of the Nation closest to the fundamentals of life. Those we represent wield the Nation's tools and grapple with the forces that are brought under control in our material civilization. The power and use of industrial tools is greater than the tools of war and will in time supersede agencies of destruction.

"A world war is on. The time has not yet come when war has been abolished.

"Whether we approve it or not, we must recognize that war is a situation with which we must reckon. The present European war, involving as it does the majority of civilized nations and affecting the industry and commerce of the whole world, threatens at any moment to draw all countries, including our own, into the conflict. Our immediate problem, then, is to bring to bear upon war conditions instructive forethought, vision, principles of human welfare and conservation that should direct our course in every eventuality of life. The way to avert war is to establish constructive agencies for justice in times of peace and thus control for peace situations and forces that might otherwise result in war.

"The methods of modern warfare, its new tactics, its vast organization, both military and industrial, present problems vastly different from those of previous wars. But the Nation's problems afford an opportunity for the establishment of new freedom and wider opportunities for all the people. Modern warfare includes contests between workshops, factories, the land, financial and transportation resources of the countries involved; necessarily applies to the relations between employers and employees, and as our own country now faces an impending peril, it is fitting that the masses of the people of the United States should take counsel and determine what course they shall pursue should a crisis arise necessitating the protection of our Republic and defense of the ideals for which it stands.

"In the struggle between the forces of democracy and special privilege, for just and historic reasons the masses of the people necessarily represent the ideals and the institutions of democracy. There is in organized society one potential organization whose purpose is to further these ideals and institutions—the organized labor movement.

"In no previous war has the organized labor movement taken a directing part.

"Labor has now reached an understanding of its rights, of its power and resources, of its value and contributions to society, and must make definite constructive proposals.

"It is timely that we frankly present experiences and conditions which in former times have prevented nations from benefiting by the voluntary, whole-hearted cooperation of wage earners in war time, and then make suggestions how these hindrances to our national strength and vigor can be removed.

"War has never put a stop to the necessity for struggle to establish and maintain industrial rights. Wage earners in war times must, as has been said, keep one eye on the exploiters at home and the other upon the enemy threatening the National Government. Such exploitation made it impossible for a warring nation to mobilize its full strength for outward defense.

"We maintain that it is the fundamental step in preparedness for the Nation to set its own house in order and to establish at home justice in relations between men. Previous wars, for whatever purpose waged, developed new opportunities for exploiting wage earners. Not only was there failure to recognize the necessity for protecting rights of workers that they might give that whole-hearted service to the country that can come only when every citizen enjoys rights, freedom, and opportunity, but, under guise of national necessity, labor was stripped of its means of defense against enemies at home and was robbed of the advantages, the protections, the guaranties of justice that had been achieved after ages of struggle. For these reasons workers have felt that no matter what the result of war, as wage earners they generally lost.

"In previous times labor had no representatives in the councils authorized to deal with the conduct of war. The rights, interests, and welfare of workers were autocratically sacrificed for the slogan of 'national safety.'

"The European war has demonstrated the dependence of the Governments upon the cooperation of the masses of the people. Since the masses perform indispensable service, it follows that they should have a voice in determining the conditions upon which they give service.

"The workers of America make known their beliefs, their demands, and their purposes through a voluntary agency which they have established—the organized labor movement. This agency is not only the representative of those who directly constitute it, but it is the representative of all those persons who have common problems and purposes but who have not yet organized for their achievement.

"Whether in peace or in war, the organized labor movement seeks to make all else subordinate to human welfare and human opportunity. The labor movement stands as the defender of this principle and undertakes to protect the wealth-producers against the exorbitant greed of special interests, against profiteering, against exploitation, against the detestable methods of irresponsible greed, against the inhumanity and crime of heartless corporations and employers.

"Labor demands the right in war times to be the recognized defender of wage earners against the same forces which in former wars have made national necessity an excuse for more ruthless methods.

"As the representatives of the wage earners, we assert that conditions of work and pay in Government employment and in all occupations should conform to principles of human welfare and justice.

"A nation can not make an effective defense against an outside danger if groups of citizens are asked to take part in a war though smarting with a sense of keen injustice inflicted by the Government they are expected to and will defend.

"The corner stone of national defense is justice in fundamental relations of life—economic justice.

"The one agency which accomplishes this for the workers is the organized labor movement. The greatest step that can be made for national defense is not to bind and throttle the organized labor movement but to afford it the greatest scope and opportunity for voluntary effective cooperation in spirit and in action.

"During the long period in which it has been establishing itself the labor movement has become a dynamic force in organizing the human side of industry and commerce. It is a great social factor, which must be recognized in all plans which affect wage earners.

"Whether planning for peace or war the Government must recognize the organized-labor movement as the agency through which it must cooperate with wage earners.

"Industrial justice is the right of those living within our country. With this right there is associated obligation. In war time obligation takes the form of service in defense of the Republic against enemies.

"We recognize that this service may be either military or industrial, both equally essential for national defense. We hold this to be incontrovertible that the Government which demands that men and women give their labor power, their bodies, or their lives to its service should also demand the service, in the interest of these human beings, of all wealth and the products of human toil—property.

"We hold that if workers may be asked in time of national peril or emergency to give more exhausting service than the principles of human welfare warrant, that service should be asked only when accompanied by increased guaranties and safeguards, and when the profits which the employer shall secure from the industry in which they are engaged have been limited to fixed percentages.

"We declare that such determination of profits should be based on costs of processes actually needed for product.

"Workers have no delusions regarding the policy which property owners and exploiting employers pursue in peace or in war, and they also recognize that wrapped up with the safety of this Republic are ideals of democracy, a heritage which the masses of the people received from our forefathers, who fought that liberty might live in this country—a heritage that is to be maintained and handed down to each generation with undiminished power and usefulness.

"The labor movement recognizes the value of freedom, and it knows that freedom and rights can be maintained only by those willing to assert their claims and to defend their rights. The American labor movement has always opposed unnecessary conflicts and all wars for aggrandizement, exploitation, and enslavement, and yet it has done its part in the world's revolutions, in the struggles to establish greater freedom, democratic institutions, and ideals of human justice.

"Our labor movement distrusts and protests against militarism, because it knows that militarism represents privilege and is the tool of special interests, exploiters, and despots. But while it opposes militarism, it holds that it is the duty of a nation to defend itself against injustice and invasion.

"The menace of militarism arises through isolating the defensive functions of the State from civic activities and from creating military agencies out of touch with masses of the people. Isolation is subversive to democracy—it harbors and nurtures the germs of arbitrary power.

"The labor movement demands that a clear differentiation be made against military service for the Nation and police duty, and that military service should be carefully distinguished from service in industrial disputes.

"We hold that industrial service shall be deemed equally meritorious as military service. Organization for industrial and commercial service is upon a different basis from military service—the civic ideals still dominate. This should be recognized in mobilizing for this purpose. The same voluntary institutions that organized industrial, commercial, and transportation workers in times of peace will best take care of the same problems in time of war.

"It is fundamental, therefore, that the Government cooperate with the American organized labor movement for this purpose. Service in Government factories and private establishments, in transportation agencies, all should conform to trade-union standards.

"The guaranties of human conservation should be recognized in war as well as in peace. Wherever changes in the organization of industry are necessary upon a war basis, they should be made in accord with plans agreed upon by representatives of the Government and those engaged and employed in the industry. We recognize that in war, in certain employments requiring high skill, it is necessary to retain in industrial service the workers specially fitted therefor. In any eventuality when women may be employed we insist that equal pay for equal work shall prevail without regard to sex.

"Finally, in order to safeguard all the interests of the wage earners, organized labor should have representation on all agencies determining and administering policies for national defense. It is particularly important that organized labor should have representatives on all boards authorized to control publicity during war times. The workers have suffered much injustice in war times by limitations upon their right to speak freely and to secure publicity for their just grievances.

"Organized labor has earned the right to make these demands. It is the agency that in all countries stands for human rights and is the defender of the welfare and interests of the masses of the people. It is an agency that has international recognition which is not seeking to rob, exploit, or corrupt foreign governments, but instead seeks to maintain human rights and interests the world over, nor does it have to dispel suspicion nor prove its motives either at home or abroad.

"The present war discloses the struggle between the institutions of democracy and those of autocracy. As a Nation we should profit from the experiences of other nations. Democracy can not be established by patches upon an autocratic system. The foundations of civilized intercourse between individuals must be organized upon principles of democracy and scientific principles of human welfare. Then a national structure can be perfected in harmony with humanitarian idealism—a structure that will stand the tests of the necessities of peace or war.

"We, the officers of the national and international trade-unions of America, in national conference assembled in the Capital of our Nation, hereby pledge ourselves in peace or in war, in stress or in storm, to stand unreservedly by the standards of liberty and the safety and preservation of the institutions and ideals of our Republic.

"In this solemn hour of our Nation's life it is our earnest hope that our Republic may be safeguarded in its unswerving desire for peace; that our people may be spared the horrors and the burdens of war; that they may have the opportunity to cultivate and develop the arts of peace, human brotherhood, and a higher civilization.

"But, despite all our endeavors and hopes, should our country be drawn into the maelstrom of the European conflict, we, with these ideals of liberty and justice herein declared as the indispensable basis for national policies, offer our services to our country in every field of activity to defend, safeguard, and preserve the Republic of the United States of America against its enemies whomsoever they may be, and we call upon our fellow workers and fellow citizens in the holy name of labor, justice, freedom, and humanity to devotedly and patriotically give like service."

While the declaration speaks for itself, its importance is magnified by the knowledge that it was adopted without a dissenting vote by the representatives of 79 national and international trade-unions of America, the chiefs of the four railroad brotherhoods, and the heads of the five departments of the American Federation of Labor who assembled in Washington on March 12, 1917, pursuant to a call issued on March 2, which stated:

"Every day has added to the seriousness of the situation that confronts our Nation. It dims the hope that our country may not be drawn into the maelstrom that is rocking the very foundations of world civilization.

"For months the tide of world-war has been creeping further and further upon the coasts of our country. Even though we should be able to maintain our rights without being drawn into active participation in the present world conflict, yet we shall be compelled to meet the problems of readjustment after the war and to do our part to have incorporated into international regulations what shall determine the future ideals and principles of human justice and democracy, and the establishment of institutions and relations to deal with misunderstandings, differences, and conflicting interests, so that they may be guided in such a way as to prevent future wars.

"But there is an immediate, critical situation which the labor movement must meet at once. The whole world is afire and there is imminent danger that at any moment we may become part of the conflagration. National constructive policies of preparedness and defense are now being formulated. The wage earners of the United States will have to recognize their obligations to maintain institutions of liberty and justice if they are to have part in directing the spirit and the methods that shall be adopted for the defense of our Republic.

"Some plan will be adopted. Whatever the plan may be it will affect wage earners primarily. If in this formative period the labor movement shall clearly enunciate what part it is willing to take in defense of the Republic, it will be in a position to have a voice in deciding the whole plan of national preparedness for defense, but if the labor movement should hold aloof and should refuse to proclaim a constructive program all wage earners will be forced to accept conditions and methods determined by those who do not understand or sympathize with the aims or purposes of the labor movement.

"Either duties and service in connection with national defense will be imposed upon the workers without their advice when formulating these plans or labor must make this an opportunity for emphasizing the tremendous service that it has rendered to society, both in peace and in war, and for demanding that all plans be in harmony with the thought that human life and human welfare are the ultimate purpose which both peace and war serve.

"General policies are now in the making and can be directed either in accord with the interests of humanity or against them. But organized labor can not delay in expressing itself upon the present and impending critical situation. Now is the time for labor to speak."

In describing this historic national conference, which assembled only 25 days before the declaration of a state of war between the people of the United States and the Imperial German Government, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has said:

"For years the organized labor movements had been giving their best thought to maintaining and perfecting institutions of peace. They had been working and planning for international peace, and in their fight for idealism they were blinded to the dangers and the possibilities of war; they undervalued the instincts and the forces that so frequently have plunged countries into war. With power and suddenness that stunned, a titanic world conflict disproved the belief that never again would civilized nations become involved in serious warfare. Like all other institutions of peace, the organized labor movements of the European countries involved in the war were swept away from their moorings in the effort to provide immediate protection and to mobilize all forces that would contribute to national defense.

"To prevent a similar situation in this country representatives of the organized labor movement were called together in order that they might agree among themselves what should be their part in the defense of this Republic if war should come and to prepare a way whereby principles of human welfare should be maintained under war conditions as well as under peace.

"A spirit of serious intentness pervaded the deliberations of the conference from the beginning. It was evident that all had felt that the labor movement had a responsible duty to perform in the time of national need. The men participating in the conference had been educated by the problems, the needs, and the struggles of wage earners. They knew that the relation of labor to the war was fundamentally a human problem to be worked out in accord with the experience and the principles developed in the growth of the organized labor movement—the one organization that has proved its right to represent principles of humanity, freedom, and justice.

"They had watched in all European countries the downfall of institutions of democracy and the substitution of autocracies. Upon this as a basis, the claim was made that democracy was not and could not be efficient. With the people of the United States rests the responsibility of demonstrating that, with the best forethought and cooperative effort, democracy becomes the most efficient agency of government.

"Those participating in the conference were men of very positive convictions, but they came with open minds. During the discussion there were evidences of changes of opinions and of the fact that the men were keenly sensitive to the impact of recent events; that they felt the situation now confronting our country demanded original, fresh thinking without regard to any decision made yesterday or the year before.

"The world is entering upon a new era; new institutions, new policies, new powers are in the making.

"It is the opportunity for labor, conscious of the dignity of its service, assured of the justice of its cause, to demand the right to participate as a distinct entity in national affairs. The conference felt that the organized labor movement ought to assume the initiative.

"No more important document was ever issued by a nongovernmental agency in the history of this country. It heralds a new era when direction and administration over matters that concern the Nation shall be in the hands of those whose brain, sinew, and nerve energy have been expended in the service of the Nation.

"It was the voice of the masses declaring 'Let us plan to save democracy.' In every warring nation democracy has given way to autocracy. Labor wants to prove the efficiency of democracy—let us cooperate upon a basis that will assure whatever of value we already possess and clear the way for the new era—the constructive period of growth and progress under the inspiration of our democracy united and efficient."

That a serious effort will be made to carry out the policies outlined in this declaration is shown by the following clipping from the Weekly News Letter of the American Federation of Labor:

WELFARE OF WORKERS A DEFENSE PROBLEM.

WASHINGTON, April 7, 1917.

At a meeting last Monday of the labor committee of the advisory commission, National Council of Defense, the chairman, President Gompers, appointed the following executive committee:

Samuel Gompers, chairman; Secretary of Labor Wilson; Frank Morrison, secretary American Federation of Labor; James O'Connell, second vice president American Federation of Labor; James Lord, president mining department, American Federation of Labor; Warren S. Stone, grand chief engineer, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; Elisha Lee, general manager Pennsylvania Railroad; V. Everit Macy, president National Civic Federation; Lee K. Frankel, in charge of welfare department Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; A. Parker Nevin, National Association of Manufacturers; and Louis B. Schramm, of New York.

The meeting was attended by a large number of trade-unionists, including officials of national and international unions and other men and women interested in various phases of America's social life. It was the purpose of the meeting to coordinate every social force to the end that many experiences, both in this country and Europe, may be utilized without impairing democratic institutions. The bulk of the work of the labor committee of the advisory commission, National Council of Defense, will fall on the executive committee appointed last Monday, although subcommittees will be assigned to different activities.

Among the problems to be handled by the executive committee are the length of the workday, proper and even compulsory rest and recreation, mobility of workers with a minimum of disturbance of social ties, provision for elasticity of established rules without breaking down organized labor's machinery, maintenance of proper working conditions, housing and maintenance of proper home conditions, safety and health provisions, and problems of a similar nature.

Mr. Gompers has also sent the following cablegram, asking that labor be represented in the commission soon to be sent to America from England for a conference on the conduct of the war. A similar message was sent to Premier Ribot, of France, urging that Messrs. Jouhaux and Keufer, well-known labor leaders in that country, be sent to the United States as members of the French commission:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 12, 1917.

Premier LLOYD-GEORGE,
London:

As president of American Federation of Labor, President Wilson appointed me member of Advisory Commission Council of National Defense. Special work of my committee is conservation and welfare of workers and for effective industrial service. Cable dispatch to-day states commission from the British and French Governments will come to United States for conference. We need here the additional advice of representatives of England's workers, and respectfully urge that Appleton and Bowerman be sent here as part of British commission. Have cabled Premier Ribot, of France, to like effect for French representatives.

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

The British Premier to-day made the following reply:

LONDON, April 13, 1917.

SAMUEL GOMPERS, Washington:

Delighted to comply with your request. Two labor leaders and representatives of welfare department of ministry of munitions will leave for America as soon as possible.

LLOYD-GEORGE.

Recognition of the War Against the United States Waged by Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAS. H. MAYS,

OF UTAH,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen ask, "What will you say to the supporters of the President in the late campaign who say 'We voted for Wilson because he kept us out of war'?" They are fearful lest the people repudiate at the polls their colleagues who resist the aggressions of Germany. Their solicitude is commendable, but may be misdirected.

In answering the question, however, we should know the international situation in November, 1916, as compared with that which exists to-day.

The war in Europe began suddenly August 1, 1914. No sufficient cause has ever yet appeared visible to the naked eye. A member of the royal family of Austria and his consort had been slain in Serbia. Apparently Serbia had offered every reasonable apology and tendered most gracious offers of reparation. The assassin was promptly executed. Austria, coached and backed by Germany, insisted upon conditions which were generally admitted to be inconsistent with the sovereign existence of any nation. Russia interposed an objection finally to the absolute humiliation of their kinsman, Serbia. Then Germany declared war upon Russia and France, and with her magnificent army, for years held in impatient readiness, invaded Belgium, a peaceable nation having no part in the quarrel.

The invasion of Belgium was the work of a barbarian. It was an assault upon the rights of humanity; it was a palpable violation of existing treaties. Many of our people believe that we should have forcibly protested. Our integrity as a Nation, however, was not assaulted and the President counseled and exercised patience.

Apparently emboldened by our expressed tendency toward peace, the Imperial Government of Germany committed a number of serious acts of agression upon us. She began a ruthless submarine campaign against us which culminated in the sinking of the Lusitania, resulting in the murder, without warning and contrary to international law, of American citizens.

The President, after considering all the facts, called the German Government to task and, through splendid diplomacy, secured that nation's disavowal of the crime, promises of reparation, and assurances that it would not be repeated.

Many of our people thought that we should have forcibly resented it at the time, and the President was denounced by half of our people and ridiculed as a spineless writer of eloquently composed diplomatic notes. The Lusitania, however, floated a belligerent flag. She carried arms and munitions to belligerent nations. American passengers were not unwarned of the danger of taking passage upon her.

Two or more ships floating the American flag were sunk. The President patiently protested and disavowals and promises were renewed that such violations of our rights should be discontinued. It is hardly necessary, Mr. Speaker, to recite in detail the several instances of German assaults upon our people, as every reader of current history is familiar with the humiliating story.

However, in considering the verdict of the 1916 election, it must be borne in mind that diplomacy had apparently succeeded where war had been threatened. It could then be said that "He kept us out of war with honor to the Nation," and while there were many other substantial reasons for continuing his administration at the helm of affairs, it is probable that his peace-loving tendency may have contributed toward his election, though of this we are not certain.

The remarkable record of the administration in progressive, constructive legislation may have been the chief factor after all. Many who approved the domestic program opposed the President because of his foreign policy, which they claimed showed a shameless, vacillating disregard of American rights. However, to those people who voted for the President because he kept us out of war and who now feel that they have been betrayed, it can be said that the conditions are now vastly different.

Then Germany had yielded to every substantial demand we had made. She had disavowed the unlawful acts of her submarine commanders. She had promised not to sink passenger ships or other ships without warning. She had promised to make reparation.

Now she has announced, under date of January 31 last, that on and after February 1, 1917, she will sink all vessels entering a zone on the high seas described by her, whether such vessels are neutral or belligerent, whether loaded with contraband or passengers bound upon errands of mercy.

Her restricted zone would bar us effectually from the high seas and rob us of rights inherent to our Nation.

The President had stated that the Imperial German Government would be held to a strict accountability for all acts of ruthless aggression upon us.

He had stated in most emphatic terms that friendly relations would be dissolved if the illegal and inhuman submarine warfare should be resumed. Therefore there was nothing left for him to do, when the announcement was made that all promises, assurances, and disavowals would be repudiated and the murderous program resumed, than to do just what he did.

The Congress approved and the country applauded his course in breaking off friendly relations with Germany, as he personally announced to us in the joint session of February 3.

For a time it appeared that the breach of friendly relations and the warning that we must defend our most sacred rights had some effect upon the German Government. Acts of aggression were committed, however, sufficiently grave to cause the President to ask the Congress, in his address to us in joint session, for authority to arm our merchant ships for their defense against unlawful attacks. The country again applauded. The Congress almost unanimously approved. Except for a filibuster, disgraceful and craven, the armed neutrality bill, giving the President authority to arm our merchant ships, that they might at least spare themselves the humiliation, jeers, and insults to their sinking flag after the fatal blow had been delivered by the cowardly bushwhackers of the sea, would have overwhelmingly passed the Congress. It is true that the President kept us out of war as long as it was possible for patient forbearance and the exercise of diplomacy to do so.

It is untrue to say that he now plunges us into war. Germany officially announced that she would wage war upon us by sinking ships carrying our flag and our people. And she has done so. By asking us to recognize that a state of war exists he simply suggests that we have the common sense to accept a situation which Germany had imposed upon us and to take the necessary steps to meet it. We could do nothing else and continue as a Nation.

Germany would, no doubt, prefer to continue this one-sided warfare upon us. She would be pleased to sink our ships and murder our citizens—men, women, and children—and drive us off the seas while we cowardly submit. Every murderer, every outlaw, would prefer a policy of nonresistance on the part of the victim.

The President stated that Germany, in the new policy, "had swept every restriction aside, vessels of every kind, whatever their flag, their character, their cargo, their destination, their errand, had been ruthlessly sent to the bottom without warning, without thought of help or mercy for those on board; vessels of friendly neutrals along with belligerents, hospital ships carrying relief to the sorely bereaved and stricken people of Belgium, though the latter were provided with safe conduct through the proscribed areas by the Germany Government itself and were distinguished by unmistakable marks of identity, have been sunk with the same reckless lack of compassion and principle."

Was there ever a more serious indictment preferred in the annals of history? Does anyone dispute the facts set forth by the President? What other course could we take and preserve our own self-respect?

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] occupied an hour in opposition to the resolution. He employed his time in a defense of the Imperial German Government and an arraignment of his own. He advances the novel argument that so long as Germany kills all neutrals without discrimination we could not object to being killed by her. To this cowardly doctrine we could not subscribe. He would condemn the offenses of England against property rights and condone the offenses of Germany against every sovereign right we, as a Nation, possess.

He could see no difference between the capture of the cargo of a ship for which payment is made and the destruction of the lives of citizens without warning. He denounces his Government for submitting to the capture and seizure of property and yet he would not recognize a state of war waged against his people by the German Government. His argument against the armed-neutrality bill pretended to be based upon the objection to arming ships against attack which carried arms and munitions. Now, when Germany is sinking our ships carrying only passengers and ballast he still supports the Kaiser instead of the President.

It is noteworthy that the gentleman and the colleagues supporting his most astonishing position have a very large German constituency. He could not find it in his heart to condemn anything the Kaiser's Government has done. He knew of the many acts of aggression upon the seas. He was aware of the intrigues to involve us in war with Mexico and Japan, the ultimate object of which was to dismember our country and apportion it out to the conquerors. His argument is an insult to the German constituency to whom he seeks to cater.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] occupied 20 minutes, three-fourths of which was devoted to the task of showing us how much our Nation had been dishonored by submission to the illegal acts of Mexico and England. Then, strange to say, he advocates submission to Germany. He has been the most persistent critic, in a small way, of the administration for what he called its "pacifism." He has clamored for more Navy, a larger Army, and now he would not use what we have in defense of all we have which makes us a sovereign Nation. To such doctrine we are incapable of subscribing.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] would not declare war against any nation. He, at least, is consistent. He would not recognize war when he met it in the middle of the road. He hopes Germany would yield to persuasion. If that gentleman or any other could give us substantial assurance that our people would not continue to be murdered, we might listen to his eloquent appeal. But no assurance is forthcoming.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. DILL] says that we go to war simply for the right to trade with other nations, because our property rights are being violated. Suppose that we had no other cause for passing this resolution, still it should be passed because we must, as a people, preserve and defend our rights upon the high seas.

The gentleman failed to follow the President when he said:

> I am not now thinking of the loss of property, immense and serious as that is, but only of the wanton and wholesale destruction of the lives of noncombatants—men, women, and children—engaged in pursuits which have always, even in the darkest periods of modern history, been deemed innocent and legitimate. Property can be paid for. The lives of innocent and peaceful people can not.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] consistently preaches the doctrine of nonresistance. If a barbarian should place a chalk mark around the gentleman's home and tell him not to cross it, his argument would compel him to submit. If a bully should strike his wife or proceed to murder his children, his doctrine would prevent the use of the weapons with which nature supplied him for the defense of his life and the lives of those dependent upon him. He says we could avoid a conflict by staying off the seas. So we could by getting off the earth.

I am reminded of an incident related in the book called the Virginian. A desperado named Trampas had given the Virginian notice that if he did not leave the town of Medicine Bow, Wyo., by sundown he would kill him. The pacifists all advised the Virginian to leave. His sweetheart, the school-teacher, plead with him to go. The preacher urged him to avoid any conflict by departing to another town and quoted the Scriptural injunction: "Thou shalt not kill."

The Virginian told the preacher to "tell that to Trampas and there would be no killing." He upheld his rights upon the earth and went about his legitimate business. The desperado undertook to execute his threat and lost his life in the attempt.

Everyone knows that if the Virginian had been so cowardly as to submit to the dictates of the desperado he would have been a wanderer upon the face of the earth. He would have lost the respect of everyone including his sweetheart, the preacher, and even of himself.

So now if we should cravenly submit to the autocratic orders of the German barbarian we would forfeit the respect of all people, including our own. This would be worse than war, deplorable as it is.

To me, Mr. Speaker, there is no other course for us to take. Regardless of political affiliations we should solemnly sustain our President.

It grieves me to know that some votes will be cast against the resolution. It should be unanimous. We are all impressed by the deep solemnity of the hour. We are all sincere lovers of peace and look forward to the war's early victorious conclusion.

Personally I expect to see three results of world-wide significance:

1. Such a league of nations as will abolish militarism and bring peace to the world.

2. The overthrow of autocratic, kingly power and the establishment of democracy.

3. Incidentally the abolishment throughout the world of the liquor traffic as a military and economic necessity.

The world will not permit such a menace to exist again as Prussian militarism over which a Kaiser reigns who would dominate the world.

A distinguished Senator said yesterday:

> The very opening chapter of God's holy law prescribing the charter of our creation informs us that God gave to man dominion over the sea and over the land, but it is for us in Christian America to behold that one part of the civilization of the world, through imperial power, repeals the law of Almighty God and amends the ordinances of Heaven by placing a limitation upon that which God gave his children by denying to one portion—America—the privileges of the earth.

Lloyd-George, the premier of England, said to-day that—

> The Kaiser, when he witnessed the incessant tread of his legions through the streets of Prussia, got drunk with the sight and sound of it. He delivered the law to the world as a new pastor on Sinai, delivering the law from the thunderclouds.

It is against that arrogant assumption of divine power and the barbaric exercise of it upon us rather than against the German people that we now offer determined resistance and unselfishly pledge the manhood and the resources of our country.

War, Patriotism, and Neutrality.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MARK R. BACON,
OF MICHIGAN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, the question as to whether we should declare war should be determined only after serious and mature deliberation, and I am glad that Congress has thrown the doors open for a full discussion to all Members.

We are told that the country seems to be clamoring for war, and there is no question but that Congress will declare for the resolution; but we must not be carried away by passion or prejudice, fear or favor. We should deliberate calmly, with a view for the present and future of our beloved country. Every man should be a patriot in times like these, and should consider every phase of the question, communing seriously with his conscience, his country, and his God. A man surely can be a patriot and still not want to plunge his country into war.

We have been taught to look upon George Washington, the Father of his Country, as a patriot, and no man will question his patriotism; then would it be out of order, should it lower us in the estimation of patriotic people in a patriotic country, to stop long enough to ask ourselves and consider whether Washington would, if living and a Member of this Congress, be in favor of our entering this war, and how would he cast his vote—for or against this resolution? The only way for us to form an opinion as to what he would do under such circumstances would be for us to examine and consider his writings, his letters while on earth, and his actions as handed down to us in history.

Here is a letter written by him from Mount Vernon to Patrick Henry, as reported in Volume XIII of the Ford "Writings of Washington." Listen:

> My ardent desire is and my aim has been (as far as dependent upon executive department) to comply strictly with all our engagements, foreign and domestic, but to keep the United States free from political connections with every other country, and to see them independent of all, and under the influence of none. In a word, I want an American character that the powers of Europe may be convinced that we act for ourselves and not for others. This, in my judgment, is the only way to be respected abroad and happy at home; and not, by becoming partisans of Great Britain or France, create dissensions, disturb the public tranquility, and destroy, perhaps, forever, the cement that binds the Union.
> GEORGE WASHINGTON.

When we enter this war our soldiers will cross the ocean to Europe; they must face the liquid fire, the poisonous gas, the deadly shrapnel and bullets; they will not falter; they will die as heroes only die! When will the living remainder of our armies return? Not until the allies say they may return, when the war has ended to the satisfaction of the allies, and not until then will our boys be free to return to their native land. Would this be "acting for ourselves and not for others"? Would we not become "partisans of Great Britain or France" or the other allies? Would not this "create dissensions and disturb the public tranquility" of this country? Let us pause and consider.

Are we at this critical time in our Nation's history going to ignore, forget, and disregard the advice and teachings of George Washington?

When we enter this alliance with the allies will we be "free from political connections with every other country"? Will we be "independent of all and under the influence of none"? Is this "the only way to be respected abroad and happy at home"? Would this not place us in the position of "becoming partisans of Great Britain and France, create dissensions, disturb the public tranquility" and lose to us our standing as an independent Nation, free from all foreign alliances of whatsoever nature?

I prefer to heed the teachings of Washington rather than to help to plunge our beloved country into the unfathomable abyss of questionable foreign politics and foreign alliances. I can not accept or believe that patriotism calls upon us to impoverish our country and our people by saddling upon them a debt that they, their children, nor children's children, nor the children's children's grandchildren and great-grandchildren will never live to see paid and extinguished. Billions of dollars must be raised by taxation and bonds. Stop and consider for a few minutes and see whether you can realize what a billion dollars means, and then consider that this must be raised from taxing the people and the country's resources. But war not only means money and high taxes for each and every individual but it means death and destruction; it means that our American boys will go to foreign lands and thousands and thousands will give up their young lives, thousands and thousands will return home sightless, thousands and thousands will return legless and armless, millions and millions of dollars' worth of property will be destroyed. It will be a war of destruction and not of construction and building up.

Will our honorable Senators and Congressmen who are championing this resolution for war be among the first to enlist and cross the ocean? Time will tell. Will those people throughout the length and breadth of this land who are clamoring for war and denouncing every man who does not favor this resolution as an enemy to his country—will we find these men, when war is upon us, in the trenches facing shot and shell, liquid fire and deadly gases? I think not. Will they be the first to send their boys to the front? I can not believe it. The man who stands off and yells to the other fellows to "fight" do not generally get close enough to the fracas to receive any of the blows himself.

I question no man's right to vote as his conscience dictates, and if that conscience dictates that he should vote for this resolution no man has any right to question or censure his vote, and the same rule should apply to those who conscientiously vote against it.

We are told that this war will be popular with the people; that the country is aroused and that the people are in favor of war. Is this true? I can not believe it. The President surely does not believe it, or he would not recommend conscription—drafting the people from the start in order to fill the ranks and get an army of sufficient strength to start operations.

If this question could be left to a referendum of the people, I believe, from the letters and telegrams I have received, both pro and con, that a majority of the people would be glad to register their vote against war.

We have been complaining about the high cost of living. How will it be when this war is upon us and the boys from the farm, the boys from the factory, the boys from every walk of life have quit producing and gone across the ocean to fight?

From whence will come the money with which to pay our taxes, with which to pay the cost of this war? Some newspapers tell us that it will be paid, in a measure, by the rich and the moderately rich through the many methods of taxes and taxation, including the inheritance and the income tax. Let me tell you that the wealthy citizens may furnish part of the money—do not for one minute believe that the balance of us will escape taxation—but the boys of this country, the boys between the ages of 18 and 25—18 and 19 if we take the Civil War statistics—the flower, the bone and sinew of this country, the laboring man, the clerk, the young man from all walks of life, will furnish the blood, their lives, their arms, their legs, their eyesight, their young manhood, their health, and the mothers of this country will not only furnish their boys but they will furnish the loving memory, the anguish, the tears, the heart's blood of this Nation—and all for what? Answer this question for yourselves and to your God!

We stand for the people at home and abroad and wherever the American flag may float; but what must we say of the person who knowingly rushes into a war zone, where he is liable to bring on complications that would lead his country into war, that might involve millions of his countrymen and all the resources of his Nation?

The man who rushes into a saloon brawl must expect to take what is coming to him and must abide the consequences. Should it be different with the person who would rush into a war zone—rush in where angels fear to tread?

O, my colleagues, would it be out of order to refer again to the patriot, Washington, and quote one of his proclamations while President, when Austria, Prussia, and Great Britain were at war with France? Listen:

A PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Whereas a state of war exists between Austria, Prussia, and Great Britain on the one hand, and France on the other, I do hereby make known that whatsoever citizen of the United States shall render himself liable to punishment by carrying to any of them articles which are deemed contraband will not receive the protection of the United States. I have given instruction to those officers to whom it belongs to cause prosecution to be instituted against all persons who shall violate this law.

Done at the city of Philadelphia, 22d day of April, 1793.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

By the President:

[SEAL.]

THOMAS JEFFERSON,
Secretary of State.

O my countrymen, think of the thousands and thousands of happy homes throughout our beloved land! Then let your minds look forward to one or two years hence and note the death, the destruction, the desolation stalking abroad. Think of the heart-broken mother—perhaps your own mother; think of the wife; think of the boy; think of the many once happy homes now made desolate.

Why should we not take as strong a stand for democracy in America as our President asks us to take for a foreign country? I do not believe that the rank and file of the people in this country want to send our armies to Europe. I do not believe our boys are ready or anxious to be sent to the slaughter pens of Europe. It is against every principle of democracy and a free country and is utterly opposed to the principles, in my opinion, that were taught by the framers of our Constitution or by George Washington.

My countrymen, we are appealed to to stand by the flag. We are standing by the flag; we can all be for our country's flag; in this hour we are neither politicians nor partisans; we must be patriots whether we support this resolution or not—we are patriots. Every man in this House is for the flag and what it stands for, and though we may differ as to what it may stand for in this crisis, yet, my countrymen, we love that flag; we love her glorious folds; we love those white stripes of purity and those red stripes of love; we love that beautiful field of blue, emblem of truth and fidelity, bedecked and glittering with 48 of the evening's sentinels from heaven's own.

When we look upon that flag we are reminded, and we want to feel proud, that we are American citizens and revere the teachings of our forefathers. When we look upon that flag, no matter whether in foreign lands, we want to know that 48 States and more than 100,000,000 people—100,000,000 of as true, as brave, as honest, as patriotic a people as God's sun ever shone upon—are backing us in our rights as American citizens, as long as we conduct ourselves as becomes true Americans, behaving ourselves at home and abroad. When we look upon that flag we are reminded of the thousands and thousands of happy homes all over this glorious country, on the rocky hills of the East, along the shores of our Great Lakes, among the southern pines, on the productive soil of the Mississippi Valley, over the fertile prairies of the great West, along the golden slopes of the Pacific—all over this glorious land of ours—made happy with the thought that as long as that flag floats in the heavens and we keep ourselves free from any and all entangling foreign alliances they may rest in security and dwell in neighborly love.

When we look upon that flag we want to know that we live in "the land of the free and home of the brave"—free from political and military connections with any and all foreign countries.

When we look upon that flag we are reminded of the Nation's dead, those who fell in defense of our glorious country in the different wars—fell with the Star-Spangled Banner as their winding sheet, weltering in a patriot's blood, dampened with a Nation's tears, remembered in their country's prayers.

When you look upon that flag you are reminded of your grandfathers, your fathers, your brothers, aye, perhaps your loved sons, who are already sleeping in foreign lands.

When we look upon that flag we think of you who periled your lives in defense of our glorious country and of your comrades who may have left an arm or a leg as a monument of their patriotism on the bloody field of battle, and in our hearts we say, God bless those noble defenders of our country and our country's flag. I know there is nothing that pleases you better, when you watch the unfurling and waving of your country's flag than the thought, than the knowledge, that you were one of its defenders, and that still the national flag—the same old flag that was unfurled to the breezes from the heights of Saratoga, the same old flag that was handed down to us by our forefathers, and under which our fathers fought—the same old flag that has kissed every breeze, in peace and in war, for over a century and a quarter, and through Heaven's will, with the same patriotism in the future as has been exhibited by Columbia's sons and daughters in the past, that same old flag will be floating in the heavens as our national ensign for hundreds of years—for centuries yet to come. Aye, throughout all eternity may that beautiful, that glorious, that grand old flag float to heaven's breeze. May no traitor's hand ever trail it in the dust. May universal peace soon perch upon that banner, and may we never again be called upon to bathe it in the blood of patriotism, but standing under the American flag, as one united Nation, may we soon be at peace with all the world.

In conclusion I make the following editorial from a recent issue of the Detroit (Mich.) News a part of my remarks:

THINK OF THIS.

[Editorial from Detroit Evening News.]

If the United States goes to war with Germany it will be over our rights on the seas.

If we go to war there are a great many good, able-bodied men reading this now who will be dead two years from now—killed in battle.

If we go to war there are a great many men reading this now who will be unable to read two years from now—blinded in battle.

If we go to war there are a great many men reading this now who will be back from battle two years from now crippled for life.

If we go to war there are a great many women reading this now who will be widows two years from now; others who will be mourning the killing of their sons.

If we go to war the children of many who are reading this now will be orphans two years from now.

Going to war means the taking of lives, the flowing of blood, the giving up of treasure.

So let us understand—all that will be called to make sacrifices—that in giving up the lives of the best men of our Nation, that in opening the veins that the blood of youth and mature man may flow forth in a torrent, that in sacrificing the great treasures of our land, it is to be because our legal, technical rights on the sea have been violated.

He who understands fully the cause of his adversary is doubly strong, for in understanding that he is twice fortified in the justice of his own course.

If these lives are given, if this blood is caused to flow, it will be the lives and the blood of the men in field and factory and office, not the lives and blood of the men in legislative halls.

So let the men who are to make the great sacrifice know why the sacrifice is to be made; let the cause be so strong that light thrown on it from any direction will only make the justice of it all stand out more clearly.

That our legal rights upon the sea have been violated by Germany there can be no doubt.

Some of our citizens do not believe that the violations have been such as to call for the sacrifice of millions of lives, but that they call for negotiations and settlement—such a course as has been followed in other cases.

Others of our people believe they call for strong action along protective lines, for arming ships for defense, and sending out convoys.

Others of our people believe the violations so flagrant as to call for an aggressive war of extermination against the Germans; for an alliance with England, France, and the other allies; for furnishing men in sufficient numbers and money in sufficient quantities to annihilate Germany.

If our men are to go into this war, they should know all there is to know about the cause for which they are fighting and sacrificing their lives.

Home Preparedness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,
OF MINNESOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 13, 1917.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article by the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture upon the shortage of the food supply.

The article is as follows:

HOME PREPAREDNESS.

[By Carl Vrooman, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.]

I.

National preparedness for war has ceased to be a theme for argument. Congress and other Federal agencies are now occupied with questions of ways and means. Moreover, to-day we face the question of individual preparedness, about which little has yet been said, but which is as vital a question as the other.

War is not only a matter of gunpowder and lead; it is just as much a matter of food and forage. Comparatively few are in position to serve their country in actual trench or on actual firing line, but there is no man, woman, or half-grown child who can not serve on the forage line, if only by tending a bed of green vegetables. Such service may not be exciting, may not seem glorious; yet in the long run it may be as useful as the service of the man who dies for his country on the field of battle. It is not inconceivable that the time may come when such humble service, loyally performed by thousands of patriots a thousand miles from any battle line, may turn the balance upon which hangs our very existence as a free people.

We produce more than enough food for ourselves; but in war there nevertheless always will be danger that people may starve with food reserves in abundance in remote elevators and storage plants, but with railroads too busy handling troops and munitions to carry food to the civilian population. Thus the Government would be embarrassed by the problem of meeting local shortages of food at a time when all its energies should be focused upon national defense. Incidentally, from time to time prices of some necessaries of life may become prohibitive, even though food be available. Hence it is as imperative that the individual meet the problem of home food supply as that Congress should look to national food preparedness.

Individual preparedness in cities should take form this spring in the planting of hundreds of thousands of dooryard gardens, where before there was only sod or bare earth. In the country it should take the form of more intensive cultivation, even of a measure of training on the part of women and girls that they may be prepared to ride the sulky plow or the binder if the worst comes. Everywhere it should take the form of scrupulous care in the production, use, and conservation of foods. The nation whose homes are assured an abundant supply of vegetables in summer and home-dried and home-canned fruits and vegetables in winter has already taken a long stride toward the establishment of a sound policy of food preparedness.

II.

KITCHEN EFFICIENCY.

The commissariat of a modern army should be an example to every American housewife. In the army the ration is well balanced; the cheapest, nutritious, and palatable foods are purchased; and the most economical means of preparing them are used.

It is a patriotic duty at this time and all the time, whether there is war or peace, for every American woman, rich or poor, to keep her home "prepared." Home preparedness means substitution of cheap dishes for costly foods when practical, elimination of waste, and scientifically balanced rations.

There are two great groups of foods that enter into a balanced human ration—the protein group, like meats, eggs, and beans, and the starch group, such as potatoes, rice, cereals, bread, and so forth. The protein foods, as a rule, are more expensive than the starchy foods. Some protein foods, however, are cheap. The prime factor in economy in foods is the choice of protein foods that are at the same time cheap and palatable.

A cheap food, rich in protein and fats, is the ordinary field soy bean, often sold under the name "Togo bean." Ten cents' worth at the price of 15 cents a quart will supply over 5 ounces of protein, while average beef, at 20 cents a pound, will supply little over 1 ounce of protein for the same money.

An excellent basis for soups can be made from the water in which most vegetables are boiled. The water in which soy beans have been cooked, for example, may be used to good advantage in making stock. Save also vegetable tops, skim milk, bones, and meat scraps for soups. Make the butcher give you all the fat that he weighs with your cut of meat—it is valuable grease.

Do not depend on one kind of food. When potatoes are dear remember that 1 pound of dry corn meal provides about five times as much fuel or energy and five times as much tissue-building protein as 1 pound of raw potatoes, and costs from one-third to one-sixth as much.

Raisins are rich in sugar, mineral salts, and the natural grape acids, and their cost is low.

Whole wheat, cracked in a little $2.50 hand mill, or even in a coffee mill, is one of the most delicious and nourishing breakfast foods known—and inexpensive even at the present high price of wheat.

Save fuel and labor by making hot breads only when using your fire for the cooking of other foods. Avoid the danger of overcooking, and conserve the flavor of your dinner by using a fireless cooker. You can make a good one yourself very cheaply.

By such expedients as these every woman can "prepare" her home not only against war, but also against sickness or hard times.

III.

THE WOMEN IN THE FIELD.

Can we enlist a million American women to do men's work this summer on the farms?

I ask this question because it is possible that this summer the United States may be in as great need of farm laborers as of soldiers or munition makers. But whether the actual opportunity comes this year or not, preparedness of the individual for war or for peace demands that American farm women be ready for every possible emergency.

It is well within the bounds of probability that the available farm labor of the United States will be materially reduced by the calling of many men to other and more hazardous duties than sowing and reaping.

It is physically possible for the farm women of America to aid our economic preparedness in the event that a war summons an immense army to the colors. To handle modern farm implements is not necessarily beyond a woman's strength. With a good team and a riding cultivator equipped with a sun umbrella, plowing corn is a deal more pleasant than washing. The spring seat of a binder compares favorably with the comfort of a piano stool. Few household duties are more fun than riding a hay rake. Even plowing with a sulky plow is not too heavy a strain for some American women.

Every farm girl and woman should proceed at once to master the elements of practical scientific farming. Those who can should attend short courses in agricultural schools and everyone should ask questions, observe, and read bulletins.

The Department of Agriculture has issued a concise, simple, practical primer of scientific agriculture for the Middle West—Farmers' Bulletin No. 704—which can be obtained through Congressmen or directly from the Department of Agriculture. Similar bulletins for other regions are now under preparation.

Every farm girl and woman, moreover, should, by all means, take a hand in actual farm operations, so as to handle tractors, horses, and farm implements readily and skillfully. Those who do so will not have to prepare after the fighting has begun to do their "bit" for their country in time of danger. They will know how to plant, cultivate, and harvest the crops essential to our national welfare when saving them depends upon the service of women in the field.

Let the million women step forward!

IV.

THE HOME GARDEN.

Without going beyond their own dooryards millions of American women can render real service to the Nation this summer, as real as that rendered by the soldier on the field of battle. They each can do this by merely planting and caring for a home garden.

A million or more gardens planted in our cities and suburbs this spring would mean a national saving of possibly $50,000,000, a sum as large as that which President McKinley was given by Congress for the prosecution of the Spanish-American War. Growing vegetables for home consumption in these gardens would relieve the railroads of the necessity of carrying millions of pounds of bulky freight, thus releasing thousands of cars and engines for hauling men and munitions.

Department specialists have calculated that an average American family uses about 20 bushels of potatoes a year. It takes but a fraction of an acre to produce this quantity of this important foodstuff, since a fair yield of this crop is 200 bushels per acre, and it is not uncommon for potatoes to run to 400 bushels.

Radishes, onions, lettuce, beets, beans, peas, tomatoes, lima beans, spinach, and numerous other easily cultivated vegetables can be raised in the back yard, provided the soil is fertile and intelligence is employed in the process. There is no reason in the world why literally millions of new back-yard gardens should not be planted this spring as soon as the ground is warm enough and supply millions of families with good, cheap, nutritious foods all this summer, war or no war.

The hitherto wasted resource of this dooryard land should be utilized at once. It is no more work for a woman to attend a vegetable garden than it is to attend a flower garden or house plants. At present it is more patriotic to subordinate flowers to food.

V.

SOY BEANS.

Among the simple, nutritious, and inexpensive foods which should be listed on every housekeeper's program of home preparedness is the soy or "Togo" bean. As a forage crop in the United States these beans are well known, but as yet the soy bean, which is utilized widely in Japan, China, and India for human food, has not yet been used to any great extent in this country for that purpose.

When soy beans sell for 15 cents a quart, 10 cents' worth will supply over 5 ounces of protein. When beef of average composition sells for 20 cents a pound, 10 cents' worth will supply a little over an ounce of protein. Soy beans contain 36 per cent protein, 18 per cent fat, and 28 per cent carbohydrates, as against 24.6 per cent protein, 1 per cent fat, and 62 per cent carbohydrates in navy beans.

Soy beans contain more fat than starch. Next to peanuts they contain more fat than any other legumes. They contain more protein than any other vegetable. This not only makes them a fatty food, but it makes it possible to cook them without the addition of pork or other fat. Soy beans can be used in almost exactly the same way as the ordinary navy beans.

To prepare baked soy beans soak the beans over night in cold water; in the morning add a pinch of soda, and boil the beans in the water in which they were soaked. Pour off the water and use it for making soup. Put the beans in a baking dish, add two level teaspoonfuls of salt, cover them with water, cover the dish, and bake six to eight hours, leaving the dish uncovered during the last hour. It is unnecessary to flavor them with molasses, as their natural flavor is delicious.

Since the soy bean contains little starch, the liquid in which they are cooked is not thickened, and the beans remain separate. If this is considered objectionable, the liquid can be thickened with corn meal—one-third of a cup to a quart of beans.

The skins of the soy beans can be removed by boiling the beans for 10 minutes and allowing them to cool overnight in the same water and then rubbing between the hands. Most persons prefer the beans without the skins. They have a more delicate flavor and probably are more easily digested when thus prepared.

VI.

WHOLE WHEAT.

Whole wheat, which can be bought in the grain at seed or feed stores, is one of the best all-around cheap and nutritious foods in the country. Every American home should keep a supply of whole wheat. When soaked for several hours and cooked an equal length of time it makes a delicious breakfast food. Ground in a hand gristmill, which can be bought for from $2.50 to $5, it is equally palatable when made into bread or used as a cereal.

It has been estimated that whole wheat cooked overnight in a fireless cooker or cooked all day on the back of the kitchen range makes a cereal costing one-sixteenth the price of some of the patent commercial breakfast foods and furnishes, moreover, fully equal nourishment.

Whole wheat contains all the nourishment of the original wheat. It contains the white flour plus the shorts and bran. Whole wheat contains valuable protein and mineral matter, so that persons who eat whole-grain products can get along with fewer meats, fruits, and vegetables than those who eat the refined cereals. Whole wheat is a better source of growth-promoting and body-regulating substances than cereals and breads made from the inside of the grain only.

Whole wheat may be cooked without cracking or grinding, but it requires many hours in a double boiler to cook it thoroughly. Whole wheat ground in a hand gristmill should be cooked at least three hours over the fire or all night in a fireless cooker. To have the best flavor, it should not be too moist. The longer it is cooked the better. It is possible to cook up enough for several days and warm it over as desired. If whole wheat is soaked several hours, it will not need to be cooked so long.

The Bureau of Chemistry has worked out a recipe for bread made primarily from home-ground meal. Two cupfuls of wheat meal, 1 cupful of white flour, 1¼ cupfuls of lukewarm water, ½ cake of compressed yeast, 1 level teaspoonful of salt, 1 level teaspoonful of sugar, and 1 level teaspoonful of shortening, if desired, is the formula. Dough of this kind has only two-thirds of the usual rise of white bread. It should be baked slowly for three-fourths of an hour.

Every American woman should know and use whole wheat.

VII.

CORN MEAL.

Corn meal is a cheap and valuable foodstuff which is not in as general use in the American home as it ought to be. A pound of dry corn meal provides about five times as much energy and five times as much tissue-building protein as does a pound of raw potatoes. At present prices a pound of corn meal costs from one-third to one-sixth as much as a pound of potatoes.

When potatoes are scarce or expensive corn meal makes an excellent substitute. Corn meal is not, however, a perfect substitute for potatoes, because as it is prepared by modern milling methods it contains fewer minerals and other valuable substances than do potatoes. When, consequently, corn meal is substituted for potatoes the diet should be balanced with another vegetable, a salad, or a fruit.

Corn-meal mush for breakfast or supper is a standard and palatable dish. Fried mush is an excellent substitute for fried potatoes. There are dozens of corn-meal dishes, in addition to the different varieties of corn bread. What is known in the North as Boston brown bread is composed of about one-half rye meal and one-half corn meal. Polenta is another corn-meal dish, extremely popular throughout southern Europe and in certain parts of the United States. The tomale is another corn dish which is in high favor when well made.

If speculators corner the potato crop, or if the potato crop—as was the case in 1916—should be short, corn meal is the next best thing. Of course, rice is also a partial substitute for potatoes, but rice at present costs more than corn meal.

Corn meal is a wholesome and typical American food.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. NORMAN J. GOULD,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, owing to the continuous attacks and insults thrust upon this Government by the Imperial German Government, I can not refrain from voicing my sentiments as well as those whom I represent before voting on this resolution.

We are going through one of the greatest crises in the history of our Nation and have practically no precedent or past experience to guide us in deciding our best course. We must protect our own interests, including those of our citizens who may be dependent on the support of their country, and so guide our actions as to treat all nations fairly, but demand for our own citizens the consideration to which they rightfully may be entitled.

I feel that the dearest possession which any American may have is that of being a citizen of our country, and I believe it to be the duty and privilege of all of us to uphold our national honor by every means in our power.

This must include giving to President Wilson the united and patriotic support which he deserves, no matter whether we may agree with his methods or policies. In the present emergency party politics, petty or otherwise, should not be allowed to affect our views.

We should allow no people or nation in the world to deny us the freedom of trading and of intercourse on the high seas, and I am firmly behind the administration in its decision to arm merchant vessels to defend themselves, if necessary, from unlawful attacks by anyone.

The people of the country should not overlook the fact that we can not tell when we may be the objects of attack, and all just means for defense should be canvassed, foreseen, and arranged for. The point made by several opponents of preparedness that this country and its people might develop into a militaristic nation is too absurd to be seriously considered, as we have built our laws and institutions on the foundations prepared by the forefathers, whom we revere, and our long and glorious record has developed no trace of a desire for conquest. We are a peace-loving people who are slow to wrath, but we are so constituted that we must have, and shall demand, our rights, not being afraid, if necessary, to fight for them.

President Wilson in his address to Congress on the evening of April 2 brought out in his speech that he and the members of his Cabinet had tried every possible way to avoid war with Germany, at the same time maintaining the dignity and honor of this country, but Germany, disregarding our international relations, refused the freedom of the high seas to our citizens, and to uphold our standing in the world it was necessary for President Wilson to ask Congress to declare that a state of war existed between this Government and the Imperial German Government.

When this resolution is reached for a vote I will be recorded in the affirmative, as I heartily indorse President Wilson's actions during the present crisis, and trust that this body of Congress will show its patriotism by giving President Wilson its full support.

At this time I would also state that I hope the Congress will see its way clear to pass the universal military training bill and adopt it as a permanent national policy, as I believe that this is one of the most important factors during the present crisis. Universal military training would not only be a great benefit to the young men, as well as to their country, but would place us on equal military footing with the rest of the foreign countries.

The prosperity of our country depends on fair treatment for all, and as we can not succeed without universal cooperation, I maintain that each must help the other, as described in the grand old saying, "United we stand, divided we fall."

Therefore let us approach the future confidently and with no misgivings, secure in the belief that, although we may make mistakes, our aims and purposes are sound, and may we realize the consummation of an everlasting peace, in which we and all the peoples of the world shall participate.

Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following letters and resolutions:

AUBURN, N. Y., March 30, 1917.

Hon. NORMAN J. GOULD, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting held this evening, attended by 3,000 citizens of Auburn, certain resolutions regarding the present situation of the affairs of the Nation were unanimously adopted, a copy of which was ordered to be sent to you. No dissent from the resolutions was manifested in any way, and great enthusiasm was shown in their adoption and throughout the meeting. As secretary of the meeting I have the honor herewith to hand you a copy of the resolutions.

Believe me, sir,
Yours, sincerely, ROBERT HASTINGS NICHOLS.

Whereas our Government in severing diplomatic relations with Germany gave notice that if the illegal submarine attacks which Germany was threatening to make upon our ships should, in fact, be made, necessary steps to resist such attacks would be taken; and

Whereas many such attacks have since been made, resulting in the sinking of the Algonquin, the City of Memphis, the Illinois, the Vigilancia, the Healdton, and other vessels, with the resultant loss of many American lives; and

Whereas, besides murdering our citizens, restricting our commerce by illegal submarine warfare, and destroying our ships, the German Government has attempted to array against us the friendly powers of Japan and Mexico in a plot to dismember our Nation; and

Whereas by these and other hostile acts Germany is now virtually making war against the United States; and

Whereas we believe with President Monroe that "we must support our rights or lose our character, and with it our liberties": Now, therefore be it

Resolved by citizens of Auburn, N. Y., in public meeting assembled—

1. That we approve the action of the President in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, in deciding to arm American vessels, and in calling Congress in special session.

2. That we declare our deep conviction that the principles of national conduct governing Germany's actions in the present war are inconsistent with the principles of democracy and with the purposes and aspirations of this Republic, and we hold that the time has now come when it is the duty of this Nation to take part in the common task of defending civilization and human liberty against Germany's military aggression.

3. That we call upon Congress, when assembled, to declare that by the acts of Germany a state of war does now exist between that country and the United States.

4. That we look to our Government for prompt, vigorous, and courageous leadership for the effective protection of American rights in this crisis.

5. That we urge the immediate enactment of a universal military training law, providing for a national defense based on the duty of every able-bodied citizen to share in the protection of our country and in the maintenance of its high ideals.

6. That we publicly affirm our loyalty and pledge our support to the President of the United States, the constitutional leader of the Nation, and that we hold ourselves ready to respond to our National and State Governments for such services as may be required of us in the defense of our country and the enforcement of the rights of its citizens; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions shall be sent to the President of the United States, to the governor of this State, to the Senators from the State of New York, and to our Representative in Congress.

AUBURN, N. Y., March 31, 1917.

Hon. NORMAN J. GOULD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN GOULD: At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Auburn, N. Y., held March 28, 1917, at which there were present about 300 of the leading business and professional men of the city, the following resolution was adopted practically unanimously. I am forwarding it to you as an expression of the sentiment of the representative men of this community:

"The Chamber of Commerce of the city of Auburn, N. Y., and its guests assembled at their annual banquet, do now approve the action of the President of the United States in severing diplomatic relations with Germany and in arming our ships, and we do solemnly record our purpose, individually and collectively, to support the President and those in authority with him in whatever acts they deem best for our country in this its time of grave danger and great opportunity, and we do declare it to be our determination to make all sacrifices necessary to protect our country's liberty and maintain its honor.

"We urge upon the Congress to take positive and vigorous action in the support of the President in all ways, including the passage of a universal military service law, to the end that we may appear, as we are, in fact, a united people.

"We urge upon all citizens of this community and upon all groups of citizens, organized for whatever purpose, to unite with us in carrying out the purpose here expressed.

"We request the president of this chamber of commerce to appoint a committee representative of the business, financial, and professional interests of the community to cooperate with similar committees for the moblization of our civic strength and its most effective enlistment in the service of our country."

Respectfully,

THE AUBURN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
C. G. ADAMS, Secretary.

GENEVA, N. Y., March 31, 1917.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at a meeting called by Congressman NORMAN J. GOULD, held in Geneva, N. Y., on Saturday, March 31, 1917, by the representatives of the Republican Party of the thirty-sixth congressional district of New York, comprised of Wayne, Yates, Ontario, Cayuga, and Seneca Counties. Dr. John Parmenter, Geneva, N. Y., was elected chairman of the conference and Arthur E. Blauvelt, Port Byron, N. Y., secretary, and they were accordingly instructed to wire the adopted resolution to President Wilson:

"Resolved, That we hold and affirm that when our rights as a Nation are invaded, our country is invaded; when our citizens' lives are sacrificed in violation of international law and in defiance of civilization, as they have been, that a state of war already exists between this country and Germany and the only honest, courageous, and self-respecting course for Congress to pursue is to declare that a state of war does exist between the United States and Germany, which state of war has been created by the acts of the German Empire itself despite the tireless efforts of President Wilson to maintain peace and friendly relations with the German people.

"Whereas this country is now facing a great international crisis owing to the European war and the general unheaval throughout the world; and

"Whereas in this country we have no large standing army and must depend upon the individual citizen to defend the life of the Nation in time of war: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we favor the pasage by Congress of a universal military training law providing for training designed to educate, develop, strengthen, and make efficient the citizenship of the Nation, as the wisest and most efficient means of preparing the country for self-defense in case of a foreign invasion; and be it further

"Resolved, That we indorse the action of Gov. Charles S. Whitman and the State legislature and congratulate them on leading the other States in the Nation in placing upon the statute books laws providing for physical and military training."

Resolution Adopted by Former Residents of the Province of Croatia, Austria-Hungary.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. W. FRANK JAMES,
OF MICHIGAN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 13, 1917.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a copy of resolutions adopted at a patriotic meeting held last Sunday, April 8, 1917, by former residents of the Province of Croatia, Austria-Hungary:

CALUMET, MICH., April 9, 1917.

DEAR MR. JAMES: Inclosed find the resolution which was accepted at a mass meeting of our people. Please have it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

We all approve of your stand taken by you in the war issue.

Yours, very truly, Rev. JOS. MEDIN.

CALUMET, MICH., April 8, 1917.

Whereas this meeting of the Croatian citizens of Calumet and vicinity has been called for the purpose of making it known to the President and all loyal citizens of the United States as to the attitude and stand of the Croatians in this great European conflict into which this country is about to enter as an ally of those countries that are now fighting for liberty and rights of the small nationalities; and

Whereas Croatians have for centuries in their native land been fighting for liberty and the preservation of their nationality against the tyranny and oppression of emperors and kings; and

Whereas a great many Croatian patriots have died and sacrificed themselves for the cause of liberty and their nationality; and

Whereas it has been the dream of every true Croatian that some day their country would become free and independent and would again take its place alongside of other great nationalities of Europe and arise to the position that they once held: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, Croatian citizens of the United States, who were former subjects of Austria and those of us who are not yet naturalized, do hereby declare that we are in absolute accord and sympathy with the declaration of the President and Congress of the United States, and we tender the President and Congress our enthusiastic and whole-hearted support and assistance in any demand that they may make upon us in this war that is now being waged for freedom of mankind and the triumph of liberty and justice. We consider this a great opportunity and privilege to assist this country in waging war against our former oppressors and those responsible for the suppression of the Croatian and other Slav nationalities of Europe.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. L. W. FAIRFIELD,
OF INDIANA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Speaker, it had not been my purpose to address the House at this time, and were it not that the question at issue is of such vast moment I should hesitate to say anything before this body where I have been a Member but a single week. Certainly, however, under the stress of such circumstances it will not be considered out of place for one who is just beginning his congressional career to express his convictions upon this bill.

My own judgment had been that our first duty is to put this country in a state of preparedness. For several years I have thought it necessary to make adequate preparation for any contingency that in all human probability would arise. We had been comforting ourselves with the belief that our own idealism had become the idealism of the world, when the great war burst upon us, and we began to understand how little we were conscious of the movement of events in Europe. Indeed our people were intoxicated with our own idealism and from platform and through magazine we were assured that a great war could never occur. How little we understood the temper of Europe is evident from the sequence of events. I had thought it wise for us to refrain from engaging in this contest until we had made some adequate preparation for defense. Then, too, my people from my own district—good people, patriotic people, God-fearing men and women—have protested against entrance into this war. My own training in youth led me to believe early that all war is wrong, that the principle of nonresistance is the only principle that is in harmony with the teachings of the Nazarene. The wider knowledge of the influences that are at work in the world has led me to believe that war is sometimes necessary, even righteous, so that while my feelings protest against the necessity which arises, my judgment and my conscience teach me to believe that my early training should not always be followed.

It is not my purpose to review in detail the events that have led to this unhappy situation. They are common knowledge. My own judgment is that a majority of this House sincerely desire peace were peace possible with any sense of honor and safety for the future. But, Mr. Speaker, the situation is grave in the extreme, and while many people insist that our course has not been absolutely neutral—and I agree with them in that contention—it is yet true that conditions have arisen which have determined my action. May we not look for a moment at the situation? We are already at war with Germany. Whatever mistakes have been made or whatever course might have been pursued, it is now too late to retreat. Through our executive department we are assured that every effort has been made to keep us out of war, that our rights have been repeatedly violated; and while others may have violated our rights they have not done so to the degree in which Germany, with her ruthless campaign, has set aside all the principles of international law.

Already our ships are armed. The President, in his message to Congress, has recited the causes and the purposes for which he asks us to go to war. This is not a war on the German people; this is a war against an autocratic government that will not listen to the judgment and reason and conscience of mankind, but persists in ruthlessly violating our most sacred rights. I had hoped that when Germany ceased her submarine warfare that our Government would exact from every other country the same measure of respect for international law and trusted the forbearance of our people until such effort had been made. But Germany would not wait. We have broken off international relations with her. Her representatives to this Government have been sent across the seas. Our merchant ships have been armed. Some of them have been sunk; ships carrying supplies to the suffering Belgians have been ruthlessly fired upon and sunk. These actions, so out of harmony with all the dictates of humanity, are surely ample justification for a declaration that a state of war exists.

The only reason I could allege for voting against this resolution would be that we might defer the action until better prepared to assert our rights. But we are in war now with Germany. The executive branch of the Government is conducting that war. By an overwhelming vote the Senate of the United States has declared in its favor. Until that action had been taken I had hoped that there might be some solution of our difficulty. But now, with ourselves involved and two-thirds of our Government declaring that there is no other course, that every resource has been exhausted, that only the arbitrament of war is left, it is manifestly the duty of this House to concur in this resolution. I therefore vote "aye."

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOREN E. WHEELER,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, during the last session of Congress I voted consistently for those measures which I felt would tend to better prepare this Nation to meet the crisis which apparently the majority of this House now deem inevitable. I voted for those bills because I believed the greatest guaranty for peace for any nation is preparedness to resist assaults from without and treachery from within.

When in the closing days of the session the President of the United States proposed armed neutrality as a possible prevention of open conflict with the Imperial German Government, I supported such a measure, being firm in my conviction that we should resort to all honorable means to keep this Nation from being hurled into the maelstrom of Europe.

But after only 18 days of trial of armed neutrality we are called upon to declare that policy impractical and to announce that a state of war exists.

In my opinion a state of war does not now exist between the United States and any European Government and will not exist until we so decree.

Therefore, as a Representative of the people of the twenty-first district of the State of Illinois, I would, in view of my convictions, be violating my oath of office if I voted for this measure.

And while I register my protest against this entangling alliance which may not only cause millions of our boys to be slaughtered in the trenches of Europe and compel us to abandon the Monroe doctrine, which has been a bulwark against European invasion of this hemisphere, yet I hereby pledge myself in the event we are plunged into this great crucible of war to make whatever sacrifices are demanded of me, and to use all my energy and all my power to the end that our efforts will not only be crowned with success but with honor to our country.

In the first place, this European war is, in my estimation, the most useless and senseless, as well as the most horrible and uncalled for, conflict ever waged.

It was founded upon mere pretext. Not one of the great European powers now at war could enter an arbitration court with clean hands. Subterfuge after subterfuge was resorted to by those Governments in an effort to convince the people of their respective countries that their cause was a righteous one.

But false statements will never balance an account. The people can not always be deceived, and when the day of awakening comes it will bring with it riot and revolution and the consequent overthrowing of European Governments.

I realize that many of our greatest citizens and statesmen feel that we owe it to humanity to enter this war, and they can recite many instances of cruelty to support their contention. But these cruelties were not confined to any one nation.

I contend that if we went to war simply because we have a technical right to do so, we should not only declare war against Germany but also against Great Britain and Mexico.

But people are often biased in their judgment or influenced by their sympathy and their interests. In my consideration of this question I was free from bias or prejudice.

I have read and reread the message of our President. In it he states that one of the main reasons why we should declare war against Germany is that the Imperial Government has announced certain war zones in which she sinks all ships without notice and destroys lives of Americans and other neutrals; and in this war of destruction she relies upon the submarine. That is our case against Germany and the grounds upon which we are asked to enter this terrible war. And while I am holding no brief for the Imperial Government I desire, in order to make plain my position in the matter, to state the other side of the controversy.

The first war zone to be established by the warring nations was declared by Great Britain on November 4, 1914, and became effective the following day. Only one day of grace was given American shipping interests to adjust their trade and schedules. This order closed the whole of the North Sea. It was aimed at the north of Scotland route around the British Isles to Denmark, Holland, Norway, Sweden, and the Baltic Sea. It notified all neutral shipping that it would enter that field at its own peril.

Three months later, on the 4th day of February, 1915, the German Government established what it declared to be a war zone; but its order became effective 12 days later, giving American shipping interests nearly two weeks instead of one day to prepare for this condition. The German war zone covered the English channel and the waters around the British Isles.

Jointly these two orders closed practically all of the European waters. The lanes of travel which Germany wanted open England closed, and the lanes of ocean travel which England wanted open Germany declared closed.

Both of these orders were declared by our Government as illegal and contrary to all international law. They were both violations of the principles of humanity.

But the element of instrumentality seems to have had great weight in determining the status of the two offenders. England resorted to the use of hidden mines to make her order effective, while Germany called into use its flotilla of submarines.

International law is against the placing of submerged mines in the high seas, and it also fails to recognize the right to take human lives without notice by the use of submarines. Here again the status of both offenders appears the same.

If a ship strikes a mine and is sunk—and many have been—there is no submarine close by to see that the crew and passengers are saved. The ship goes down, and those whom it does not carry with it are left to shift for themselves in the open sea. Could a more ruthless warfare than this be conceived? On the other hand, our daily papers carry numerous accounts of the rescue of crews and passengers by submarines.

It is true that the figures presented to Congress show that many more lives have been lost and more ships sunk by the use of submarines than by mines. But the reason for that is plain. We sanctioned the establishment of the war zone by Great Britain, but our shipping interests were ordered to ignore the one established by Germany. Thus it is evident that had our ships used the zone as declared unsafe by Great Britain there would have been a greater number of vessels sunk and a greater number of American lives lost.

We insisted upon respect for our rights by one nation but not the other. Had we been neutral and, after declaring both war zones as illegal, kept our shipping from both territories, the war zones would have been abolished in short time and this controversy never would have endangered the peace of our people.

There are in my district many patriotic people who believe we should go to war, but I feel they have been misled by statements appearing in the public press and by lack of knowledge of the true facts.

I represent people who not only can but who do think for themselves. They are people in all walks of life; people characterizing all that is good and all that is commendable and worthy in a Nation of wonderful people. And in my vote here to-day I shall not only voice my own convictions but I honestly believe those of a majority of my home people as well. They are the ones who must pay the price in money, bereavement, and suffering, and all that war implies.

If we enter this war, we must accept certain responsibilities that go with such action. We can not as a Nation be a slacker. We will be required to give all financial and physical aid possible to our allies. We will need 500,000 men to protect our interests at home. Two million more will be recruited and sent into the trenches of Europe.

This means that over 4,000 young men from my own and every other congressional district in the United States will be sent 4,000 miles away to fight a battle that is strictly European and which should be confined to Europeans. And it will mean drafting in the event there is not a ready response on the part of our young men.

Of course there are some to whom this untold suffering and sacrifice of human lives, which must result from our entering this greatest holocaust of all history, will bring prosperity; but they will not be the ones who will shoulder the musket. They will not be the ones who will enlist as privates. They will no doubt be brave enough to seek and accept commissions that will not require their presence on the firing line or in the immediate vicinity of the danger zone.

But what of the poor broken-hearted widow pleading with the Government to send her the mangled remains of her husband from across the sea; the grief-stricken mother who has just learned of the death of her brave boy; of the thousands of cold and hungry children who will be deprived of their support; of the millions of mothers, daughters, and sweethearts who will bravely carry their broken hearts to their graves? To these the war will bring no prosperity, but these are the ones who must pay the price of our error.

But if err we must, I can only say in the words of the immortal Lincoln:

> Having thus chosen our course, without guile and with pure purpose, let us renew our trust in God and go forward without fear and with manly hearts.

I realize I shall be criticized by many, branded as disloyal by others, and condemned by some of the press, but, believing as I do, and after careful and mature deliberation, having reached a decision, it would be cowardly and disloyal to vote contrary to my convictions.

Whatever the future may develop, I shall, to the best of my ability and understanding, be governed by the solemn oath I have taken as a Member of this House of Representatives, and without fear or apology perform what I believe to be my solemn duty to my country and to humanity when I vote against this resolution.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBERT F. POLK,

OF DELAWARE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if in the history of our country a matter of as grave import has ever come before Congress as the resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and the Imperial German Government, now under consideration, and demanded cooler or calmer judgment by those whose duty it is to pass upon it. I have tried to give it the most serious consideration, so that in my final conclusion and vote I would do my duty to the people of the district which I represent, and not only to that district but to my country as well.

I have examined the whole question from every angle and have considered it from every point of view. I have not been and am not unmindful of the horrors of war and all it entails; not unmindful of the heartaches caused by the broken family circles; of the hardships of those who will, if war comes, fight their country's battles; of the lives that will necessarily be sacrificed; of the cost to the country in every way. All these things have appealed to my love and tenderness for my fellow man and almost make me hesitate.

But, on the other hand, there is a duty we owe our country. Germany has infringed upon our rights upon the high seas; has destroyed the property of our citizens; has intrigued against and attempted to disturb our peaceful relations with other friendly governments; has in the most brutal and inhuman manner taken the lives of our citizens.

As terrible as are the horrors of war, to my mind the horror of war would be as nothing compared to the humiliating position in which this country would be placed among the nations of the world should we meekly submit, without resentment by force, to the indignities, insults, and injuries we have suffered at the hands of the German Government. We would be held in utter contempt by all the peoples of the world, and in the future it would be worse than useless to attempt settlement of any trouble with any other government by diplomacy, because, knowing our meek submission in this, they would concede nothing, believing we would again submit rather than fight, and the result would be that we would either be compelled to submit or fight and keep on fighting to settle every dispute that might arise. I believe resentment by force now will insure a proper respect by other governments for our rights as a Nation in the future, and secure a lasting peace. While the sacrifice may be great, are not the ends to be accomplished worth it? Should we meekly submit now it would be a blot upon the bright pages of the history of our country, and it would cause a blush of shame to mount the cheeks of coming generations.

For two years this Government has tried every means known to diplomacy to peacefully settle the matters in dispute between the German Government and the United States. Our patient President, to avoid war with Germany, has accepted assurance after assurance—assurances given only to be broken—until it became evident that in order to retain the respect of the other nations of the earth it would be necessary for this country to secure by force that which it failed to secure by diplomacy.

We have borne insult and injury at the hands of the German Government so long and patiently that it makes one wonder if the spirit that animated our forefathers still lives; but I believe the American people have reached the limit of patience and will by their representatives say to the German Government before this session adjourns to-day, "Thus far hast thou gone, but no farther," and to the world, "Do not mistake patience for cowardice; the American people will fight when their cause is just and settlement can not be obtained by peaceful means. Then we are not too proud to fight."

Mr. Speaker, after the most serious and conscientious consideration I feel that I would not be doing my full duty to my country if I did not vote for the resolution. Therefore I shall vote for the resolution.

Emergency Bond Issue.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. IRA G. HERSEY,
OF MAINE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 13, 1917.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, the Congress has declared war against Germany and authorized and directed the President to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the reserves of the Army to carry on war against the Imperial German Government, and to the success of this coming conflict we have pledged all the resources of the country. To-day we are called upon to make good that pledge.

The President as Commander in Chief has called for the first great war appropriation—the enormous sum of $7,000,000,000. The bill comes from the great Committee on Ways and Means with a favorable report, and, in my opinion, it ought to receive a prompt and unanimous passage in this House.

Those who object to this bill say that we should have from the President more detailed information as to how and when and where this money is to be expended. The bill provides that $3,000,000,000 is to be used in extending credits to foreign governments, $2,000,000,000 for expenses for the national security and defense, and $2,000,000,000 to meet public expenditures.

Congress is the legislative branch of the Government. It can never take the command of the Army and the Navy. It is not, in days of war, a board of strategy. Upon the President, his Cabinet, and advisers must of necessity devolve the exclusive control and conduct of the war. Its details and secrets must be denied to the Congress. We ought not to interfere with or obstruct the plans of the President without the most clear and imperative reasons.

Some one must have the charge and direction of the forces of this Nation in this great war. The Constitution has made plain who should be commander. I shall therefore vote for this bill as it comes from the committee because it is a prompt and plain notice to the world that the great resources of the American Republic are freely and fearlessly given to protect and defend the rights of our citizens and to defeat this enemy of all mankind.

The Response of the Orthodox Jew to the Call of the President.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 14, 1917.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the people of the Jewish faith in this country are awake to the needs of the hour, as is shown by two addresses delivered in the past 48 hours in New York City. One is entitled—

"THE RESPONSE OF THE ORTHODOX JEW TO THE CALL OF THE PRESIDENT."

[Delivered by Emanuel Hertz, president of Washington Heights Congregation, during the services on the 7th day of Passover, Friday, April 13, 1917.]

On this glorious day when the Passover celebration has reached its climax, being the anniversary of the day when we as a liberated people crossed the Red Sea, it is proper that orthodox Jewry should make such an unequivocal declaration of loyalty to our country and to our flag that it should echo and reecho through all the corners of the world. What, then, is the position of the orthodox Jew on this most momentous of world problems since the diaspora with which he is this day confronted? What has he to say at a time when what he has been hoping for, praying for, yearning for, dying for, may be granted to him as a result of this world-rocking war? Palestine, the unattainable, may be returned to him as a result of a universal readjustment of nations, of peoples, and of boundaries; when he may receive the right to go and to live in every portion of the world. What has he to say at a time when the country which has been so good and so just and so kind to him has risen in its might to her rightful stature among the nations of the world and has joined the war of liberation and of democratization for the sake of the oppressed and persecuted of every land; when America, the young giant which Washington molded into a nation out of a few unwilling colonies, and which Jefferson made continental, and which was united by Lincoln, was, by President Wilson, after fusing its various strata of citizenship, made to join the forces of right in order to crush the forces of reaction? The orthodox Jew, who has been the custodian of the decalogue, the promulgator of religion, the preacher of ethics, the exponent of toleration and of brotherly love, has he nothing to say on this occasion?

Has the wise man of antiquity, the philosopher of the ages, the eternal Jew, nothing by way of comment, nothing by way of declaration or announcement? Can he only think, write, create, and prosper intellectually in adversity? At a time when our offshoots, the religions which owe their origin directly or indirectly to the people of the Book, vie with one another in declaring their allegiance, their joy at the prospect of this conflict, when our own reform congregations hasten to bedeck their houses of worship with the Stars and Stripes and keep their congregants spellbound listening to patriotic addresses and singing the Battle Cry of Freedom and the national airs, are we alone to remain silent? Is our patriotism to be inferred and surmised? No! a thousand time, no! The people of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob have ever been heroic. The people of Joseph, of Moses, and of Aaron have ever been law-abiding and saintly. The people of Joshua, of David, of Gideon, and of the Macabees have ever been heroic and martial—when the fight was for the Lord and for his commandments. And in this greatest of all wars, in this let us hope last bloody conflict for the liberation and enfranchisement of humanity, let every orthodox Jew, in the name of his Bible, his liturgy, his prophets, his rabbis, his leaders, his thinkers, his poets, and his dreamers; in the name of his martyrdom of 2,000 years, rise in his might and declare before the whole world that this fight is his fight; this war is his war; that the United States, which was builded and founded upon the Book of Books, is his United States, his land, his home, and that he will fight and die for it as he fought and died for Jerusalem of old, as he fought and died for his own native land. We are 95 per cent of the Jewish race—all orthodox, fully a million and more in the United States—and we, with God's help, will be heard from. Let each man in his way, in his special field of endeavor, do his share toward upholding the United States in this monster struggle. Let him help the land which has given him a home and a chance such as he never had, the land which has made him free, which has made him rich—let him now return at least a tithe of what he has received. Let him proclaim in the burning accents of the poet, "This is my own, my native land." And if I may be permitted to paraphrase, I ask, "Lives there a Jew with a soul so black who never to himself had said, 'This is my own, my native land?'" No; we will show it by our declarations, by our contributions in men and treasure, by our counsel, by our assistance of the Government in State and Nation, which have been better to us than any other in any age.

We will show that we have deserved all we received. We will thus reawaken the spirit of old and will fight like lions for our homes. We will follow to the ends of the earth. Let the Union, the Army, and the Navy but lead and we will follow anywhere—everywhere. We will open our homes, our synagogues, our schools, our hospitals, our institutions to the call of our country, and show our critics, if there be any left, that God Almighty never made a better American than is the orthodox Jew and his American children, residing in and part and parcel of America. We need no leaders of our own; we need no spokesmen, no intermediaries; our President, the people's President, is our spokesman, is our leader, and with him we stand, and with him we go wherever he leadeth. We will demonstrate that the orthodox Jew is the pure, unalloyed, unqualified American, who has been in the making these 140 years. And if the descendants of the settlements of Plymouth Rock and of Jamestown do not hesitate to pronounce and reiterate their loyalty to the flag and to the country, we need not hesitate to think and talk and reiterate our loyalty each morning and evening—even as we repeat our devotions every morning and every evening—with all our hearts and all our minds and all our souls. The Jew loves to repeat, reiterate, summarize. Look at our prayer book, look at the famous summaries in the Bible. Let us then repeat our loyalty. And what better rounding out of our daily and Sabbath prayers than the singing of our national hymns at their conclusion. Glory to the God of Israel and loyalty to America—what an inspiration! Let us not have our loyalty and our patriotism, as Dr. Jowett said the other day, as some people have their religion, like a coal box which may be moved from room to room without effecting the atmosphere in the least and which is a cold and chilling quantity. Let us ignite that coal, let that coal burn to its fullest extent, and we have wrought a marvelous change. Let not our patriotism be like the coal box filled with unignited coal—let it be burning, flaming, warming, invigorating patriotism. Let our patriotism be aflame, let it burn forth in song, in volunteers, in donations, in turning our inventive genius to the service of the Federal Government; then, and not till then, shall we have done our full duty.

Let not this chance—the last—be wasted. We dare not be guilty of such neglect, of such criminal neglect. Let the father tell his son, the mother her daughter, the duty of the hour; let us teach our children, young and old, the national airs, the national aims, the national hopes, and the national aspirations. Let us all act as though we were an indistinguishable portion of the Union. Let not our stepbrothers and stepsisters of the faith gather all the reward or assume all the glory. We are the great bulk, the great body of Israel. Let us speak as one; let no one presume to speak for us. Let us have no apologists, no defenders; we need none. Let the great body of the Jewish community, which is orthodox, come into its own; let it speak in the language of the Book; and let it take the first place in the front of the procession leading to universal liberty of thought, of speech, and of action.

President Wilson has spoken as no other man has spoken in this land since Abraham Lincoln. He has called upon all to stand up and be counted. He said, like the sorely tried lawgiver of old on beholding the idol and its worshipers, "Whosoever is on the Lord's side, let him come unto me." And when the President pointed to the crimes of the modern Moloch, who threatens to destroy all civilization, then from all the remotest corners of the land came pæans of joy and words of thanksgiving at our moral deliverance. Like the priests of old, together and at the head of the tribe of Levi; like the Jewish patriots of the War of the Independence; like the Jewish warriors of 1812, 1848, and 1861, it behooves us, the people from Mount Sanai, to lead all the rest in response to this call of our President to destroy the idol which stands for tyranny, for oppression, for injustice, and for the enslaving of the body and the destruction of the soul of mankind.

Let me quote a poem which was read by Congressman ISAAC SIEGEL in the House of Representatives on April 5, when the war resolution was under debate. It is entitled "America, My Country," by Grondahl.

"AMERICA, MY COUNTRY."

[By Jens K. Grondahl.]

America, my country, I come at thy call,
I plight thee my troth and I give thee my all;
In peace or in war I am wed to thy weal,
I'll carry thy flag through the fire and the steel;
On sea nor on land shall it suffer disgrace,
Unsullied it floats o'er our peace-loving race;
In reverence I kneel at sweet liberty's shrine—
America, my country, command, I am thine.

America, my country, brave souls gave thee birth,
Who yearned for a haven of freedom on earth,
And when thy dear flag to the winds was unfurled
There came to thy shores the oppressed of the world;
Thy milk and thy honey flow freely for all—
Who takes of thy bounty shall come at thy call,
Who quaffs of thy nectar of freedom shall say,
"America, my country, command, I obey."

America, my country, thy flag I adore,
It glories in peace but it fears not in war;
When tyrants would trample its folds in the dust,
Old Glory, undaunted, is true to its trust;
Its stars ever twinkle from liberty's dome
A message of hope to mankind through the gloom;
And children of men bless the red, white, and blue—
America, my country, the tried and the true.

America, my country, now come is thy hour—
The Lord of Hosts recks on thy courage and power;
Humanity pleads for the strength of thy hand
Lest liberty perish on sea and on land;
Thou guardian of freedom, thou keeper of right,
When liberty bleeds there is task for thy might;
"Divine right" of kings or our freedom must fall—
America, my country, I come at thy call.

The second address, Mr. Speaker, was delivered in the Temple Emanu-El, Forty-third Street and Fifth Avenue, New York City, by one of America's most famous preachers, and is reported in to-day's New York Times, as follows:

CALLS ON PACIFISTS TO FORM WAR LEAGUE—RABBI SILVERMAN URGES EMERGENCY FEDERATION TO TRANSFORM AT ONCE—WILL MARRY NO SLACKERS—BRANDS AS "BORDERING ON TREASON" CONDUCT OF MEN WHO HIDE BEHIND WOMEN'S SKIRTS.

Preaching on "The kind of patriotism that America needs," at services yesterday in Temple Emanu-El commemorating the last day of the Passover, Dr. Joseph Silverman called on the Emergency Peace Federation to disband at once or to reorganize as an emergency league for war; branded neutrality and pacifism as akin to treason in the present crisis, and in a vigorous demand for a patriotic response to the needs of the Nation, no matter at what personal cost, pledged himself, with the hope that other ministers would join him, not to perform the marriage ceremony for any couple open to the suspicion that they sought to enter matrimony as a means for the man to escape military service for the United States.

Dr. Silverman spoke in response to the appeal of the recruiting committee of the mayor's committee on national defense for the support of the clergy in making April 19, the anniversary of the Battle of Lexington, "Wake-up America" day throughout the country. He took as a text Jeremiah xxix, 7: "Seek the welfare of the city whither I have banished you and pray in its behalf unto the Lord, for in its welfare shall ye fare well."

The prophet, he said, had appreciated that the nationality of Israel was at an end, perhaps for all time, but had realized that its mission was not political, but spiritual, and did not depend for its success on nationality. From that day to this, he said, the principle of seeking the welfare of the country of their adoption had been supreme among Israelites.

"The world conflict," said Dr. Silverman, "into which America has been forced by the deplorable but inevitable conflict between organized monarchies and organized democracies, calls not for ordinary patriotism but rather for the extraordinary patriotism made imperative by the conditions of the battle. Until now neutrality was a meritorious virtue; pacifism was borne with patience. The time has come when neutrality and pacifism are no longer virtues but border on treason.

"There is no call for an emergency peace federation, but rather for a league to aid war, and I for one, believing there are thousands who agree with me, call now on the federation to disband or to reorganize itself at once into a league for war.

"Because you have not yet heard the cannon's blast at your door, do not feel secure. At any moment the bombs may burst in the air overhead and drop destruction down upon your cities and homes. The submarine stiletto has been summoned from Europe and is now forging its way through the waters to stab our ships in their most vital spots. We are in a great universal holocaust, in which all sense of right, humanity, and law has been lost.

"This is a war for civilization and for world peace. It calls for the highest patriotism, a consecration of all citizens on the altar of humanity's needs. We are going forth in a holy crusade to resurrect the rights of humanity, which have been buried deep beneath the feet of tyranny. In such a time as this we need extraordinary patriotism. Not only must the soldier be fitted for his duties, but the country must be taught heroism. Are we a nation of heroes to-day? That remains to be seen. Can we echo the spirit of 1776, 'Give me liberty or give me death'? That was not a mere peroration of perfervid oratory, but the outburst of passion born of the conviction that liberty was an inalienable right."

Dr. Silverman referred to the Revolutionary heroes, and asked if America in these days could be untrue to their memory. He told of the purpose of the mayor's committee in setting aside "Wake-up America" day, and with a burst of feeling exclaimed:

"The call will go forth, 'Awake, America! Rouse ye to arms! The enemy is at your door!'"

The call for half a million men should be answered by two millions, Dr. Silverman said. Parents should emulate the Spartan mother and urge their children to do their duty.

"We have had a sad and sorry and piteous spectacle of cowardice," he continued, "when young men have gone in haste to the marriage bureau and have taken advantage of a technicality in a way that borders on treason to escape the service they should perform. I for one will not be a party to such treasonable conduct, and I hope the ministers of the country will join me in refusing to perform the marriage ceremony for couples who are under suspicion of entering matrimony that the man may escape military service."

Dr. Silverman said he hoped the women of the country would have the heroism to refuse to wed such cowards. In conclusion, he asserted that the country needed not only physical preparedness but mental and moral preparedness, for "you can not have heroism without morality." He admonished his hearers to do their part for an undivided country, in which there could be no race or class distinction.

The War Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,

OF NEW YORK.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, under the general leave to extend remarks on the war resolution, which passed this House on April 5, 1917, I deem it my duty to insert in the RECORD several articles which are a complete answer to those pacifists who have opposed war and are opposed to universal military training because it may involve "the taking of human life."

In the New York Times there recently appeared an article by George Kennan, one of the best known of the world's travelers and one of the greatest authorities on the question of Russia and its people. It is entitled—

"RUSSIA'S LESSON FOR PACIFISTS—THE GREAT REFORMS THERE WERE BROUGHT ABOUT BY THOSE WHO WERE WILLING TO FIGHT FOR LIBERTY."

[By George Kennan.]

NEW YORK, March 30, 1917.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Since the Russian revolution ended, two weeks ago, in the complete victory of the people and the establishment of a free form of government, half a dozen mass meetings have been held in New York to celebrate the success of the revolutionary movement and to rejoice over the triumph in Russia of the democratic principles for which our own country stands. Among the people who took part in these celebrations and rejoicings were hundreds of American pacifists, who seemed to be perfectly unconscious of the fact that they were applauding ideas and methods in Russia which they strenuously oppose and vehemently denounce in the United States. They declare here that the taking of human life in war is unjustifiable and wicked, but they celebrate a victory of democratic principles in Russia which was directly brought about by years of persistent fighting and taking of human life. Liberty in Russia was not won by pacifists and nonresistants; it was won by a whole generation of aggressive revolutionary fighters, who took human life without a moment's hesitation, and who died with arms in their hands. They were not "militarists," not lovers of fighting merely for the sake of fighting. Even the so-called "terrorists" were lovers of peace, but they loved justice and liberty more than peace. In a letter sent to the Czar, Alexander III, by the revolutionary executive committee on the 10th of March, 1881, the Russian revolutionists said:

"There is something higher than the most legitimate human feeling, and that is duty to one's own country—the duty for which a citizen must sacrifice himself and his own feeling, and even the feeling of others. We understand better than any one else can the waste of so much talent and energy in revolutionary warfare—the loss in bloody skirmishes of so much strength that, under other conditions, might have been expended in creative labor and in the development of the intelligence, the welfare, and the culture of the Russian people. Whence proceeds this lamentable necessity for bloody conflict? It arises, your Majesty, from the lack in Russia of a real Government, in the true sense of that word—a Government that shall give outward form to the aspirations of the people. We declare solemnly, before our native land and before the whole world, that our party will submit unconditionally to the decisions of a national assembly elected by the people, and that we will not allow ourselves in future to offer violent resistance to any government that the national assembly may sanction."

In the year 1882 the famous revolutionist, Anna Pavlovna Korba, was tried before the Governing Senate—the Russian Supreme Court—on the charge of being a traitor and a terrorist. At the end of the trial, when she was asked if she had any last words to say in her own defense, she replied as follows:

"I do not admit my guilt. I will, however, admit that I belong to the revolutionary party—the party of the will of the people—and that I believe in its principles and share its views. As for an organization that chooses and prefers a path of bloodshed, I do not know of any such organization, and I doubt whether any such organization exists. Such a party may arise in time, if the revolutionary movement extends; but if I be living when that time comes I will not belong to it. We do not adhere obstinately to terrorism. The hand that is raised to strike will instantly fall if the Government will change the political conditions of life. Our party has patriotic self-control enough not to take revenge for its bleeding wounds, but unless it proves false to the Russian people it can not lay down its arms until it has conquered for their people freedom and well-being.

"As a proof that the aims of our party are wholly peaceful I beg you to read the letter written to Alexander III soon after the 1st of March. You will see from it that we desire only reforms, but reforms that shall be sincere, complete, and vital."

These revolutionists were lovers of peace with liberty, but they were ready to fight for liberty if they could not get it in any other way.

At one of the recent mass meetings in New York called to celebrate the victory of the Russian revolutionists a placard bearing the following inscription was put up between two American flags on the wall at the back of the stage:

"The taking of human life is murder, whether it be taken by the individual, the State, or the Nation."

The word "murder" was in red capital letters more than a foot high. I do not know what was in the minds of the men who composed this inscription and put it up; but if it was intended to be, as it seemed to be, a declaration that the taking of human life in a fight for liberty or in a war against despotism is murder, it attacked the characters of thousands of revolutionists who fought for freedom in Russia and of millions of men who, with arms in their hands, are resisting German aggression in Russia, Belgium, and France. The audience which sat facing this "murder" placard was unmistakably a pacifist audience, and it seemed to be of opinion that "the taking of human life" in revolution or in war is murder, regardless of the circumstances and regardless of the object of the killing.

In defense of the thousands of Russian revolutionists who died fighting for freedom, I feel it to be my duty to protest against the pacifism which would characterize war for human rights as wholesale "murder." George Washington, who fought in a great Revolutionary War, was not a murderer. Abraham Lincoln, who, as Commander in Chief of the Union Armies, directed military operations in another great war, was not a murderer. The Russian revolutionists of 1905, whose fighting gave Russia her first Duma, were not murderers. And, finally, the liberty-loving soldiers of Petrograd, who fought with and killed the gendarmes and police of the Czar two weeks ago, were not murderers. They were true patriots, and by their fighting and killing they saved the fourth Duma, crushed the reactionary ministry, forced the abdication of the Czar, and won liberty for nearly 200,000,000 of people.

By no possible course of reasoning can the war against despotism in Russia be differentiated from the war against despotism in Belgium and France. If it would have been morally right for an American to join the revolutionists and fight for freedom in Russia, as Lafayette, a Frenchman, joined the revolutionists and fought for freedom in America, so it is morally right for an American, or for all Americans, to join the allies and fight for freedom in Europe.

GEORGE KENNAN.

Mr. Speaker, the Philadelphia Ledger recently contained an editorial which answered a number of questions which have been asked by a number of those who do not realize even now that war has been declared and that it is the duty of all citizens to support the country at this critical time with all their strength and with all their might in order that victory may be ours as quickly as possible and that we may be able to spare our Republic from a lengthy and drawn-out war. The editorial is as follows:

ANSWERED.

To the EDITOR OF THE PUBLIC LEDGER:

SIR: To you paid propagandists of warfare—

First. Will you tell the public to what extent your newspaper, like many others, is subsidized by the allies to preach war?

Second. Will you print the fact that the intelligent class does not want this war?

Third. Will you picture to these American mothers their sons, now in the glory of youth, returning crippled and useless?

Fourth. Will you admit, as you know, that this is a war of "wealth" attempting to pull the wool over labor's eyes?

Fifth. Will you, who are fighting so against capital punishment, denying our right to take another's life, explain the consistency whereby we can take the life of another because he is a foreigner?

Sixth. Will you gentlemen, who have had the advantage of a sociological training, which teaches that warfare is wrong, explain to the masses, who because of traditional reasons can not think for themselves, but must be led, that this war is not just, that Germany is like the drunkard who knows not what he is doing?

Seventh. Will you tell the people the truth? And then see whether they desire war. Will you print this?

I am not a socialist, an anarchist, or a pacifist. If this were really a patriotic war, I would go myself. I am voicing this on behalf of many thousands of intelligent people to a presumably intelligent newspaper.

EDWARD BARRINGTON.

PHILADELPHIA, April 3, 1917.

First. There is no such thing as "a subsidized press" in the United States, if periodicals like the late Fatherland are left out of the account. Even were it possible for the allies to purchase newspaper opinion in this country it would have been totally unnecessary, for its overwhelming weight has been on their side. Not one dollar has ever been paid or could be paid to this or any other honest newspaper for its opinions.

Second. We believe it to be an indisputable fact that "the intelligent class"—that is, the great mass of the American people—do not want war and have not sought it. But they join with heart and soul with the President in his conviction that "the right is more precious than peace," and they believe they are standing for the right.

Third. There is no disposition to minimize the horrors of war. They have been pictured only too vividly during the last two and a half years of German frightfulness.

Fourth. No intelligent man can read the President's address to Congress and believe that this is a "war of wealth." Did "wealth" sink the Lusitania, ravage Belgium, reestablish piracy on the high seas?

Fifth. There is no analogy between the deliberate taking of human life as a penalty for crime and the taking of human life in a war for the defense of civilization and human rights. Humane people abhor cruelty to animals, but they are not deterred by their humanity from taking up weapons of defense against a mad dog. Nor are they precluded from taking arms against a power that is running amuck throughout the world in a warfare against all mankind.

Sixth. The drunkard or the maniac may not "know what he is doing," but armed with deadly weapons he must be stopped by the most efficient means.

Seventh. This is the truth as the President, the Congress, and the people of America see it. America has not sought this war, but, "God helping her, she can do no other."

What universal military training really means has been explained by Porter Emerson Browne in the New York Globe in an article which reads as follows:

WHAT UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING REALLY MEANS.

[By Porter Emerson Browne.]

Among the sincere opponents of universal military training and service there seem to be three objections. The first is that a large Army is not necessary to our national existence.

Yet how are we to defend ourselves against large armies by any means other than a large Army? We have tried diplomacy. We have tried patience. We have tried forbearance. We have tried the precepts of humanity and the teachings of Christianity. We have tried turning the other cheek until, long ago, our supply of cheeks was exhausted. And all these means have failed. So how else can we defend ourselves, save by armies? And since we must have armies, how can they protect us unless they be equal or superior in size, equipment, and efficiency to those that may be or will be sent against us? You wouldn't ask 1 man to defend us against 10? Then why ask 1,000,000 to defend us against 10,000,000?

The second objection is that universal military training is undemocratic. Yet, when one considers carefully, what could be more democratic? Is it democratic to ask one man to give up his position, his friends, and his family and go out and risk his life in defense of other men who are unwilling to perform similar sacrifices? Have I any right to ask you to do what I myself am too cowardly, too selfish, or too lazy to do? Hardly! What is true democracy except that each individual stands ready and willing to do his part for the common good of the common country? Each man as good as the next, each man bearing his burdens, sharing his joys and his sorrows with the next.

The third objection is that universal military training will tend to make us militaristic.

Is this, again, borne out by fact? A standing army of great size—even a volunteer army of great size—might so tend. But that is because with such armies there are certain men in the country who are making a business of being soldiers, while others are making a business of not being soldiers. Thus as any man naturally takes a pride in his profession we find our citizenry dividing into two classes that develop logically along two diametrically antithetical lines—one to the business of war the other to the business of peace.

It is that very thing—that pulling apart in our national life—that we want to avoid. We want no large professional army. We want merely that all our citizens should be coalesced in the common cause and able to take care of themselves under any conditions and at any stage of the game. We don't want a divided country with a dual personality, half of us Napoleons and the other half Bryans. We want a Nation of George Washington—first in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of their countrymen.

By universal training—which, by the way, Washington himself advocated with all his strength—we can attain a solid and unified citizenship that can devote itself to protecting its country efficiently when protection is needed; and that can devote itself as earnestly and as successfully to peaceful pursuits in times of peace, and that can do both the better in that it has learned to think and feel and act under a mutual bond of common sympathy, ideals, and understanding.

There is no fear of militarism in such a plan. Militarism comes of caste rule. We have no caste in America. Militarism comes of the few being masters and the many slaves. We have neither masters nor slaves in America.

What those that advocate universal military training want, and all that they want, is to create for our national life, as we create for our private lives, a great, united family, each member of which will serve all the others bravely, fearlessly, and devotedly in times of danger as well as in times of peace. That is what they want; just that and no more.

Let me also call attention to part of an article which appeared in Scribner's Magazine, and written by the Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt entitled—

"NO DANGER OF OUR BECOMING 'MILITARISTIC.'"

[Franklin D. Roosevelt, in Scribner's Magazine.]

Certain professional peace theorists have with crafty cunning laid emphasis on the military feature of universal training. They have called up pictures of the omnipresent uniform, of the Cossack whip of olden days, of the military dictator. They forget that in a true republic service which is universal is of necessity voluntary—it is, in other words, the desire of the majority of the people themselves. If there be shirkers, if there be any who would still place the liberty of the individual—their own little right to go their own gait—above the liberty and the need and the safety of the community and of the Nation, then in their case alone can universal training be called compulsory. Few of us honestly fear that this Nation will ever become militaristic—the trend of our civilization is all the other way. Switzerland and Australia are examples of progressive democracy successfully armed against attack. And yet many of our prominent men have argued with me that our great size would preclude us from following these systems. They can understand training a hundred thousand men a year; they balk at half a million. They are the kind of people who would organize a well or two to supply a city block but who would be appalled at the thought of a municipal water system.

The primary object of universal training is, it is true, to create an organization which would be used as a whole body for national protection in time of war. The country needs for Army and Navy alone a trained reserve of at least 2,000,000 men. This is not merely my personal conviction, but is corroborated by the investigations and reports of men who would in a crisis be responsible for our safety. There is in addition the aspect of the benefits this training would give in time of peace. If every boy of 18 years of age were to give a year of his life to his Nation the advantage would be at least as much with him as with the country.

Mr. Speaker, it is our duty as citizens to seize every opportunity to teach the boys and girls of this Republic the meaning of real patriotism and in every possible way interest them in the recognition of the fact that genuine love of country and flag can only be shown by them when they reach maturity of age by being prepared to risk life and limb in order that there may be a continuance in this country of the enjoyment of those many liberties and privileges that free America has bestowed upon them, whether they first saw the light of day here or whether they have come to our country from abroad. We must awaken within them the realization that the man or woman who does not respond to the country's call in its hour of need is a traitor to the Nation and undeserving of American citizenship. Patriotism can best be demonstrated at the present time by each man doing his share in his particular sphere of life by more energetic and efficient work even though he may be unable on account of age or other physical disability to enlist in either the Army or the Navy and to fight for the United States. We must all learn to teach the rising generation that it must not forget the brave deeds of men like Nathan Hale, whose noble words, "I only regret that I have but one life to give for my country," should at the present time arouse the young generation to a similar feeling and patriotic self-denying desire to serve the Republic. Let us not forget, and let us endeavor to see that our children always remember Lawrence's words, "Don't give up the ship." And let us also remind them of the words of Secretary Dix, "If anyone attempts to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot."

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me read a poem entitled—

"THE HOUR'S NEED."

[J. G. Holland, in the Kansas City Star.]

God give us men. The time demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and willing hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
  Men whom the spoils of office can not buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
  Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
  And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
  In public duty and in private thinking.

Crop Production.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. L. C. DYER,
OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I wish to insert the following letter on crop production:

ANHEUSER-BUSCH BREWING ASSOCIATION,
St. Louis, Mo., April 14, 1917.

Hon. L. C. DYER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DYER: We respectfully call your attention to the inclosed editorial of the St. Louis Times. In addition to the facts brought out in editorial, we might add that erroneous statements have recently been given currency that millions of bushels of wheat are used in the manufacture of liquor. None is used in the preparation of beer, and inquiry shows none is used in the distillation of liquor. The principal grains used in the processes of either beer or liquor are barley, corn, and rice screenings.

Respectfully, ADOLPHUS BUSCH, III.

The article referred to by Mr. Busch is from the St. Louis Times of April 13, and is as follows:

SOME REMARKABLE "STATISTICS."

With amazement we observe that Government officials, newspaper correspondents, special writers, and numerous editors are swallowing whole and blood raw the remarkable statistics which the professional prohibitionists are handing out in Washington as an argument for the conservation of the country's cereal resources by the enactment of a law forbidding the manufacture of alcoholic beverages.

The latest figures furnished by these patriotic conservators of the Nation's food supplies were a terrific indictment of the criminal waste which accompanies the distillation and brewing of grains for the purpose of making beer and whisky.

Staff Correspondent Holmes, of the International News Service, yesterday forwarded to the St. Louis Times from the Capital the following codification of the figures arrayed in the interests of this life-saving measure:

"There has been placed before President Wilson and his Cabinet figures showing that by stopping the manufacture of liquor there will be an annual saving of 600,000,000 bushels of grain alone."

Now, are the figures precise? Are they measurably correct? Are they approximately accurate, or are they wantonly, incredibly, and astoundingly false?

In the last year, for which certified Government statistics furnish the facts, the distilling and brewing interests of the United States consumed 85,000,000 bushels of grain of all kinds.

In the distillation of spirits from grain the process of "cooking" improves the grain for stock-fattening purposes, and practically every grain of corn that goes into the bins of a distillery is eventually used for feeding cattle for the market.

These two facts put the "statistics" "placed before the President" pretty much in the position of an unarmed merchantman struck by a U-boat torpedo. But it is characteristic of the prohibition statisticians to deal in figures of this sort, and our wonder is not that they were furnished, but that they were accorded sufficient acceptance to be sent out from Washington for the consumption of the unthinking.

The fact remains that 85,000,000 bushels of grain are used annually in this country to produce alcoholics. A large portion of this consumption is conserved for the food uses of the people by feeding it to live stock. For the mere purposes of argument we will assume that 50,000,000 bushels—an estimate too high—are not saved for food in this manner.

This number of bushels would furnish each person in the country somewhat less than 1 ounce of flour or meal a day.

If it is deemed advisable by Congress to conserve this daily ounce of flour or meal per capita, by all means let Congress close down the breweries and shut up the distilleries, and let their armies of workers and the other armies in dependent occupations and the further armies of their children and wives do the best they can without a pay day.

But let not Congress do this in ignorance, based upon false statements made for interested purposes.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN F. WELTY,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to express my views upon the pending question as to whether a state of war exists between this country and the Imperial German Government, were it not for the fact that there seems to prevail what I believe to be a wrong impression as to the loyalty of the German people in this country. When diplomatic relations with Germany were about to be severed the foreign secretary of the Imperial German Government was quoted in press dispatches as saying: "There are a million Germans in the United States," the inference being obviously that they would be disloyal. According to the story, this brought forth the significant remark from the American ambassador that there are "a million lamppo ·3 in America."

The mind of the military autocracy in Germany can not understand why so many of their subjects have emigrated to the new world. They do not come here to escape those of their own class, but that they may obtain greater freedom of thought and action and escape the domination and exactions of the Hohenzollern despotism. As a class they are the most law-abiding citizens we have in this country. We need never entertain any doubt as to the loyalty of the German people who have applied for and accepted citizenship in our land.

The annual reports of the Immigration Bureau show that no other nation has so large a number who immigrate to this country, and no other nation has so large a percentage of its people who become naturalized and are now citizens. They are attracted by our form of democratic government, and it is their home and the home of their children. Statistics show that they accept our institutions, language, and customs more readily than any people of any other nationality—and why? It was to escape the Kaiser and his military despotism. And do you now tell me that they will not fight for their rights and defend this country against the outrages and murders of the autocracy from which they escaped? They will not only fight for their rights as God has given them light to see that right, but will be found in the first ranks to carry the banner of freedom across the seas, if need be, to free their own brethren from the yoke of the Hohenzollern. "Divine right" to rule, when that right is not granted by the people, is unthinkable to the German who has gained his residence in a free country.

They love peace and will endure much before engaging in a conflict against their own blood and would rather prefer to escape this war. But did we ever gain anything worth while except by civil conflict? The principles in our Bill of Rights which we so much enjoy are the result of civil strife. Taxation without representation ended as the result of a civil war. The freedom of the seas was fought out by peoples of the same blood. The freedom of the black man is the result of civil war.

And, Mr. Speaker, did we not find the German hand clasping the sons of Britain during the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812? The soldiers of the South during our Civil War repeatedly said that they "could lick" the Union Army in two weeks were it not for the Germans.

Mr. Speaker, can it be said that the German mind and heart will shrink at this hour and fail to make the necessary sacrifice? The foreign secretary of the Imperial German Government will find the million Germans in America in the front ranks, and the benediction after this war, as in every war we have fought in this country, will be upon that class as much as upon any class. Ah, I can now see column after column marching toward the trenches, and I find on French soil one-fourth of the American soldiers of German blood carrying the Starry Banner of Freedom "on to Berlin," and plant it, not "unter den Linden" but far above, so that all the world may know that we are brothers in the eyes of Him who sits upon the throne of thrones. Pray tell me, sirs, were the Germans ever unfaithful to their trust? Show me before I shall believe.

My experience as a prosecuting officer in the Commonwealth of Ohio and on behalf of the Federal Government has convinced me that there is no class on earth who will sooner convict an offender against the laws of our country than the juror of German descent. They believe in law and order and will be true to their oath of allegiance.

I do not want to support this resolution if I can avoid doing so. I love peace and shrink from war. I have spent sleepless hours brooding over this very question—alone with my conscience and my God.

I spent hours on the floor of the Senate when they considered this joint resolution, and was hoping for some argument to justify my vote against it; and, Mr. Speaker, no man has been more attentive on the floor of this House during the debates on this resolution. I was glad that entire freedom was given both sides and hoped that the opponents might produce some fragment of an excuse which could justify my mind and conscience if I voted against this resolution.

But, with all due respect to the Senators and my colleagues who spoke against this resolution, I can not bring my mind in harmony with their minds in the face of the charges of the Foreign Relations Committee of the House, which none here have contradicted as being untrue.

I was somewhat interested in the proposition of submitting this question to a vote of the people; but upon examination of the Constitution I find that power duly delegated by the people to Congress. We alone are the judges and can not shift or dodge this responsibility, even though our very souls tremble while being weighed in the balance of our judgments. We can no more shift this disagreeable duty than a juror drawn in a criminal case who would desire to refer the matter of guilt or innocence of the defendant to the people. It is a delegated authority. We alone are the judges, and anyone who attempts to transfer or avoid this duty is either ignorant of our fundamental law or a coward.

No one on the floor of the House has attempted to justify the insults and injuries of the Imperial German Government to citizens of our Government, but a number have advised further patience.

I wonder how long these gentlemen who so advise would want us to wait before we act upon this indictment, with its evidence submitted by the committee, who were in duty bound to submit the same correctly? Would they wait until 200 more were foully murdered? Or would they want us to wait until one of our own loved ones was a victim of the foul murder of the assassin who is to-day stalking in our midst on land and sea? Some of these pacifists seem to rest supinely, so long as the death blow is not aimed at their mother, their wife, or their child. They would not be heard to raise their hand so long as the murderer confined his operations to the neighbor's family across the street.

Mr. Speaker, we are one great political body and we can no more suffer an injury and injustice to any one citizen without affecting the whole political body than I can permit the severance of my little finger without injury to my whole body. Is that the logic of the gentlemen who so eloquently opposed this resolution? If so, how many amputations of their fingers would they suffer without even a protest? All? And then permit them to cut off the left hand and the right hand and the left foot and the right foot and fight with their stumps? Is the American soul so dead as to permit a condition of this kind? Have we become so mercenary as to value the dollar above the life of a human being? I hope not. I have heard it said that those Members of this House of German descent will vote in favor of this resolution because of the fear of being misunderstood. The gentlemen who make that remark do not understand the German mind. He does not act because of fear, but he acts because his soul within him is stirred and will fight to the last ditch, no matter what cost to himself personally.

I was somewhat amused when the gentleman from Missouri quoted the words found in Holy Writ, "They who take the sword shall perish with the sword," as though every soldier must "perish with the sword." My sainted mother, too, was under that impression when three of her sons volunteered during the Spanish-American War; but when the same three sons who volunteered returned unharmed midst cheers and flying banners, she saw a new light, and then knew that the sword was the spirit of hate and had no reference to the sword made of steel.

Heritage and every drop of blood within me cries out "Peace!" "Peace!" But how can I longer toss upon my bed, halt between two ideas and cry "Peace," when there is no peace, but war is upon us. The sword is what they want, and by the passage of this resolution they shall have what they want.

No matter what cost to myself, I can do no less and remain true to my people, my conscience, and my God. Our Americanism to-day, as always, depends upon the degree of our willingness to sacrifice.

I, for one, have made up my mind that this sacrifice of self is the least I could do, and I shall not only vote for this resolution but, God helping me, I shall be ready to volunteer my services to maintain the rights of a free people.

In Time of War Food Crops Must Be Increased.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. ESCH,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 14, 1917.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, now that war has been declared and we are making "an assessment of every circumstance and condition relating to our preparedness" it becomes clearly apparent that the three essential needs are money, men, and food. We will this day vote $7,000,000,000 worth of bonds and certificates of indebtedness to take care of the immediate financial needs of our allies and to meet the cost of supplying men and ships. We are about to legislate to increase the personnel of the Army and the Navy. Men and money we will not lack, but more essential than either for success in the pending crisis is the matter of food—food not merely for the sustenance of our armed forces and civilian population, but food for the armed and civilian populations of our allies. With most of Europe and especially its food-producing areas war riven, with millions of her people withdrawn from agricultural pursuits, engaged in the trenches and munition plants, with crop shortages in the leading food-producing countries of the world, the United States must, during this year and for the immediate future, become the leading factor in the world's food supply.

An appeal, therefore, must be made to our own people to exert their utmost efforts to cultivate the very last acre to produce the largest possible food supply for man and beast. Already efforts in this direction are being made, but in order that most effective work may be done States should organize with township and county units under direction of a central body. In this mobilization of men and acres due regard should be had for the supply of farm labor. The demand for this labor, even in time of peace, in many section has exceeded the supply, owing to the high prices paid in the cities and manufacturing centers. Under war conditions and the enlistment of from one to two million men this supply will be still further depleted unless the Government exempts, under certain conditions, from military service agricultural labor where there is a shortage or furnishes an outside supply.

An adequate food supply being absolutely necessary for our success in the pending conflict, every effort should be made through Federal and State authorities and organizations to produce a surplus of food crops during the current year. In support of such effort I wish to have printed as a part of my remarks the following correspondence, including the recent news letter issued by the Secretary of Agriculture on the subject "Food crops must be increased":

THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 12, 1917.

DEAR SIR: In the absence from the city of Secretary Houston I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 9 in which you quote a telegram received from the Listman Milling Co., of La Crosse, Wis., with reference to the acreage for spring wheat and the necessity for utilizing all available ground for planting.

In this connection I may say that the whole question of the food supply of the Nation is receiving the definite attention of the Secretary, and I inclose as of possible interest to you a copy of a statement recently issued to the press by the Secretary, entitled "Food Crops Must be Increased." The Secretary at present is in the West holding important conferences to consider the food problem, and it is expected that among the questions to be discussed will be that of increasing the efficiency of production.

I shall be glad to bring your letter to the attention of the Secretary upon his return to the city.

Very truly, yours,

H. F. FITTS,
Acting Private Secretary.

Hon. JOHN J. ESCH,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C.

FOOD CROPS MUST BE INCREASED—WAR DEMANDS AND WORLD FOOD SHORTAGE SHOULD BE MET BY AMERICAN FARMERS—EFFICIENT PRODUCTION IMPERATIVE—WHAT CROPS SHOULD BE STRESSED AND WHERE.

The Secretary of Agriculture, D. F. Houston, to-day, April 7, issued the following statement:

"The importance to the Nation of a generously adequate food supply for the coming year can not be overemphasized in view of the economic problems which may arise as a result of the entrance of the United States into the war. Every effort should be made to produce more crops than are needed for our own requirements. Many millions of people across the seas, as well as our own people, must rely in large part upon the products of our fields and ranges. This situation will continue to exist even though hostilities should end unexpectedly soon, since European production can not be restored immediately to its normal basis. Recognition of the fact that the world at large, as well as our own consumers, must rely more strongly on American farmers this year than ever before should encourage them to strive to the utmost to meet these urgent needs.

INCREASE YIELDS OF STAPLE CROPS.

"It is obvious that the greatest and most important service that is required of our agriculture under existing conditions is an enlarged production of the staple food crops. Because of the shortage of such crops practically throughout the world there is no risk in the near future of excessive production such as sometimes has resulted in unremunerative prices to producers. This is particularly true of the cereals and of peas, beans, cowpeas, soybeans, and buckwheat. In view of the world scarcity of food, there is hardly a possibility that the production of these crops by the farmers of the United States can be too great this year, and there is abundant reason to expect generous price returns for all available surplus.

"The most effective step that may be taken to increase the production of these crops is to enlarge the acreage devoted to them in the regions where they are grown habitually. This expansion of acreage should be to the limit permitted by available good seed, labor, and equipment. The placing of too great emphasis on production in new regions is inadvisable, since the introduction into a farm operation of a crop not usually grown frequently involves practical difficulties not easily foreseen nor quickly surmountable.

"Taking the winter-wheat territory as a whole, winter killing has occurred to an extent very much greater than usual. This, obviously, if not compensated for in some way, will mean a material reduction in the supplies of our most important bread cereal. Where winter wheat has been damaged sufficiently to justify the abandonment of fields it should by all means be replaced by spring-planted food crops, preferably small grains or corn. The acreage of winter wheat seeded last fall is estimated at 40,080,000, or only 2 per cent above that of the preceding year (39,203,000 acres), and about one-eighth more than the average for the preceding five-year period (35,724,000). The condition of this crop, as shown by the department in its report of April 7, is more than 25 per cent below the average condition April 1 for the past 10 years. This condition forecasts a production this year nearly 52,000,000 bushels less than that of 1916 and 243,000,000 bushels less than the crop of 1915.

"Climatic requirements of spring wheat during the last few weeks of its growth render it a more risky crop than others to plant outside the areas in which its production has been proved to be successful, so that it is not recommended for regions where oats or corn will be more certain to produce satisfactory yields. In the northern spring-wheat States, however, where old ground has been reserved for flax and seed wheat is available, flax ground may well be sown with spring wheat and new land broken for flax where such land is available. In the Pacific Northwest, where the seed supply of well-adapted varieties is adequate, a considerably increased acreage of spring wheat appears probable. The spring-wheat acreage of 1916 (17,956,000 acres) was more than 5 per cent less than that of 1915 (19,161,000 acres), and more than 4 per cent less than the preceding five-year average (18,799,000 acres).

GOOD SEED WHEAT NECESSARY.

"The minimum quality of seed grain that should be relied upon under existing conditions is a very difficult point to decide. In general, it is not wise to risk planting seed wheat showing less than 75 or 80 per cent germination, nor that weighing less than 50 pounds to the bushel. If the land is prepared thoroughly and otherwise is suitable, the use of spring wheat weighing as low as 45 pounds per bushel, if it shows good germination, may be advisable where better seed is lacking.

THE USEFULNESS OF OATS AND BARLEY.

"If land intended for spring wheat can not be put into good condition early enough for seeding, oats or barley can be substituted to good advantage in the sections where these crops are known to do well. Barley can be relied on in the proved areas of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, the Dakotas, and Montana, while oats have a much wider range. The ease with which barley may be substituted directly for wheat in human food and its usefulness to replace wheat milling by-products as food in the production of the milk supply, renders its abundant production important. Barley, where it succeeds, yields a larger weight of feed per acre than any other small-grain crop. With an abundance of oats and barley available much closer milling of wheat than at present could be practiced, if necessary, without endangering the milk supply, which constitutes so important an element in the dietary of consumers.

LARGE ACREAGE OF RYE PLANTED.

"The place of rye under present conditions is an important one. The crop this year should be harvested and utilized with more than the usual care. Considerable acreage is planted in some sections for plowing under in the spring for green manure. Where conditions are suitable, part of this acreage might well be held for harvesting and followed with a suitable summer or fall crop for plowing in later.

BUCKWHEAT FOR LATE PLANTING.

"Buckwheat may be planted later than any similar crop, and often does well on old meadows or waste land that can be broken after the more exacting crops are planted. In some sections where experience has demonstrated that the cereals, except rye, can not be relied on, buckwheat is a crop of considerable importance. The acreage could well be increased, especially in portions of New York, Pennsylvania, and New England, where the crop now is grown to a considerable extent.

RICE GAINING IN POPULARITY.

"Rice at present prices provides more food value for the money than most of the other cereals. Fuller appreciation of its value should stimulate production quickly in Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and California to an extent that would increase the total food supply greatly.

INCREASED ACREAGE OF GRAIN SORGHUMS WARRANTED.

"The prices of the grain sorghums during the past season appear to warrant increase of acreage of these grains in the regions where they can succeed, as in western Kansas, Oklahoma, and northern Texas. This increase should be practically to the limit of the acreage, that can be handled properly with the labor and facilities available. Grain sorghums may well be used in that area to replace winter wheat on fields abandoned because of winter injury. The grain sorghums are but little known to eastern farmers, but are assuming importance rapidly in the drier portions of the country where corn and the small grains are unreliable because of frequent insufficiency of moisture. In the past these grains have been used chiefly as poultry and stock feed, but they have possibilities also as human food.

FLAX FOR NEW GROUND.

"Though flax is not primarily a food crop, the cake remaining when oil is expressed from the seed constitutes an important element in the dairy food supply. Its increased use in this way would release other grain products for use as food. As a crop peculiarly adapted to newly broken land in the spring wheat States where it is chiefly grown, the acreage of flax should be increased to the greatest extent possible.

EXPAND THE CORN ACREAGE.

"Corn is the leading food and feed crop of the United States in geographic range of production, acreage, and quantity of product. The vital importance of a large acreage of this crop properly cared for, therefore, is obvious. Because of the prices obtained for the last crop and the world demand for this grain its profitableness to the American farmer during the approaching season is clear. The 105,954,000 acres planted to corn in 1916 yielded 2,583,000,000 bushels, or more than 400,000,000 bushels less than the large crop of 1915—2,904,793,000 bushels—and considerably less than the five-year average—2,732,457,000 bushels. Conditions now warrant the planting of the largest acreage of this crop which it is possible to handle effectively.

"Although fall is the proper time for breaking sod for corn, there are many unproductive and foul meadows and indifferent pastures in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and the Middle Atlantic and Northeastern States that, under existing conditions, can be broken now to advantage and planted to corn. The resulting reduction of hay and pasture would be more than replaced by the corn stover, ensilage, and grain produced. Corn as a cultivated crop has been found well suited to replace summer fallowing in portions of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Wyoming, and Montana, the forage and grain produced not materially reducing the succeeding grain crop.

PLANT EARLY AND REDUCE RISK.

"Earliness of maturity, other factors being equal, is advantageous in the case of practically all grain crops. Relatively early maturing varieties should be selected where possible, and the planting should be done at the earliest suitable date. With the small grains an advance of three or four days in stage of maturity frequently saves a crop from serious damage by rusts. With corn a similar advantage is obtained by early maturity when severe droughts are encountered and when killing frosts occur toward the end of the season. Corn grown on the rich bottoms, which constitute the best corn lands, often is damaged by temporary overflow. If corn has an early start, however, it usually will attain a size which will make it possible to withstand overflows with less damage. Early plantings of corn, if somewhat damaged by flood or frost, can be replanted even a second or third time with profit, if seed of early maturing varieties is secured in advance of the time when needed.

COWPEAS AND SOY BEANS VALUABLE FOR FOOD.

"The usefulness of cowpeas and soy beans as human food has been recognized only recently in this country. Existing conditions warrant the planting of all the available seed of varieties known to do well in the several sections. The soy bean in particular has proved sufficiently resistant to cold in spring and to adverse weather during summer to warrant heavy planting, especially throughout the South. The value of the beans for oil production, as well as for human food, has become recognized so quickly and so generally during the past year that the crop has acquired a commercial standing far in excess of its previous status. While the commercial supply of seed late in March was estimated not to exceed 500,000 bushels, the quantity available on farms, where home-grown seed is held over in small lots for planting, undoubtedly will make possible a largely increased acreage.

FIELD-BEAN PRICES SHOULD STIMULATE PRODUCTION.

"The high food value of field beans and the shortage of supply due to the light yields of 1915 and 1916 render them of great importance in the regions to which they are adapted. This is especially the case in portions of the New England States, New York, Michigan, and California, where the chief supply has been grown for many years, and in sections of Idaho, Colorado, New Mexico, and other Western States where beans have attained importance recently. The seed supply, while high in price, is well distributed. In order that especially good crops may result, beans should be planted under such conditions of soil as regards character and preparation as will insure efficient use of the seed supply.

RESERVE SUFFICIENT HAY, FORAGE, AND PASTURE LAND.

"A deficiency of hay and forage for the next winter would jeopardize the future meat and dairy supplies of the country and result in a shortage of roughage for military draft and saddle animals. In regions where dairying dominates the full acreage of clover, alfalfa, and the grasses that is in productive condition should be maintained. Under the conditions prevailing in most dairying sections, these crops can be carried with less man power than that required for tilled crops. The older, thinner, and less productive grass lands, however, frequently can be made to produce much larger yields of feed in corn than if left as they are in unproductive grass. The seeding down of small grain fields for next year's mowing should by no means be neglected, for the maintenance of effective rotation of crops will be found as important in the future as in the past.

"For the Gulf States perhaps no forage crop of which the available seed supply is relatively abundant exceeds the velvet bean in potential value. This legume possesses also the ability to make a crop when planted relatively late.

POTATOES AND VEGETABLES.

"Seed potatoes should be conserved by planting on the best lands available for them and planning for thorough tillage and protection of the crop against disease and insect pests. Potatoes can be grown most advantageously near the centers of population in the Northern States where transportation cost may be reduced to a minimum. This crop is capable of quick and large increase of production when conditions are favorable. There is, however, considerable risk of unprofitable production of potatoes when they are grown at long distances from the consuming markets, owing to their disproportionate weight and bulk of the product in comparison with the cereals.

"Such vegetable crops as carrots, rutabaga, turnips, onions, and cabbage are worthy of much more attention than they generally receive, especially in the eastern United States. All these crops are capable of large production on suitable land under intensive culture throughout the more densely populated portions of the country. The supply of seed is ample and their culture relatively simple. The holding of these vegetables for the winter food supply is relatively easy where suitable inexpensive pits, cellars, or lofts are prepared in time. The practicability of quickly drying vegetables for longer preservation was demonstrated on a large scale last year in western New York, where quantities were dried in the available apple evaporators and in quickly constructed dry kilns for export as army supplies. This was a repetition of the experience of the Civil War period, when desiccated vegetables assumed considerable importance in the Army ration, and the equipment required for their preparation proved the forerunner of our present fruit-drying equipment. Existing conditions warrant heavier planting than usual of staple winter vegetables in the sections where canneries and fruit evaporators exist, and probably in some sections where the provision of such facilities later in the season may be justified.

"In the southern half of the country perhaps no crop has larger possibilities for quick increase of production of food for both men and animals than the sweet potato. Methods of handling and storing this product demonstrated and advocated by the department workers for several years make possible much fuller utilization of this crop than has occurred generally in the past.

"The peanut in many sections of the South also is capable of greatly enlarged production with little risk of oversupply, as it is in demand for oil and peanut butter manufacture, as well as for direct use as food both for man and hogs.

HOLD SEED FOR REPLANTING.

"While early planting is desirable, it is rarely advisable to risk the entire supply of seed in the first planting. This is particularly important with the tender, tilled crops, including corn, sorghum, beans, cowpeas, and soy beans. It is well to hold a fair proportion of seed in reserve against possible need, due to untimely frost or other destructive weather, at least until after the recognized danger period is passed. The availability of seed for immediate use when the need occurs frequently determines the practicability of replanting effectively. This is true also of reserve stocks of plants of tomatoes, sweet potatoes, early cabbage, and other vegetables usually transplanted.

POSSIBLE SWEETS FOR DOMESTIC PRODUCTION.

"Only about 20 per cent of the supply of sugar normally consumed in the United States is produced domestically, and this amount can not be increased appreciably during the coming season. Unless normal imports of sugar reach our shores, therefore, a shortage of this food is inevitable. Supplemental sweets, however, may be produced more abundantly than in normal years and to some extent may take the place of sugar for the home use of farmers. Sirups from cane and sorghum constitute one of the most important groups of supplemental sweets. Wherever these crops can be grown farmers may find it to their advantage to plant acreage sufficient to furnish materials for the home manufacture of at least a sufficient supply of sirup to meet family needs. In many parts of the country honey production may be increased by closer attention to bee culture.

INCREASE FARM PRODUCTION OF VEGETABLES, POULTRY, AND DAIRY PRODUCTS.

"The high prices for foodstuffs that have prevailed during the last few months have stimulated interest in the increase of home supplies of vegetables, poultry, and dairy products on farms. This interest has been quickened most noticeably in the South, where for several years this department and the States, through their extension workers, have urged such an increase as necessary for economic reasons, even under normal conditions. Other parts of the country have responded to these appeals, but emphasis on this feature should be continued by all agencies in position to operate effectively.

"Through increased attention to poultry on farms it is possible to add quickly and materially to the food supply. Because of the importance of an increased supply of eggs, under present exigencies, farmers should not market hens of the egg breeds, such as the Leghorns, which are less than 3 years old, or of the larger breeds which are less than 2 years old. By the immediate preservation of eggs for home consumption through the use of water glass or limewater, larger supplies of fresh eggs may be made available for marketing later in the season, when production is less and prices higher. Every person who raises chickens, from the novice to the poultry husbandman, should see that infertile eggs are produced and all surplus marketed promptly so as to eliminate waste through spoilage.

INCREASE PRODUCTION OFF THE FARMS.

"When conditions render it feasible small flocks of poultry should be kept by families in villages, towns, and especially in the suburbs of large cities. The need for this extension of poultry raising is particularly great where consumption exceeds production, as in the Northeastern States. Through utilization of table waste, scraps, and other refuse as poultry feed much wholesome food in the form of eggs and poultry for home use may be produced at relatively low cost. Many families in villages and on the outskirts of cities also should consider the advisability of keeping a pig if sanitary regulations permit. In most cases, however, it will be profitable to keep a pig only when a sufficient surplus from the household and the garden is available to furnish a considerable portion of the pig's food.

"Consumers living in villages and in the suburbs of cities do not appreciate sufficiently the possibility of adding materially to their food supply by utilizing suitable idle soil in yards, vacant lots, and unused outlying fields. The total contribution to the food supply of families and communities which can be brought about through such activities is great. Gardening is peculiarly an activity in which the family and the community may share with resultant mutual helpfulness and benefit.

"The duty of the individual farmer at this time is to increase his production, particularly of food crops. If he has control of tillable land not in use or money lying idle or labor unemployed, he should extend his operations so as to employ those resources to the fullest extent. This does not mean that he should rob his land, waste his capital, or expend his labor fruitlessly, but that by wise planning and earnest effort he should turn out a greater quantity of food crops than ever before. He will not lose by it, and he will perform an important service in supporting his country in the task that lies before it. The agricultural sufficiency of a nation is not attained unless as the units which compose it are efficient. Those agricultural workers who produce, conserve, and market wisely will help toward the achievement of national agricultural sufficiency, and thus will perform valuable service for the Nation."

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ARTHUR B. ROUSE,
OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following resolutions:

COLONEL AERIE, No. 1285,
FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES,
Dayton, Ky., April 10, 1917.

Whereas we feel that we are most fortunate to be living under the protection of the Stars and Stripes, and appreciating that the rights and privileges which we enjoy as American citizens require of us in return a love of country and an allegiance to it which nothing can alter or destroy; and

Whereas liberty, truth, justice, and equality, our four great cardinal principles, around which the bulwark of protection not only of our order but of the very Nation itself have been woven, are endangered by the numerous barbaric, heinous, and odious atrocities practiced by the Imperial Government; and

Whereas our President and Congress have declared that a state of war exists between the United States and the German Empire: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the officers and members of Colonel Aerie, No. 1285, Fraternal Order of Eagles, of Dayton, Ky., That we heartily indorse the action taken, and dedicate ourselves, without restriction or limitation, to the disposal of the constituted authorities.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, no more solemn duty is imposed by the Constitution of the United States than that upon which we are now asked to come to a decision.

It had been my hope that some course could have been decided upon by our Chief Magistrate, through diplomatic channels, which would have averted the expensive and distressing evil from which there now seems no recourse.

It seems, however, that the Imperial German Government has decided that it will in no way abate one iota from the position it has undertaken in violation of all previous international understandings, and expects the neutral world to surrender these rights, which have been established years ago and found to be fair. It is now prepared to enforce these violations without listening to any proposition looking toward a proper adjustment with our country, with which she has never heretofore had a controversy.

Her position is somewhat similar to that of a mad Malay who hopes to attain heaven by killing Christians by the method called "running amuck," and which certainly can have but one ending.

To place the position of the Imperial German Government in a few words: It has violated international law and the rights of neutrals. It has disregarded all pleas for humanity and justice; it has by plot and espionage sought to prevent our citizens from carrying on their lawful business, and has used our country as a base to encourage and raise enemies against us, all of which are proven facts and have resulted in injuring us beyond all patience. We must, if it is our desire to maintain our integrity and self-respect, end such an intolerant condition, and there is only one way.

I shall vote in favor of the resolution declaring a state of war, and do everything I can to support and uphold the constituted authorities in its enforcement.

It is needless, Mr. Speaker, to go into detail regarding these matters, but I wish to quote a statement received from the State Department, showing the number of American ships damaged or destroyed by German submarines since the beginning of the present war to March 29, 1917, and a list of ships sunk with loss of American lives to the same date:

SHIPS SUNK WITH LOSS OF AMERICAN LIVES.

British ship Falaba. Torpedoed March 28, 1915 (warned); 1 American lost.
British ship Lusitania. Torpedoed May 7, 1915 (no warning); 114 Americans lost.
American ship Gulflight. Torpedoed May 1, 1915 (no warning); 2 Americans lost.
British ship Armenian. Torpedoed June 28, 1915 (ordered to stop; tried to escape); 23 Americans lost.
British ship Iberian. Sunk July 21, 1915 (tried to escape; stopped by shell fire); 3 Americans lost.
British ship Anglo-Californian. Sunk July 4, 1915; 2 Americans lost.
British ship Hesperian. Torpedoed September 4, 1915 (no warning); 1 American lost.
British ship Arabic. Torpedoed August 19, 1915 (no warning); 3 Americans lost.
British ship Persia. Believed to have been torpedoed. Sunk December 30, 1915 (no warning); 2 Americans lost.
Italian ship Ancona. Torpedoed November 9, 1915 (no warning); 7 Americans lost.
British ship Englishman. Torpedoed March 27, 1916 (no warning); 6 Americans lost; 1 more whose nationality is doubtful.
British ship Cabotia. Sunk by gunfire October 20, 1916; 1 American lost.
British ship Marina. Sunk by gunfire October 28, 1916 (warned); 8 Americans lost.
British ship Russian. Torpedoed December 14, 1916 (no warning); 17 Americans lost.
British ship Eaveston. Sunk by shell fire February 5, 1917; 1 American lost; 1 other whose nationality is doubtful.
British ship Vedamore. Torpedoed February 7, 1917 (no warning); 10 Americans lost.
British ship Turino. Torpedoed February 7, 1917 (no warning); 1 American (?) lost.
French ship Athos. Torpedoed February 22, 1917 (no warning); 1 American lost.
British ship Laconia. Torpedoed February 26, 1917 (no warning); 8 Americans lost.
Norwegian ship Sjostad. Believed torpedoed March 2, 1917 (no warning); 1 American lost.
American ship Vigilancia. Torpedoed March 16, 1917 (no warning); 5 Americans lost.
American ship Healdton. Torpedoed March 21, 1917 (no warning); 7 Americans lost.
British ship Crispin. Torpedoed March 29, 1917 (no warning); 68 Americans on board, 1 killed, 18 missing.
Total, 226 Americans lives lost.
On the Lusitania there were also 24 children born of foreign parents on American soil.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I also have a large German constituency, and among the citizens of the many nations that have come to this country to help make up our population there are none that are more loyal, industrious, and God-fearing than those of German birth. They came here to be a part of us because of their love for our institutions, and they will be one with us when called upon to protect and defend their adopted country.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. NICHOLAS J. SINNOTT,

OF OREGON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend remarks made by me in the House on the 5th of this month, I desire to have printed the report published in The Dalles Chronicle on April 2 of the patriotic demonstration held at my home town, The Dalles, Oreg., on the 1st of this month.

This demonstration was the greatest in the local history of the city and shows that the people of Oregon are exceedingly patriotic in this hour of national crisis.

I wish particularly to call attention to the inspiring incident of the flag presentation by citizens of German descent and birth, some of whom were veterans of the Franco-Prussian War. The presentation speech was made by Max A. Vogt, a son of a veteran of the Franco-Prussian War.

The press reports that when American Ambassador Gerard was leaving Germany one of the German officials, with sinister purpose, said that in the United States there were a million German citizens. To this Ambassador Gerard retorted: "There are a million lamp-posts in the United States."

The insinuation of this official would not have been made with such assurance nor would the retort of the ambassador have been necessary had he known there was such a spirit of devotion to their adopted country among those of German blood in America as was revealed by what was to take place in my home town on the 1st of this month when American citizens of German birth and extraction presented to the city the American flag and expressed their pride in the flag and loyalty to it.

I believe that this manifestation of love for our flag and loyalty to the country so expressed at this meeting is an index of the loyalty and patriotism of all of our citizens of German origin throughout the length and breadth of the land; every one of whom I believe is willing to exclaim in the language of the poet:

Though my father's father
Felt hale German blood
Course through his veins,
A satisfying flood;
* * *
Yet as for me,
Strong limbed and free,
I'll face the war a man;
Not alien, but American.

The following is the report referred to:

DEMONSTRATION IS GREATEST IN LOCAL HISTORY—THOUSANDS GATHER TO PROVE THIS IS UNITED CITY BACK OF PRESIDENT—MESSAGE SENT TO WILSON—PARADE AND MASS MEETING FOLLOWING SHOW PATRIOTISM RAMPANT.

"The entire citizenship of The Dalles, in mass convention, pledge to you our unqualified support and express our confidence in your ability to protect the honor and dignity of the Nation."

That message went over the wires between The Dalles and Washington, D. C., yesterday afternoon following the greatest patriotic demonstration in the history of this city. It was directed to Woodrow Wilson, was signed by Mayor J. E. Anderson, and meant just what it said—that the entire citizenship of The Dalles supports President Wilson in these perilous times and is confident he will uphold the honor and dignity of the United States.

At the close of the great mass meeting yesterday, Mayor Anderson, who had presided, stated it had been suggested that a message be sent to the President, embodying the sentiment as expressed at the demonstration.

"Those in favor will please say aye," advised the mayor.

The big crowd yelled "aye" as one person though only hundreds of people could have made that much noise in so doing.

"It is unanimous," announced Mr. Anderson, and it certainly was.

The public demonstration of yesterday proved that patriotism is running rampant in The Dalles, and that this city, if called upon, will do its full part in supplying men to shoulder arms under Old Glory.

TIGHT LID ON WHOLE TOWN.

For the first time in the annals of this community business was absolutely at a standstill. Even the cigar stores and restaurants were closed, and the lid was on tight from 12 to 2 o'clock.

The demonstration began with a parade in which 1,895 persons marched. The formation was begun at 12.30, but it was nearly 1 before the line of march could be started, for so many more persons than were expected presented themselves for participation. Sheriff Levi Chrisman was the competent grand marshal. The police and the fire department did splendid work in handling the crowd.

Civil War veterans and the O.-W. R. & N. band of Portland led the parade, following Mr. Chrisman. Next were W. R. C. members and Daughters of the American Revolution. Then came the Girls' National Honor Guard, totaling 76, and "The Dalles Volunteers," 63 strong.

Folda's band led the next section, composed of Woodmen of the World, firemen, boy scouts, the fife and drum corps of the Columbia Hose Co. volunteer firemen, more than 900 school children, and city and county officials.

NURSES MAKE HIT.

The Elk's band headed the third section, a feature of which was an immense flag which was accompanied by 14 nurses of The Dalles hospital, in uniform. They were followed by the largest turnout in the parade, with the exception of the school children—the Elks, who totaled 107. The Knights and Ladies of Security order was represented by 40 members. Employees of the O.-W. R. & N. Co. also numbered 40.

The large American flag, which was carried by the nurses, is the property of Henry McNulty. The flag was formerly owned by the late Capt. John McNulty. It was made in 1863 and contains 34 stars. It is 30 feet 8 inches long and 20 feet 5 inches wide.

The last section was composed of the general citizenship, including church congregations in groups.

The entire demonstration of yesterday was solemnly impressive, but the most stirring, soul-gripping part of the ceremonies was the presentation of a beautiful American flag by United States citizens of German birth or extraction, who gave the banner to The Dalles. This ceremony opened the exercises at the city hall at the close of the parade. Mayor J. E. Anderson, and those who later made short speeches, took places on the city hall balcony, which was attractively draped with red, white, and blue bunting. Large pictures of President Wilson and George Washington which had been especially framed for the occasion by George Brown, fire warden, looked down upon the crowd. Following the singing of "America" by the audience, led by Mrs. Carlton P. Williams, Mayor Anderson, who presided, addressed the citizens who numbered about 3,000, as follows:

"This meeting was arranged that the citizens of The Dalles might be given an opportunity to assert, in no uncertain manner, their loyalty to our Flag and what it stands for, and their unswerving support and confidence in the Government at Washington.

"When, after exhausting all means to avoid a conflict, war seems inevitable—war with a nation to which more than 8,000,000 of our citizens are bound by ties of blood—the question naturally arises: What will our German citizens do? What action will they take?

"Personally I have never questioned their loyalty, but the question is pertinent and vital. We have in The Dalles German citizens who faithfully reflect the sentiment of all Germans in America. We will have a concrete example of how our German citizens feel and what they will do from our good friend, honored citizen, and loyal American, Max Vogt."

Mr. Vogt was almost overcome with emotion as he rose with the flag. It was with great effort that he controlled his voice and kept from breaking down completely. He said:

LOYALTY IS PLEDGED.

"Honorable mayor and fellow citizens: I take pleasure in presenting to you an American flag, to be hoisted on the flag pole of your city hall. This flag is donated to Dalles City from United States citizens of German birth and extraction, whom I take pleasure in representing.

"I desire to say in behalf of these United States citizens that they as well as myself are not only proud of this flag but are loyal to it."

TRIBUTE TO GERMANS BY BIRTH.

In graciously accepting the flag, the mayor paid a splendid tribute to American citizens of German birth. He said:

"In the name of Dalles City, and representing all of its citizens, I accept this flag as added evidence of the continued loyalty and patriotism of our citizens of German birth or descent.

"We do not take the presentation of this beautiful emblem as indicating that the Germans of this city hold in their hearts hate or contempt for the fatherland. That would be unnatural.

"'Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said
This is my own, my native land?

A TOUCH OF SADNESS.

"The American citizen with German blood in his veins who can view the threatened conflict between the United States and the fatherland without a feeling of sadness is not worthy of citizenship in any nation. It is not a reflection on his loyalty if he still has a tender spot in his heart for the land of his forefathers. But it is a reflection on his loyalty if he does not stand shoulder to shoulder with the citizens of America who, regardless of birth or descent, are of one mind with our President and are willing to sacrifice even their lives in defense of this flag.

"And now, as this beautiful emblem is unfurled to the breeze and takes its place in God's sunshine, let everyone blot from his mind any suspicion of disloyalty or lack of patriotism on the part of our German citizens and remember that we are one country, free and undivided, intensely and absolutely loyal to the Star-Spangled Banner."

The new flag was run up to the top of the city hall mast. It had been cleverly arranged by C. A. Fox, a Civil War veteran, and Edward Lemison, who served in the Spanish-American War, so that it was not until it reached the top that it unfolded. As the 900 school children gave the salute to the flag many a person cried and hardly an eye was dry among that large crowd. Such a sight is always beautiful and impressive, but yesterday's was especially stirring in view of the present crisis of the United States and due to the splendid display of loyalty upon the part of the American citizens of The Dalles of German lineage. Many a heart was saddened because of the realization of what persons of German descent must feel for the fatherland; how their hearts are necessarily torn because of Germany's crazed ruthlessness.

The cheering that followed the unfurling of the flag must have carried beyond the city limits. The audience then sang the "Star-Spangled Banner." "America" was again sung at the close of the meeting. Short speeches were delivered by Mrs. Alexander Thompson, who represents this district in the State legislature; the Rev. B. A. Warren; Irvin B. Warner, city superintendent of schools; J. W. Brewer; and District Attorney F. V. Galloway. The speakers followed one another without introduction.

WOMEN ARE READY.

That Mrs. Thompson should speak at the meeting was decidedly fitting, for it is not only the men of The Dalles who are loyal; the women are every bit as patriotic, as was evidenced yesterday by the number of them that turned out and their expressions at the meeting. The writer, as he viewed the ceremonies of yesterday from the city hall steps, couldn't help but think of the women who were "out in front." The men must make sacrifices if they shall be called upon to bear arms, but won't the women suffer most?

Mrs. Thompson delivered a brilliant address that greatly stirred the large audience. She said:

"Your honor, the mayor, and fellow patriots: On the 5th day of February, after diplomatic relations had been severed between the United States and Germany, the editor of the New York World sent me a telegram asking for an expression of my views on the international crisis. I wired my reply, and it was published in the New York World of the following day, as follows:

"'The American Nation is a peaceful Nation. Never has it taken up arms except in defense of right. Never has it drawn a sword except at the behest of reason. Never has American blood been shed except in a just cause.

NO TIME FOR FAULTFINDING.

"'Prudence would dictate that this position be maintained, but the exigencies of the present grave crisis that confronts the Nation seem to call for a reversal of our attitude. Clouds and darkness are around us, our Nation's honor is at stake, and this is no time for petty faultfinding and criticism.

"'The President, I believe, has taken the only honorable stand possible under the circumstances. His position in the matter calls for the patriotic and loyal support of every man and woman in America to-day.'

"These were my sentiments on February 5, and they are emphatically my sentiments to-day, now that we are gathered here to perform a patriotic duty. Webster defines patriotism as 'love of country,' patriot, 'one who loves his country and zealously defends and supports its interests.' It is regrettable that in the present crisis this patriotism involves us in conflict with a powerful nation with whom we have heretofore lived upon terms of peace and harmony. This glorious Nation of ours was founded upon the principle that all men are created free and equal. For almost a century and a half America has been the refuge for the enslaved and oppressed of every race and clime who were seeking here the freedom which was denied them at home.

"Among these America has welcomed to its shores with open arms the sturdy emigrant from the German Empire and clothed him with all the authority of a free citizen in a free country.

"It is hard for us to believe that our friends and neighbors of German birth, after enjoying the precious liberty granted to them under the folds of the Stars and Stripes, will ever prove disloyal to the glorious freedom vouchsafed to them by this Government.

WOULD BE TRAITORS.

"On the other hand, they must know that we would be worse than traitors at this critical time if we failed to 'zealously defend and support the interests' of this Nation, for whose liberty our forefathers gladly gave the last full measure of their fervent devotion.

"We are indeed facing a grave crisis. National patience has ceased to be a virtue. A foreign foe has repeatedly violated the neutrality which we have sought to maintain, and the time for action has arrived. This is a time that calls for loyal cooperation on the part of men and women of all parties, creeds, and opinions. Right or wrong, our country calls us. Flag of our country, we salute thee! To-day we meet as Americans to renew our allegiance to our country and our President, and in the words of Thomas Jefferson, 'to mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.'"

Irvin B. Warner spoke as follows:

"This is no celebration. We are not rejoicing, but are sad and serious in the face of the impending crisis which is being forced upon us. We have met to renew our allegiance to those principles upon which all just governments are founded. We have met to review again our national ideals and purposes and to highly resolve to aid our country in its realization of those ideals and purposes to humanity.

NATIONAL LIFE IN DANGER.

"The great crisis which we all hoped might be avoided appears to be upon us. Our national honor, and with it our national life, is in danger. We have no choice left; we are forced to defend ourselves against the old despotism and oppression of Europe, and by so doing defend again those principles of human freedom of which our own Stars and Stripes are an emblem.

"We are happy to know that flag has never been used as a symbol of conquest and oppression. Let us here return thanks to Heaven that it never has and never will wave over a conquered people. Every page of our American history reflects this great truth and principle.

"It is well for us to remember at a time like this that we are all descended from that vast throng which came to America during the past two centuries seeking the liberties and opportunities of a new world. Here, on a wild and ragged continent, they and theirs builded a new nation—a nation conceived in liberty and justice to all men; a nation dedicated to human freedom and equality; a nation founded upon the principle that all men are created free and equal, endowed divinely with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; a nation instituted from the principle that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

"Our people have come from every part of the globe, from every form and condition of humanity, from every type of human government on earth. They have come for a common purpose—human liberty and human justice.

"There is no other tie to unite these different people that have come here. They have placed their hope and trust and confidence in the Nation they have created. All now turn to her for protection and guidance. Less than a century ago President Monroe gave utterance to that memorable principle which declared that while we as a nation were determined not to meddle with the affairs of the Old World, we were equally determined that they should not meddle with ours.

CITIZENS OF WORLD NOW.

"The history of the past two and a half years has altered that doctrine. We are no longer citizens of the Western Hemisphere only; we are citizens of the world, and as such this Nation can not remain true to her principles without taking her place among all the nations of the earth and there defending and protecting, in peace and in war, those principles we all know so well. These principles have been well stated by our great President in his inaugural. They involve equality, justice, and liberty in the whole family of nations.

"We have met here to-day to renew our allegiance to the Nation born under the conditions I have briefly pointed out. We have met to gain a clearer vision of our duty; to dedicate again our lives and our fortunes to the service of our country, whether in peace or war."

The Rev. Bertram A. Warren, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, made his talk very short. He stopped his address to the crowd to offer the remark that he wished "some one would kill that fellow on the motorcycle." The motorist was at the corner of Second and Court. Standing there with his machine he appeared to be running opposition to the patriotic demonstration. Before murder could be committed, however, he moved on.

If the Rev. Warren is typical of clergymen, they are certainly not "peace-at-any-pricers." The minister was very vigorous in presenting his well-chosen remarks regarding the present crisis, and unquestionably proved his patriotism and Americanism. He said that at the morning service of his church he had been presented with a United States flag by American citizens of British birth, something that had given him much pleasure.

SHOWS UNANIMITY OF UNITED STATES.

The Episcopal rector made it clear that if it were a demonstration against Germany or any other nation he would not be there. He declared the occasion was significant in that it was not evincing hostility toward Germany, but rather the unanimity of America. "The parade of arms fills history, but the really momentous occasion is not spectacular," he stated. "It is not Yorktown, but Lexington and Concord; not Waterloo, but the French Revolution," he added, "that are really the points of importance to liberty and democracy." In closing he said:

"To-day our demonstration is not significant as a military pageant, but as part of a Nation-wide declaration of the unity of spirit in the United States. Such a united front is the strongest arm America has against any foreign aggression or insult."

J. W. Brewer's talk, in part, follows:

"For years these United States have existed as the freest country on the globe. In order to enjoy that freedom men and women from every clime have come to us and are to-day American citizens. It is like to a great funnel hanging suspended over this land and into which are poured the people of every nation, and as they drop out below they scatter over our country and are to-day those who are supporting our great Government.

"A crisis is imminent, and these same people are arising in defense of our flag.

SACRIFICE MUST BE MADE.

"Some one must make a sacrifice. These sacrifices must come from every State, every county, and every district. Often have we seen portrayed in pictures the mother of England, France, or Germany, with a little babe in her arms and anguish in her heart, kissing the husband and father good-bye and telling him to go forth and protect his country, or the gray-haired mother, with trembling hands, putting the musket on the shoulder on her boy and telling him to protect that flag so dear to the hearts of all.

"Across the street stands a company of 85 of your husbands and your sons, who have signified their willingness to answer the country's call in case of necessity. Mothers and wives, what will you do when that call comes and your loved ones are ready to answer the call. Will you do as the foreign sisters have done, make the sacrifice and bid them Godspeed? While there must be a sacrifice on the part of those who answer their country's call, there is a like sacrifice of those who stay at home. When temptation comes to keep your boy at home cast your eyes upward to that banner floating in the breeze and then do your duty."

District Attorney Galloway was the last speaker and he sounded a real war note. The crowd had commenced to disperse. Many were literally fagged out as the result of marching and standing so long, but the minute Mr. Galloway began speaking those who were leaving or had been thinking about leaving changed their minds. The district attorney held the audience breathless by a magnificent, though short, oration and a masterful delivery. He said, in part:

"A republican form of government is founded upon the consent of the governed and necessarily goes into war slowly. If we had rushed into war on the invasion of Belgium, perhaps most of our citizens would have thought the Government was acting hastily. If we had listened to the cry of the 'war party' and declared war upon the sinking of the Lusitania, we might still have had some feeling of uncertainty and doubt. It has taken many months for the American people to come to the present conclusion. But months of constant infringement of our rights have convinced 100 per cent of the true and patriotic Americans that American rights must be upheld even to the extent of entering war.

A SQUARE-DEALING NATION.

"The United States, in the words of a distinguished ex-President, has always been a 'square-dealing' Nation. A true American citizen never questions the rights of his neighbor in relation to religious creed, political party, or private business. The American Government has never interfered with the affairs of other nations so long as American rights were not transgressed. For more than a century the United States, the first really honest nation in the history of the world, has followed the doctrine of fair dealing. At the conclusion of the Spanish-American War we were left in possession of the Philippine Islands; we had conquered them. By all the former rules of international relations they were ours. We had more right to them than Germany ever had to Alsace-Lorraine or Schleswig-Holstein; more right to them than England or France to any of her colonies, but when the accounts were settled this fair-dealing Nation voluntarily paid $20,000,000 for the Philippines. In 1885 we voluntarily returned to China over half of an indemnity that had been paid on account of the padded claims of American citizens. No court of claims had jurisdiction to enforce this returned payment, but this honest Nation thought it was the right thing to do and acted accordingly. We bought Alaska 50 years ago day before yesterday. We bought the Louisiana territory. This domain voluntarily became a part of the United States. Texas, as an independent nation, joined our Government. Hawaii came to us of her own free will. The United States has never indulged in transgression. The American flag has never waved in triumphant scorn over a conquered people, a people who did not love this emblem.

"It seems like a strange reward that the Nation that has so religiously rewarded the rights of others should to-day have her own rights so ruthlessly opposed.

FIGHTING FOR PRINCIPLE.

"As long as the European conflict is between those nations it matters not to us which country is victorious. We are fighting for a principle, and God only knows what they are fighting for. Germany might be the victor; the allies might win—that matters not, but the ultimates victor in that conflict will be free institutions and republican forms of government. Kings and princes to the garbage can—let the people rule!

"The American people are the most patriotic people in the world, because their patriotism is a voluntary fidelity, founded on logic and understanding; not a patriotism or prejudice or compulsion. The person who can not be a loyal citizen of the United States can be loyal to no government on earth.

"The impression may prevail in Europe that the American people are a great disorganized mob. I fear that Germany may have been misled by the idea that the Germans in America—that was a slip of the tongue—there are no Germans in America. A German statesman is credited with having said on the floor of the Reichstag a few days ago: 'If Germany and the United States go to war the German-Americans will revolt!'

"NO GERMAN-AMERICANS.

"A state of war exists between the two countries. Only a miracle can avert actual war. But if anything short of a miracle could maintain peace it would be to reply with one great, national voice to 'der Fatherland: There are no German-Americans in the Motherland!'"

The services of the local band and the Oregon-Washington Railroad & Navigation Co. band of Portland were donated yesterday. The music of both organizations was much enjoyed and appreciated.

The splendid display of flags throughout the city did not a little to make yesterday's demonstration the success it was. The flags were not only upon buildings. Everybody wore or carried one, and the automobiles were decorated with the national colors. Even the local switch engine was dressed in red, white, and blue bunting with an American eagle on the front of the locomotive.

Mayor Anderson, in his recent proclamation, urged that all flags be left up until "blessed peace once more reigns over the land of the Stars and Stripes." To the mayor, who originated it, is due much of the credit for yesterday's successful event.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES H. MAYS,

OF UTAH,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, under general leave I insert in the RECORD the resolutions passed at a patriotic meeting held in the assembly hall at Salt Lake City, Utah, on April 10, by Americans of Scandinavian birth and extraction of the State of Utah on the general subject of our conflict with Germany in support of American rights.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Minutes of a patriotic meeting held in the assembly hall, Salt Lake City, April 10, 1917, by Americans of Scandinavian birth and extraction of the State of Utah. About 1,000 persons were present:

"The Star-Spangled Banner," by the Union Band.

The chairman of the evening, Hon. F. S. Fernstrom, was introduced by Mr. John Halversen.

Invocation by Hon. Adam L. Petersen.

Song by the Norwegian Male Chorus, "Norge."

The speech by Gov. Simon Bamberger was not delivered, as press of official business prevented the governor from being present.

Timely and patriotic remarks by President Anthon H. Lund of the Mormon Church.

"America" by the band, male choruses, and the audience.

Benediction by Hon. Andrew Jensen.

Declarations.

Expressive of our sentiments and in harmony with the traditions and history of our race, we, as loyal Americans of Scandinavian birth or extraction, residents of the State of Utah, convened in mass meeting at the Assembly Hall, in the city of Salt Lake, this 10th day of April, A. D. 1917, declare our firm loyalty and undivided allegiance to our adopted country, the United States of America; its flag, the Stars and and Stripes; and to the President and Congress of these United States.

We love, revere, and appreciate the basic principles and guaranties of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness accorded us by the Constitution, and reaffirm our belief in the divine doctrines of the Declaration of Independence that all men are created free and equal, and that the just powers of governments must be derived from the consent of the governed.

We indorse and approve the patriotic, humane, and Christian declarations of President Wilson in his message to Congress April 2, 1917, and the resolution adopted by the Senate and the House of Representatives confirming said message and declaring that "a state of war exists," which has been forced upon us by the Imperial German Government by and through its numerous overt acts against the lives and property of American citizens, in plain violation of international law and against the protests, peace, and dignity of the United States.

We have no enmity toward the German people, but deplore and condemn the inhuman and tyrannical conduct of the Imperial militaristic German Government. We earnestly hope and pray that by the successful termination of this war it will be completely abolished and popular government inaugurated throughout the civilized world.

Therefore in this crisis of our country we hereby solemnly adopt the following:

Resolutions.

Resolved, That we citizens of Utah of Scandinavian origin, hereby solemnly pledge our loyal support to the President of the United States and to the governor of the State of Utah in obedience to any and every demand and requirement made of us for prosecuting this war, enforcing and defending the rights of our fellow citizens at home and abroad, and for maintaining the honor and integrity of our glorious Nation against any and all its enemies;

Resolved, That we aid and encourage the enlistment of all able-bodied men required for the Army and Navy, especially in the militia of the State of Utah, and the naturalization of all alien Scandinavians within our borders;

Resolved, That we increase our racial habits of industry, frugality, and economy, and produce and conserve every resource and product within our control, holding the same subject to the orders of the President and the governor for use in the prosecution of this war to a successful end;

Resolved further, That copies of these declarations and resolutions be presented to the President of the United States, the governor of the State of Utah, and our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Liberty, Equality, and Humanity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN S. SNOOK,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, in his essay on Emerson Maeterlinck says:

It is at first necessary to make the organ of vision similar to the object which it is to contemplate. Never would the eye perceive the sun had it not first taken the form of the sun; in the same way, never would the soul have seen beauty if at first it had not become beautiful itself, and every man should begin by making himself beautiful and divine, so as to obtain the view of beauty and divinity.

As every man who wishes to see beauty must first make himself beautiful, so the man seeking justification for the adoption of this resolution must, first of all, be an American.

He must understand that our Government was founded and is maintained to perpetuate the principles of liberty, equality, and humanity.

He must know that this is our ideal. He must stop to think what a surrender of these principles, a lowering of this ideal, would mean to those who are to follow.

He must fully realize that this is not a personal question; that it is not to be settled by our personal like or dislike of any of the nations engaged in the war.

He must put himself in an attitude to see the matter stripped of every prejudice, and with an eye seeking only that end which will redown to the benefit of our country and the preservation of the principles on which it is founded.

He must keep in mind that there can be no such thing as a divided allegiance, and that the people of the country with which we are about to declare war are not to blame for the situation, but that the fault lies with a system of government in which these people have little or no voice.

He must remember that the right to enjoy liberty and freedom is involved, and that to the true American this is the dearest and most sacred right of all.

The man who approaches the vote on this resolution in this attitude and with all these things in his mind, will understand the spirit of the quotation I have made from Maeterlinck; that is to say, he will have his eye and soul so full of the beauty of his country and so inspired by her lofty ideals as to clearly see the course to which duty leads.

In considering this resolution we must not forget that there is a principle involved, and that the principled involved touches the right of our citizens to freedom, which is the corner stone of the foundation of our Government.

In this country liberty is universal; it is such a common thing that we are accustomed to look at it from a personal rather than a national standpoint. On this account in very many cases it seems that our own personal rights must be interfered with before we are ready to resent the wrong.

We are now face to face with the fact, which can not be denied, that every encroachment on the right of our citizens to enjoy liberty is a menace to each one of us.

Wherever this right is denied it must be defended and upheld by the common effort of all.

The acts against our Government and people which led the President to address the Congress, and which are the cause of proposing this resolution, have all been recited in the newspapers and given in detail in the speeches made during the course of this debate.

They are known of all men, so I will not undertake to recite them again.

It is claimed by some who oppose the resolution that such acts do not justify the course which will result in its adoption.

In defense of their position they say that Mexico has done us still greater wrongs, that its conduct has been a still greater infringement of our rights, and that we have not seen fit to declare war against that Government.

In my judgment such argument is hardly worthy of a reply. It is a matter of common knowledge that most of the wrongs committed in Mexico were inflicted by irresponsible bandits; that the country has been divided by a bloody revolution.

That her people have not been able to sustain a stable government, and that for these reasons the responsibility is not similar to that involved in the present crisis where the acts complained of are the deliberate acts of a responsible Government and are brought about over our protest and in defiance of our petitions and warning.

Other members seek to justify their opposition on account of the conduct of other belligerents. I do not have time to discuss this question fully. Suffice to say that it has been pointed out several times by persons taking part in this debate that under the terms of The Hague convention, which were agreed to by all the great nations engaged in this war, that in laying mines in the North Sea the nations were clearly within their rights.

But, after all, as it has been so many times said, it is not the loss of property but the loss of the lives of our citizens that impels us to engage in the war.

I repeat it is the loss of hundreds of human lives caused by orders issued in violation of international law, in disregard of the lives of our people, and with no regard for the plainest principles of justice and mercy.

There has also been much talk by some who were opposed to the resolution, as an excuse for refusing to support it, that it is proposed by the President of the United States, and they say they refuse to act as a rubber stamp.

In our Government there must be a President and there must be a Congress; each have their duties.

In times like these through which we are passing it is the duty of the President to use every resource at his command to secure information concerning the affairs of the Government, to consider such information, and to communicate his thoughts and conclusions to Congress.

By reason of his position he is enabled to learn facts that none of us can ascertain. At this time he has become so thoroughly conversant with the situation as to make his thoughts and advice of the highest value to those who are willing to listen.

If under those circumstances men, using their own judgment, impressed by his means of knowledge and the force and logic of his statement, are lead to agree with him, can it be well said that they are foregoing their own notions to follow his will?

The President has told us, and we know for ourselves, how he has used every resource at his command to avoid war.

Therefore one of the most forceful reasons for supporting this resolution is that the President, after a careful study of all the facts, advises and urges such action.

Neither do I believe that there is any force to the argument which some try to draw from the President's message that he seeks by war to arbitrarily force our form of government on the nations of Europe.

In giving the reason for his action he clearly says that we are not seeking war, but that we have been forced into the struggle to maintain our rights and protect the lives of our citizens.

To my mind he does not speak with the spirit of intolerance, but rather expresses the hope that, animated, as we are, with no desire for conquest, we may so conduct ourselves and play our part that the people of the whole world will be impressed with the spirit that animates us and lead of their own volition to adopt and put in force our ideal of Government, and that thereby liberty may become the ruling force in national life.

I must confess that the argument of the opposition that appeals most to me is the one voiced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] and by others during the discussion; that is, that the adoption of the resolution means war, with all its attendant sacrifices and horrors, its destruction of property and loss of life, and its sightless and crippled victims.

I abhor war; it has been ever my hope that it might be possible to spare our people from further war; but hate and oppose war as we may, and dream of the day when, under the rule of the brotherhood of man, countries will lay aside the rule of selfishness, and nation will respect the right of nation, even a slight study of the present situation draws us to the conclusion that the hoped-for day is not at hand.

As yet it seems that nations have no other way of securing and maintaining their rights except by force.

Even the men of the party in Europe, for which the gentleman from New York speaks, seem to recognize this fact in the present crisis and find themselves taking part on that side of the struggle where they believe lies the right.

On this subject I quote parts of an editorial from a paper published in my own county which gives a clear notion of the situation in which we find ourselves:

With our many centuries of social striving toward better and more ideal conditions of things, it seems upon sober second thought, rather discouraging and disheartening, from the broader point of view, to realize it is necessary to pick out the flower of the young manhood and send them forth with gun and cannon to defend the Nation and its freedom.

It seems too bad, in this day and age, that such things are necessary, but circumstances all seem to point to the fact that they are. You can not depend on a universal brotherhood when there is no universal brotherhood to depend on. The only thing left is to forbear until forbearance ceases to be a virtue, then strike with sufficient force to accomplish something.

Some of the best reforms on earth have been brought about by force. Let us hope if force must be resorted to in this case something worth while will come of it.

We must approach this vote remembering that in the most trying hours of our national existence force has been the only arm on which justice could rely.

That Europe and the world was saved to Christianity by the sword; that the Magna Charta was forced from an unwilling king, and that our Nation was founded on the sacrifice of our people and preserved by the blood of heroes who did not hesitate to make war.

The principles for which they struggled are again at stake.

Shall we falter and refuse to use force because our course entails sacrifice and suffering, or shall we make use of the only means left us to protect our lives, maintain our honor, and preserve our liberties?

Let us move forward, confident in our duty and remembering the words of America's greatest philosopher—

For what avail
The plow or sail,
Or land, or life,
If freedom fail?

Missouri, the "Show You" State.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. L. C. DYER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, every person in Missouri and, for that matter, all over the United States, is familiar with the "I'm from Missouri" phrase, but few know its derivation. In the early seventies there lived in one of those wild Nevada mining towns an individual of such rare fighting ability that the whole country knew of his prowess and respected it. He was king of the community and his was a reign of terror. Quick on the trigger, he had a row of notches on his gun handle, but his specialty was at a rough and tumble. He was a native of Arkansas and was proud of the fact. He boasted of the superiority of his native State. So, as the name pleased him, he was called "Arkansaw." He was built like a puma and his punch was like the kick of a mule. "Arkansaw" enjoyed the rôle of champion and handed out his wares in large and severe doses; in fact, there were few men in the vicinity who had not been licked by the bully. And once was generally enough for a man. After that he spoke in a meek and subdued tone of voice in the Arkansas man's presence.

One day there came into the saloon a stranger. A lanky, solemn-faced boy he was, in patched and faded blue overalls, and a great floppy, brimmed hat. He was a prospector from the hills and not a particularly successful one—from his looks. "Arkansaw" caught sight of the youth, who leaned against a post so mournfully watching the roulette and saw a prospect. He swaggered over to the stranger and tapped him on the shoulder.

"You, kid," said he, "you want to be mighty blamed careful how you're actin' around here. I'm from Arkansaw, I am."

The young fellow cast a lazy, expressionless glance at the half-drunk man and turned his attention again to the wheel. The miners moved up to see "Arkansaw's" latest victim.

"Say, you!" roared the man; "I say I'm from Arkansaw!"

"Yes," drawled the stranger, "I heard you the first time."

"Arkansaw" went into a rage.

"Ya don't know me, huh? Well, I eat 'em like you every morning before breakfast. I'm an old she wolf from Arkansaw, I am, and the best two-handed man in the country."

The youth jerked off his coat and threw his old hat on the floor.

"Well, by gosh!" he said, "I'm from Missouri; you got to show me or I'll show you!"

"Arkansaw" handed his gun to a bystander and rushed. He was met with a smash on the jaw that stunned him. Then the lanky stranger proceeded to give the bad man a sound thrashing. When the combat ended the youth was a hero. The miners carried him in triumph through the town. Thereafter if a person made a statement of doubtful veracity some one was apt to assert that he was from Missouri and had to be shown.

The story may be fictitious, but it is true in spirit. Missouri has been the "show you" State since her birth, a hundred years past. Independence characterized her first official act. Refused admission to the Union, she became a State with duly selected government officials a year before a new star was added to the Nation's flag.

Politically Missouri has been the "show you" State, with a galaxy of statesmen unsurpassed by any Commonwealth. Her sons are legion, led by such captains as Thomas Hart Benton, Edward Bates, Frank P. Blair, jr., Richard P. Bland, Lewis F. Linn, Carl Schurz, and George C. Vest.

The spirit of the pioneer has given to the "show you" State a rank preeminent. Virginia is "the Mother of Presidents," Kentucky "the Mother of Governors," and Missouri "the Founder of States." Under the Austins, of Potosi, Mo., Missourians fought for Texas independence and later made homes in the "Lone Star" State by the tens of thousands. Settlers of the coast from Puget Sound to San Diego Harbor, Missourians first opened the gates of the Pacific to the flow of American immigration. Under Doniphan and his "one thousand Missourians" they added the Southwest to the Nation's domain and later sent the left wing of their beloved Price's army to found Montana and Idaho. They gave Wisconsin, New Mexico, and California their first governors, Arizona her last, and Idaho and and Utah their present. Builders of the Nation and founders of States have Missourians ever been. Settlers on Missouri soil and later Missouri's Territorial governors were the two famed leaders of the greatest exploring expedition in our annals—Meriwether Lewis and William Clark. The discoverer of Yellowstone Park was a native of the "show you" State—John Colter—and the father of the Santa Fe Trade and Trail another—William Becknell.

In war, as in peace, the "show you" State has more than played her part. In Indian warfare for decades she defended her borders without help from others. She sent her sons under Gentry to help subdue the Seminoles in Florida, under Dodge to conquer Black Hawk in Illinois and Wisconsin, and under Boone and others to struggle with the hordes of western tribes for half a century. She furnished the "Xenophan of the Mexican War" who triumphed in New Mexico, Durango, and Chihauhau in '48 and seven decades later gave a Pershing to the Nation to repeat and enlarge these exploits. Alone among States she sent 100,000 strong to wear the blue and 50,000 to don the gray.

The wonder of the "show you" State is that she could give so much and still be great. Sending her sons and daughters to found States or still strife, Missouri retained on her fertile soil the seed of greater harvests. For literature the world's greatest humorist was sprung from her, and as companions to Mark Twain she bore a Eugene Field and a Winston Churchill. For art a Bingham was produced. For journalism she adopted or reared a Nelson, Knapp, Pulitzer, King, and Williams. For science she gave to the world the astronomer, See, and the civil engineer, Eads.

A people wonderful in deeds are the citizens of the "show you" State. Native born, nine out of ten, they are true types of the real American when given a chance. That chance was the natural resources of Missouri, covering 69,000 square miles of fertile soil. Ranking seventh in population in 1910, the "show you" State had three and one-half million persons to till her soil, gather her berry, apple, and melon crops unsurpassed; mine her coal, lead, zinc, iron, nickel, cobalt, barytes, and stone; cut her millions of feet of hard and soft timber; make her factories productive; trap her game; and enjoy her mild climate and Ozark scenery. Cities she has of wealth and size; one, St. Louis, the fourth in the Nation; another, Kansas City, the second railroad center and live-stock market in the world; financial centers, both, each with a United States reserve bank, the only instance in the Nation of two such institutions in one State, and the former with a United States farm-loan bank. Still not an urban Commonwealth is the "show you" State, for only 38 per cent of her population live in towns of 5,000 and over; a land of homes, churches, and schools; of native American blessed in fertile acres and running waters; of mountains, woodlands, prairie, and bottoms; of cities and country—such is the "show you" State, "Imperial Missouri," whose official motto, true in precept and practice, has been and is "Let the welfare of the people be the supreme law."

The President's Appeal to Every Man, Woman, and Child.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. LANGLEY,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and for the reasons stated in making the request therefor, I include the address of the President of the United States to the people of the country as it appeared in the Washington Post of to-day.

The address is as follows:

PRESIDENT APPEALS TO EVERY AMERICAN MAN, WOMAN, AND CHILD TO "SPEAK, ACT, AND SERVE TOGETHER" TO MEET "NATION'S SUPREME TEST"—IN AN ADDRESS TO THE COUNTRY PRESIDENT WILSON TELLS HOW FARMERS, MANUFACTURERS, MIDDLEMEN, CONSUMERS, CLERGYMEN, RAILWAY MEN, MINERS, MERCHANTS, SHIPBUILDERS, AND HOUSEWIVES MAY HELP TO WIN THE WAR.

President Wilson last night issued the following address to the American people:

"My fellow countrymen, the entrance of our own beloved country into the grim and terrible war for democracy and human rights which has shaken the world creates so many problems of national life and action, which call for immediate consideration and settlement, that I hope you will permit me to address to you a few words of honest counsel and appeal with regard to them.

"We are rapidly putting our Navy upon an effective war footing and are about to create and equip a great army, but these are the simplest parts of the great task to which we have addressed ourselves. There is not a single selfish element, so far as I can see, in the cause we are fighting for.

ARE FIGHTING FOR MANKIND.

"We are fighting for what we believe and wish to be the rights of mankind and for the future peace and security of the world. To do this thing worthily and successfully we must devote ourselves to the service without regard to profit or material advantage, and with an energy and intelligence that will rise to the level of the enterprise itself. We must realize to the full how great the task is and how many things, how many kinds and elements of capacity and service and self-sacrifice, it involves.

"These, then, are the things we must do, and do well, besides fighting—the things without which mere fighting would be fruitless:

"We must supply abundant food for ourselves and for our armies and our seamen, not only, but also for a large part of the nations with whom we have now made common cause, in whose support and by whose sides we shall be fighting.

HUNDREDS OF SHIPS NEEDED.

"We must supply ships by the hundreds out of our shipyards to carry to the other side of the sea, submarines or no submarines, what will every day be needed there and abundant materials out of our fields and our mines and our factories with which not only to clothe and equip our own forces on land and sea but also to clothe and support our people for whom the gallant fellows under arms can no longer work; to help clothe and equip the armies with which we are cooperating in Europe, and to keep the looms and manufactories there in raw material; coal to keep the fires going in ships at sea and in the furnaces of hundreds of factories across the sea; steel out of which to make arms and ammunition both here and there; rails for worn-out railways back of the fighting fronts; locomotives and rolling stock to take the place of those every day going to pieces; mules, horses, cattle for labor and for military service; everything with which the people of England and France and Italy and Russia have usually supplied themselves but can not now afford the men, the materials, or the machinery to make.

URGES INCREASED EFFICIENCY.

"It is evident to every thinking man that our industries on the farm, in the shipyards, in the mines, in the factories must be made more prolific and more efficient than ever, and that they must be more economically managed and better adapted to the particular requirements of our task than they have been; and what I want to say is that the men and women who devote their thought and their energy to these things will be serving the country and conducting the fight for peace and freedom just as truly and just as effectively as the men on the battle field or in the trenches.

"The industrial forces of the country, men and women alike, will be a great national, a great international, service army, a notable and honored host engaged in the service of the Nation and the world, the efficient friends and saviors of free men everywhere.

"Thousands, nay hundreds of thousands, of men otherwise liable to military service will of right and of necessity be excused from that service and assigned to the fundamental sustaining work of the fields and factories and mines, and they will be as much a part of the great patriotic forces of the Nation as the men under fire.

ADDRESSES WORD TO FARMERS.

"I take the liberty, therefore, of addressing this word to the farmers of the country and to all who work on the farms: The supreme need of our own Nation and of the nations with which we are cooperating is an abundance of supplies. A food supply, especially for the present year, is superlative.

"Without abundant food, alike for the armies and the peoples at war, the whole great enterprise upon which we have embarked will break down and fail. The world's food reserves are low. Not only during the present emergency, but for some time after peace shall have come, both our own people and a large proportion of the people of Europe must rely upon the harvests in America.

"Upon the farmers of the country, therefore, in large measure rests the fate of the war and the fate of the nations. May the Nation not count upon them to omit no step that will increase the production of their land or that will bring about the most effectual cooperation in the sale and distribution of their products? The time is short.

"It is of the most imperative importance that everything possible be done, and done immediately, to make sure of large harvests. I call upon young men and old alike and upon the able-bodied boys of the land to accept and act upon this duty—to turn in hosts to the farms and make certain that no pains and no labor is lacking in this great matter.

APPEALS TO THE SOUTH.

"I particularly appeal to the farmers of the South to plant abundant foodstuffs as well as cotton. They can show their patriotism in no better or more convincing way than by resisting the great temptation of the present price of cotton and helping, helping upon a great scale, to feed the Nation and the peoples everywhere who are fighting for their liberties and for our own. The variety of their crops will be the visible measure of their comprehension of their national duty.

GOVERNMENT TO AID FARMERS.

"The Government of the United States and the governments of the several States stand ready to cooperate. They will do everything possible to assist farmers in securing an adequate supply of seed, an adequate force of laborers when they are most needed, at harvest time, and the means of expediting shipments of fertilizers and farm machinery, as well as of the crops themselves when harvested. The course of trade shall be as unhampered as it is possible to make it, and there shall be no unwarranted manipulation of the Nation's food supply by those who handle it on its way to the consumer. This is our opportunity to demonstrate the efficiency of a great democracy, and we shall not fall short of it!

"This, let me say to the middlemen of every sort, whether they are handling our foodstuffs or our raw materials of manufacture or the products of our mills and factories: The eyes of the country will be especially upon you.

WARNING TO THE MIDDLEMAN.

"This is your opportunity for signal service, efficient and disinterested. The country expects you, as it expects all others, to forego unusual profits, to organize and expedite shipments of supplies of every kind, but especially of food, with an eye to the service you are rendering and in the spirit of those who enlist in the ranks, for their people, not for themselves. I shall confidently expect you to deserve and win the confidence of people of every sort and station.

"To the men who run the railways of the country, whether they be managers or operative employees, let me say that the railways are the arteries of the Nation's life, and that upon them rests the immense responsibility of seeing to it that those arteries suffer no obstruction of any kind, no inefficiency or slackened power. To the merchant let me suggest the motto, 'Small profits and quick service,' and to the shipbuilder the thought that the life of the war depends upon him. The food and the war supplies must be carried across the seas no matter how many ships are sent to the bottom.

"The places of those that go down must be supplied and supplied at once. To the miner let me say that he stands where the farmer does; the work of the world waits on him. If he slackens or fails, armies and statesmen are helpless. He also is enlisted in the great service army.

EVERY GARDEN A HELP.

"The manufacturer does not need to be told, I hope, that the Nation looks to him to speed and perfect every process; and I want only to remind his employees that their service is absolutely indispensable and is counted on by every man who loves the country and its liberties.

"Let me suggest, also, that everyone who creates or cultivates a garden helps, and helps greatly, to solve the problem of the feeding of the nations; and that every housewife who practices strict economy puts herself in the ranks of those who serve the Nation. This is the time for America to correct her unpardonable fault of wastefulness and extravagance. Let every man and every woman assume the duty of careful, provident use and expenditure as a public duty and as a dictate of patriotism which no one can now expect ever to be excused or forgiven for ignoring.

SUPREME TEST HAS COME.

"In the hope that this statement of the needs of the Nation and of the world in this hour of supreme crisis may stimulate those to whom it comes, and remind all who need reminder of the solemn duties of a time such as the world has never seen before, I beg that all editors and publishers everywhere will give as prominent publication and as wide circulation as possible to this appeal.

"I venture to suggest, also, to all advertising agencies that they would perhaps render a very substantial and timely service to the country if they would give it widespread repetition. And I hope that clergymen will not think the theme of it an unworthy or inappropriate subject of comment and homily from their pulpits.

"The supreme test of the Nation has come. We must all speak, act, and serve together!

"WOODROW WILSON."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a resolution of the Lincoln Republican Club, of the city of Yonkers, N. Y., in loyal support of the President.

The resolution is as follows:

YONKERS, N. Y., April 12, 1917.

Hon. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD,
Congressman, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:

Whereas, by the infringement of the rights of American citizens, by the denial of the freedom of the seas to the American merchant marine, and by the illegal destruction of American lives and property, a state of war, which was not of our seeking, has been forced upon us by a foreign power: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Lincoln Republican Club, of the city of Yonkers, N. Y., in regular meeting assembled, do hereby affirm our loyalty to our beloved country and solemnly pledge to the President of the United States and the National Government our hearty and unfaltering support in the maintenance of our national honor, in the safeguarding of our rights and liberties as a free people, and in the protection of American lives and institutions against the aggression of an alien foe.

True to the memory of our fathers, who established and, at a later date, preserved this Union, we will uphold the heritage they have handed down to us, and, conscious of our long forbearance, which has been willfully misinterpreted, but with the courage born of the knowledge of the unassailable justice of our cause, we will preserve unsullied the honor of our country and our flag.

Very sincerely, yours,

The LINCOLN REPUBLICAN CLUB,
Per WM. J. MOSHER, Secretary.

Food Production.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. MASON,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the question of food products by printing therein a report made by the University of Illinois, and also upon the same subject an advertisement calling for farm hands in western Canada.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Daily News, Apr. 12, 1917.]

FARM HANDS WANTED—WESTERN CANADA FARMERS REQUIRE 50,000 AMERICAN FARM LABORERS AT ONCE.

Urgent demand sent out for farm help by the Government of Canada. Good wages. Steady employment. Low railway fares. Pleasant surroundings. Comfortable homes. No compulsory military service. A splendid opportunity for the young man to investigate western Canada's agricultural offerings and to do so at no expense. Only those accustomed to farming need apply.

The demand for farm labor in Canada is so great that as an inducement to secure at once the necessary help required Canada will give 160 acres of land free as a homestead and allow the farm laborer who files on land to apply the time he is working for other farmers as residence duties the same as if he had lived on the land he had applied for. This offer made only to men working on Canadian farms during 1917, thus making it possible to reduce the necessity of actual residence to two years instead of three years, as under usual conditions. This appeal for farm help is in no way connected with enlistment for military service, but solely to secure farm laborers to increase agricultural output. A wonderful opportunity to earn good wages while securing a farm. Canadian Government will pay all fare over 1 cent per mile from St. Paul and Duluth to Canadian destination. For particulars as to railway rates and districts where labor is required or other information regarding western Canada, apply to ———, authorized Canadian Government agent.

MOBILIZATION FOR FOOD PRODUCTION—A PLAN FOR CIVIL-MILITARY SERVICE TO INSURE AN ADEQUATE FOOD SUPPLY FOR THE UNITED STATES AND WESTERN EUROPE—PROPOSED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS—PREPARED BY THE FACULTY OF THE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND THE DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS.

This plan is based upon the following facts:

1. The present production of food in the United States is not increasing in proportion to the increase in population.

2. In going to war the production of food is our strongest asset, particularly in view of the reduced food production in Canada and in western Europe.

3. The experience of all time indicates that every nation in going to war puts men into active military service without regard to the disturbance of basic industrial conditions, even the production of the food of the people.

4. Indiscriminate enlistment from the farms with no plan for labor replacement is certain to reduce food production below the level of positive need, for we already have two lean years behind us, and under present conditions of a hungry world continued shortage may mean disaster.

5. If an adequate food supply is to be assured, the military plan must include an enlistment for food production as definite as for service at the front. From the first the Department of War should as rigorously protect the food production as it does any other means of national defense.

6. Anything like limiting the food of the people is wholly unnecessary if reasonable attention be given to the business of production. America has land enough, if it is properly handled, to feed both herself and western Europe; besides, more men would be required to enforce a police restriction of food than would be required to turn a scarcity into an abundance.

7. For years labor has been deserting the land and building up conditions of employment that the farmer can not meet, for it is impossible to conduct a farm upon the eight-hour plan and according to union rules. The typical family of five can not work to the best advantage the typical farm of 120 to 240 acres, and the farmer has reached the limit in the use of machinery and in the employment of his children to replace the hired help that has gone to the city. Any plan to be safe, therefore, must not only make good the enlistment from the country, but must actually add to the present labor supply of the farmer.

DETAIL PROCEDURE.

I. REGISTRATION.

Register every farm operator, whether owner, tenant, or manager, together with the number of acres of tillable land, pasture, and timber; the men he usually employs, including his sons, and the number of men he would need to employ in order to insure maximum crops.

II. ENLISTMENT.

Enlist in the civil-military service and under military pay the following classes:

1. Men above military age, especially with farm experience.

2. Men of military age and of good health but either permanently or temporarily unfit for war service at the front.

3. Boys from 15 to 18 years of age, whether from the country or from the city.

III. TRAINING-CAMP FARMS.

1. Establish at convenient points on land rented by the Government and suitable for intensive farming military camps where the enlisted men not otherwise employed (see under Employment) may be gathered and housed, such farms to be devoted to the raising of crops requiring a maximum amount of hand labor, such as vegetables, small fruits, cotton, and tobacco.

2. Erect at these centers facilities for drying and canning such food products for preservation and for transportation.

IV. EMPLOYMENT.

1. On farms: The largest asset for food production is the thousands of farms already organized under the management of experienced farmers, each with an independent business operating through established channels of trade. Here should go the maximum of the enlisted men, and the camps should be ready at all times to furnish list of available help, it being understood that men under employment by the farmer are on furlough and off Government pay, receiving from the farmer the "going wage" of the locality, dependent upon the work the man or the boy is able to do. All such enlisted men should be reported from time to time, as may be required by the military authorities.

It should be understood as a part of the plan that an enlisted man having taken service with a farmer and becoming dissatisfied may return to the camp and the lower wage, or if he is unable to give satisfaction he may be discharged, in which case he must return at once to camp.

2. Enlisted men not employed on private farms should be at the camp farms under military discipline, but under agricultural leadership; such men to devote their first attention to the production of food under the direction of an agricultural leader, chosen in each case for his ability in the particular kind of farming followed at this special camp.

The plan of farming should be such as to afford time for regular military drill for those of military age and below, not only for the welfare of the camp but in order to afford preparation for such as are going to the front as soon as their age limitations or physical disabilities are removed. In general, men of military age and above without farm experience should be quartered in regions engaged in intensive farming where oversight is possible.

As the camp is depleted by members entering the active military service its numbers should be systematically replenished by new enlistments.

Registration or enlistment for civil-military service should be considered as truly patriotic as any service, and such enlistment should be made attractive through formal recognition, as by uniforms, by use of special organizations, ranks, and degrees of efficiency, even promotion and commissions. Especially is this true for the younger men and boys.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HUBERT F. FISHER,
OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions adopted at a patriotic mass meeting in the city of Memphis, Tenn., presided over by Hon. T. C. Ashcroft, mayor.

The resolutions are as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., April 15, 1917.

Hon. HUBERT F. FISHER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Whereas, in the wisdom of Providence and under the guidance of the President and the Congress of the United States expressing the will of the people, this Nation has entered into a mighty world war; and

Whereas this is a moment for the solemn consecration of every man, woman, and child in the Nation to the cause of liberty and humanity; and

Whereas every physical, mental, and natural resource of the Nation and the people thereof should, in order to assure victory and peace, be placed at the disposition and disposal of the constituted authorities of the Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the people of Memphis in mass meeting assembled, do hereby pledge to the President and to the Congress of these United States our supreme loyalty and consecration to the national cause; and be it further

Resolved, That we do urge upon the Congress of these United States the necessity of upholding the hands of the President by immediate adoption of a system of selective universal military service that will call to the colors all classes and conditions of men, conserving their efforts along the lines to which they are best suited; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be wired to the President, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Hon. K. D. MCKELLAR, Senator, and to the Hon. HUBERT F. FISHER, Member of Congress, it being our united wish that the chairman of this mass meeting, Hon. T. C. Ashcroft, mayor of Memphis, express through this medium our pledge of loyalty and undying patriotism.

Respectfully transmitted,

T. C. ASHCROFT, Mayor.
EDWARD MCCORMACK, Secretary.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD VOIGT,
OF WISCONSIN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, from the hundreds of communications received by me bearing on the question of whether war shall be declared against Germany it is apparent that the people whom I have the honor to represent in this House are almost a unit in being opposed to such a step. I have heard in one way or another from about 8,000 voters in my district. They all protest against the proposed step, with the exception of a small number, not exceeding 20. Even if I were not in accord with the sentiments of my constituents, in a matter such as this, which so vitally affects their lives and their fortunes, I should, as their Representative, defer to their practically unanimous judgment.

I have given the subject most earnest and conscientious consideration. I should be glad to shift the responsibility of the decision, if such a step were possible. It is a question which each Member of the House must decide for himself, guided by his conscience and his responsibility to his God.

It is my judgment that both of the belligerent factions in the European war have violated our rights as their necessities to them seemed to demand. Great Britain has strewn a large portion of the ocean with mines, against the rules of international law. She has declared a blockade of belligerent and neutral countries which our State Department has declared to be illegal and indefensible, and she has modified arbitrarily the contraband list until no article of peaceful commerce remains as noncontraband. Germany has illegally operated her submarines, has sunk American ships and destroyed American lives ruthlessly and without warning.

Although at the beginning of the war our country proclaimed its neutrality, we have not, in fact been neutral. We have submitted to every violation of our rights by Great Britain. It is true that we have protested, but we have done nothing to back up our protest. We have refused to submit to violation of our rights on the part of Germany, with the result that American property and American lives have been lost. If we had attempted to go through the British mine fields with our neutral commerce to reach ports of Europe which were neutral as to us, there would have been the same resistance on the part of Great Britain which we have encountered on the part of Germany, and the same consequent loss of life and property.

Great Britain by her illegal methods has endeavored to starve Germany, and Germany by way of retaliation has conducted her submarine warfare in order to starve out Great Britain. Both of them are violating our rights and disregarding international law. If we have cause for war against one, we have it against the other.

I believe it to be the course of wisdom to stand aside and let Europe fight out its own battles. Our entry into this horrible conflagration is against our traditions, it is against the advice of the Father of our Country, which has served us well since the establishment of the Republic, and it casts to the winds the Monroe doctrine.

By the passage of this resolution we entangle ourselves in the bloody intrigues of Europe, we become the backers and bankers of countries on the verge of financial exhaustion, our young manhood will die in the trenches of Europe—and all for the purpose of settling a quarrel in the making of which we were not consulted. My soul rebels at the thought.

It is certain that the resolution before the House will pass by an overwhelming vote. My vote can not change the result, but I can not find it in my conscience to vote with the majority, and shall be compelled to vote no.

If war shall be declared, my opposition to the step will cease, and I shall be in honor and duty bound to support the Government in all steps which to my mind shall bring victory to American arms and an early peace.

I make a part of my remarks a few of the many messages and communications received from my district:

DEAR SIR: Taking it for granted that you desire to know the sentiment of your constituents, allow me to state that your stand has the indorsement not only of myself, but of 95 per cent of the voters here. The sentiment here is pro-United States and believe in leaving well enough alone. I have customers from the rural districts calling almost every day and they are most pronounced in their expression against entering the great conflict.

Very truly, yours,

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous consent granted to Members to extend their remarks on public resolution No. 1, I desire to say that I refrained from active participation in the discussion because I have been troubled with conflicting emotions, and, while always prepared to vote for what the President recommends, I somehow or other could not fashion my words together in the way I have desired. Too much already has been spoken. There has been a lot of windy-worded patriotism. Now is the time for real action, and I have received a suggestion from one of the most distinguished financiers of New England regarding the financing of war with Germany which I desire to call to the attention of the House at this time. This elaborate and well-thought-out program comes from Mr. James J. Phelan, a leading member of the firm of Hornblower & Weeks, of Boston, who is not only a born financier, but is one of the most patriotic Americans in my State. Mr. Phelan's suggestions, as they come to me, are as follows:

Regarding the contemplated United States Government issue of $5,000,000,000, I am of the opinion that the success of the offering would be very much more decided if the offering was made in installments; that is, if at the outset $2,000,000,000 be offered, $1,000,000,000 three months thereafter, $1,000,000,000 six months thereafter, and $1,000,000,000 nine months thereafter, the bonds to bear interest at 3½ per cent, but in the event of it being decided to pay a higher rate of interest on any installment subsequent to any bonds then outstanding of this issue that such bonds outstanding should have the right to convert to the higher rate bonds from the date of issue of such higher rate bonds.

It would seem to me that a plan of mobilization of bond distributors throughout the country should be made; that full information, officially in printed form, should be in the possession of all distributors before any offering in any part of the country should be attempted, and that the offering should be begun simultaneously throughout the whole country; that the services of all distributors should be without cost to the Government; that the bonds should be of such denomination as to permit the small investor to subscribe liberally numerically; that such part of the issue as is made for the purpose of lending to the allies should mature at the same time the obligation of the allies to the United States Government matures or shortly thereafter; that the balance of the bonds mature serially during the next 10 years and that provision be made through various forms of taxation for the meeting of such maturities. This taxation could take the form:

First, of an increase of all tariffs on such imports as might be construed as luxuries; second, increase of internal revenues on all wines, liquors, beers, tobacco, cigarettes, and other luxuries; third, a graded tax of from $10 to $25 on all pleasure automobiles in operation throughout the country; fourth, a graded stamp tax for places of amusement, such as moving-picture shows, theaters, operas, etc. In a word, seek out all luxuries for the purpose of taxation.

Then, next approach the income of the individual. On this item I would reduce the amount exempt from taxation from $4,000 to $1,500, making, however, such tax light, but a tax nevertheless, in order that all may assume a portion of the responsibility on the ground of equal opportunity with proportionate responsibility, and that this is a Government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." Of course, the greater burden of this tax should come where it can be most easily borne, and that on the incomes of the wealthy. This could be worked out by increasing at intervals the now existing 8 per cent excess tax—that is, the 8 per cent excess to be on all incomes from such amount to such an amount—and then increasing 1 per cent for each increase of $100,000 per annum until such time as the excess rate has been advanced to not more than 15 per cent. Corporations might be treated along similar lines, but with not so large an increase in the rate; certainly not if it is expected that they are to contribute their materials and services for practically cost; that is, it will not be fair to tax corporations, who will be called upon to furnish materials either in the raw or finished state at almost cost, an excessive tax in addition.

I have said that the bonds actually issued for our own purposes should run off serially in the next 10 years. I say this because the President has, I believe, stated that the present generation should pay the expense of the war. I think it is generally assumed that the present generation means within the next 10 to 15 years. Most of our Government bond issues have no actual maturity, but are redeemable after a certain date, and this new feature must be made clear to the administration. I personally think that the suppression of German militarism, while essential to the present day, will mean fully as much, if not more, to posterity, and that, therefore, we would not be shifting to posterity our present responsibilities if we were to allow them to pay a part of the cost of the tremendous benefits to be derived by crushing Prussianism as we understand it to-day. Whatever we do, and how we do it in a financial way, great care must be taken that the economic condition of the country be jarred as little as possible, if at all.

As regards the amount of the total $5,000,000,000 loan that New England might absorb, say, in the course of 12 months, I would think it might be somewhere between $350,000,000 and $500,000,000. Of the initial $2,000,000,000, if the loan is brought out in installments and the first installment is for that amount, I would expect that New England would subscribe for $150,000,000 to $200,000,000.

The patriotism of the people of the country is unquestionable. The desire on the part of all to aid is equally plain. However, that the best results be obtained in a matter of this kind, mobilization of experts, that an organization of greatest efficiency can be had from the very beginning of the offering, is essential. An extensive campaign of advertising should be made beyond that of the various banks and banking houses. The tremendous success of the recent British internal loan, where there were 8,000,000 subscribers, was due to the widespread advertising which had prepared the minds of the people several weeks ahead, making each individual feel that the war was his personal concern.

Mr. Speaker, may I also insert, as an extension of my remarks, the following indorsement of my position, just received from my own home town?—

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS S. BUTLER,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include communications from and resolutions adopted by certain organizations in my district. The matter referred to is as follows:

PARKESBURG CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Parkesburg, Pa., April 7, 1917.

Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have the honor to advise that at the regular monthly meeting of the directors of the Parkesburg Chamber of Commerce, held April 3, 1917, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas we, as loyal citizens of the great United States of America and also of the borough of Parkesburg, county of Chester, State of Pennsylvania, realizing the gravity of the offenses committed by a foreign power upon the lives and property of our inhabitants while in the pursuit of their peaceful and legitimate rights on the high seas: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the board of directors of the Parkesburg Chamber of Commerce, in the regular monthly meeting of the said board, held the evening of the 3d of April, A. D. 1917, do hereby put ourselves on record as being heartily in sympathy with the declarations of our esteemed President, His Excellency Woodrow Wilson, as made by him before the assembled bodies of Congress on the 2d day of said month of April, and are thoroughly in accord with his ideas for the correction of said abuses as above stated; be it further

"Resolved, That our citizens of the said borough of Parkesburg be requested to display prominently in and above their property our beloved national emblem in token of their approval of the course pursued by our national authorities."

Signed as per orders of the board.

H. A. BEALE, Jr., President.
C. E. MILLER, Secretary.

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States a bill providing for some form of universal training, by which there may be at all times in the United States of America in reserve and supplemental to the Regular Army a force of men prepared by training and experience to take up their duty as soldiers of this Republic for the purpose of guarding its welfare and of protecting it from invasion: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the people of the city of Coatesville, Chester County, Pa., in meeting assembled, this 9th day of April, A. D. 1917, do hereby approve the said bill and indorse unreservedly the principle of universal training so that there may be at all times in reserve a body of citizen soldiery who are prepared by experience and education to render to their country that service which their country has the right and privilege of requiring of them; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to His Excellency Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, and to the Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER, Representative in Congress from this district, and that we do urge upon the said Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER that he cast his vote in Congress in favor of such bill.

A. H. SWING, Chairman.

CHESTER, PA., March 29, 1917.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States of America.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY. The business and professional men of the city of Chester and its vicinity, assembled in meeting at the Chester Club, March 29, 1917, recognizing the gravity of the situation confronting the American people, and realizing the weighty responsibilities resting upon the Chief Magistrate of the Nation, hereby solemnly renew their oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, and pledge their cordial, united, and unqualified support to the administration and to Congress in every measure to be adopted by the executive and the legislative branches of the Government providing for the national safety and promotive of the unsullied honor of their beloved country.

It is the sense of this meeting that in view of the persistently hostile attitude of the Imperial Government of this Nation such safety can be secured and such honor maintained by force of arms alone.

Should war be declared or be recognized as already existing, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States may be assured of the loyal sympathy and support of the people of Delaware County.

GARNETT PENDLETON, Chairman,
CHARLES R. LONG,
Dr. W. KNOWLES EVANS,
Committee on Resolution.

SPRING CITY, PA.

Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

In a large and enthusiastic patriotic mass meeting the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That this large and patriotic gathering of Spring City and Royersford express to Congress our devotion to the Government of the United States and pledge to Congress our loyal and whole-hearted support in whatever may be done in the present and international crisis.

Military Training at Our Schools.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some arguments in favor of a bill I introduced to provide universal military training at our schools and colleges.

MILITARY TRAINING AT OUR SCHOOLS.

In our discussions of the various schemes for putting our country in proper condition to take and keep the place due her among the great nations of the earth, sufficient importance is not being given to the imparting of military training at all schools big enough to justify the United States in furnishing the necessary instructors.

No good reason is known for depriving any school, denominational or otherwise, of the great benefits to be derived from systematic and healthy exercises given the students by competent instructors. The fact that these exercises are useful in the training of a man for military duties in war should not act as a deterrent to any young man, whatever may be the walk in life which he expects to follow after leaving school, and it should increase his desire to be thus trained if he is a patriot and loves his country.

No oath of allegiance or of enlistment need be required of the boy while at school, nor any obligation to complete the military training which he may have begun.

Uniform clothing would greatly increase the interest taken and the benefit received, but it is not absolutely essential.

The fact that several million school boys of varying ages are annually being instructed in military training will strengthen our Government beyond calculation, even though one-half of those still at school may not have been allowed to handle a rifle.

EFFECT ON THE BOY.

Besides the great increase in physical power and health which military training while at school would and does bring to each boy fortunate enough to receive it, he also imbibes habits of cleanliness and order, and becomes more patient, persistent, and confident, altogether a much more capable man.

Team work brings out the powers of a leader among his fellows which otherwise may remain latent and undiscovered. The training advocated increases one's love of country as nothing else does except actual military service in the Army or Navy.

While receiving military training at school, the daily sight of the flag at drills and exercises and the ceaseless hearing of our country and of our duty in case of need, must inevitably tend to arouse patriotic sentiments which grow stronger still if the boy chooses to keep on following the flag. Commodore Stephen Decatur's toast, "Our country; may she always be right; but, right or wrong, our country," is more apt to receive the proper echo from one who has received military training than from one brought up in the idea that wars have ceased and that they never achieved any good.

Military training will be popular among the boys at high schools and other schools, just as it is now with the institutions so fortunate as to have it in their curricula. They will be proud of it and take to it greedily and enjoy it the more as they observe their own progress. And if, after receiving such training the boy should continue in the same path and choose the military life he will only follow where better, indeed our best men, have led and blazed the road.

PROGRESS GRADUAL.

Progress should be gradual, beginning at the very beginning, with boys too small to carry a rifle but fully capable of executing many calisthenic exercises, marches, and simple drill movements, all without arms; but in some instances using a wooden wan or light rod. Military training periods should not be too long, and fatigue the boy and cause him to lose interest and fear the work. This applies with greatest force to the beginning of such instruction.

For boys younger than 14 years of age, 15 to 20 minutes daily training in squads, the number in the squad increasing as the boys increase in knowledge, would answer every purpose. During their fifteenth year the training period should be lengthened a few minutes, but not to require longer than 30 minutes' instruction. After receiving the rifle at 15 it may be again increased, but never to exhaustion, an hour being the limit for any schoolboy drill. Frequent rests should be given at all stages of the training. The boy's age, size, and intelligence would determine exactly when he should be given a rifle. Fifteen years of age would be a good average age for a boy to begin his instruction or training with a rifle, but before being thus favored he will already have learned so many of the exercises, marches, and movements incident to the instruction of a company and battalion that to complete his training with a rifle will have been made smooth and easy work.

VARIOUS DUTIES.

During the boy's military training he will fill various positions, the more apt and capable being given the higher duties and offices which belong to the different military grades of noncommissioned and commissioned officers.

The boy who is a corporal this year will, if capable, be a sergeant next year and a commissioned officer the year after next, and the desire and struggle for these offices cause all the best boys to study harder and behave better in all their duties at school.

The military department is of great assistance to all the others, besides bettering the sanitation and appearance of the grounds and buildings. Military method and system will soon show good results in everything connected with the institution.

TARGET FIRING.

Instruction in the use of the rifle as a weapon will naturally be a part, and a very important part, of a boy's military training at school. Target firing will be given toward the end of his attendance at school, when he is big and strong and intelligent enough to retain what is taught him.

When no open rifle range is available for target firing a good substitute for instruction could be improvised in any closed acre or half acre, with firing at diminished distances and at diminished or reduced targets, just as is done in the Army in gallery practice.

In the Army this kind of training, preceded by systematic, careful, and thorough instruction in how to hold the piece, point, aim, and fire it, is considered indispensable, and it greatly shortens the length of time needed to make a good shot out of one who has never fired a rifle before.

ARMY INSTRUCTORS.

In order to derive full benefit from any system of military training used, said system should be uniform throughout the Union and should be carried into effect by instructors who should be at the same time competent, reliable, and inspiring confidence and respect.

Only the Army can furnish the number and kind of instructors needed, and the Army should do it. Military training at institutions having less than 75 boys could easily be given by a competent sergeant; one having from 100 to 300 should have a lieutenant or a captain; and one twice as large should be given a field officer and a lieutenant or a captain as assistant.

One or more regular noncommissioned officers should, at least in the beginning, be assigned a school to instruct students in the best method of cleaning and caring for rifles.

UNIFORM STANDARD.

Simple, short, and few regulations should be prepared, under orders from the War Department, regulating the amount and kind of military training required of each school, and every school should be compelled to live up to the standard thus set.

Naturally, the kind and amount of instruction required should vary somewhat with the number of boys in attendance and the facilities available, but it should be understood that military training is a duty to the United States, to our country, and it should not be allowed to be slighted or evaded in the least.

SCHEME OF INSTRUCTION.

A satisfactory and workable plan or scheme of instruction to be required at so many and different kinds of schools would call for careful thorough preliminary investigation, and this could best be accomplished by a composite board or committee of Army officers and representatives from public schools and other schools.

A system could thus be worked out which would apply to all kinds of schools, the requirements differing somewhat for different kinds of schools. The public school's representative would be able to make suggestions applicable to his kind of school, which perhaps would not apply to some other school; and the same statement would apply to other representatives on the board.

SUPPLEMENTED BY A DRAFT LAW.

While military training at schools would supply millions of good material for service in war, it is now well established that the slow processes and results of depending upon volunteers will not save our country if attacked by any great power.

Therefore a thorough and complete draft or conscription law, necessary to our country in any case, would enable us to quickly gather in and make fine soldiers out of the grown-up boys and young men who have been receiving military training at schools. Such a law should be on our statute books now, and its absence therefrom places us at a great disadvantage.

These boys and young men would be especially useful in furnishing noncommissioned officers and junior officers, all to be commissioned by the President.

CONNECTION WITH OTHER PREPAREDNESS SCHEMES.

A careful reading of the foregoing will show that what is herein advocated is built along the lines of what is said to be practiced in Switzerland and Australia as part of their military schemes. But whether or not the balance of either of their schemes or any other scheme for preparedness is made the law in our country the value and advantage of military training at schools is not diminished. Really, it must be evident that with no other uniform and complete scheme adopted, the value of the military training given at schools is greatly enhanced, and such training is therefore the more necessary while we are struggling with this great problem.

When considered in connection with any scheme, whether used in Germany, Japan, Australia, Argentina, or Switzerland, it is claimed for military training at schools that—

First. It will interfere with no other scheme for achieving preparedness against war.

Second. It is dependent upon no other scheme.

Third. It is independent of every other scheme.

Fourth. It would assist any and every other scheme that has been advocated or practiced in any enlightened country.

Therefore the sooner we begin it the better for us and our country.

Where All the Men Are Kings.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am in receipt of a patriotic song written by Eleanore See Inslee and set to music composed by Mrs. H. L. Marshall, both of Muskogee, Okla., in my district. It is entitled "Where All the Men Are Kings."

This song was written and the music composed in response to a general demand through the press for a patriotic song for use in the present war. In order to give publicity to it, I ask that same be inserted in the RECORD.

The song is as follows:

WHERE ALL THE MEN ARE KINGS.

The world is going crazy, so they say—they say,
And men are fighting demons 'cross the way,
But Uncle Sammy winks,
As lovingly he thinks
Of loyal boys who guard him every day,
Through valley, lake, and hill to mountain's rim—Take care!
They all are on the watch, protecting him;
And sons of blue and gray
In khaki march away,
To carry Glory's message anywhere;
For all the men are kings
Where freedom's banner flings
Its ample folds across Columbia's breast.
Then forward march for freedom, for brotherhood and love,
And heaven's mighty legion will aid us from above.

From East to West there speeds a message clear—"Hello!
We're waiting, boys, your frame of mind to hear."
And quick the answer runs,
"We're standing by our guns,
Old Glory's colors flying far and near;
And when the order comes to 'Shoulder arms!'—Aye! Aye!"
Our women run our business and our farms,
For side by side we stand
A combination grand,
The circle's shield from all the world's alarms.
Yet all the men are kings
Where freedom's banner flings
Its ample folds across Columbia's breast.
Then forward march for freedom, for brotherhood and love,
And heaven's mighty legion will aid us from above.

And so from North and South and West and East, hurrah!
The sons of Uncle Sam will fight the "beast"
That holds the world in check
And feet upon its neck,
They'll lend a helping hand unto the least;
For Uncle Sammy's heart is deep and wide—Yes! Yes!
And in it loving-kindness doth abide;
There's room and some to spare
For all who enter there—
A little home and roses twined beside;
And all the men are kings
Where freedom's banner flings
Its ample folds across Columbia's breast.
Then forward march for freedom, for brotherhood and love,
And heaven's mighty legion will aid us from above.

Resolution of the National Security League of St. Joseph, Mo.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES F. BOOHER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter addressed to the President, accompanied by a copy of the resolutions passed by a patriotic mass meeting of the people of northwest Missouri, held in St. Joseph, Mo., April 9, 1917:

ST. JOSEPH, MO., April 9, 1917.

President WOODROW WILSON,
Washington, D. C.:

At a mass meeting held to-night under auspices of the St. Joseph, Mo., branch of the National Security League, at which 7,000 were present, the following resolutions were passed:

"Whereas the Government of the United States has declared that a state of war exists, a war not of our own choosing but rendered necessary by the arrogant, illegal, and inhuman course of the Imperial German Government; and

"Whereas it is imperative that this country prepare to defend itself and to protect its citizens on both land and sea, as well as to promote the principle of universal democracy: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the citizens of St. Joseph and northwest Missouri in mass meeting assembled hereby unhesitatingly and unequivocally indorse and commend the action taken by the President and Congress of the United States against the Imperial German Government, and that we pledge ourselves to uphold and maintain this action to whatever extent is demanded of us; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the necessity of immediate legislation necessary to carry the war in which we are now engaged to a successful conclusion, and also the passage of whatever laws may seem necessary to provide for universal military training, not with a view of becoming in any sense a military nation but that we may be placed in a position to defend ourselves at all times against the aggressions of any and all enemies."

R. T. FORBES, Chairman.
J. G. WING, Secretary.

Universal Military Training.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
OF NEW JERSEY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I have received since the call for an extra session, and am still receiving, hundreds of communications from my constituents on the subject of universal military training and service and also conscription. It is a physical impossibility to reply personally to each one of these communications, even were I to devote myself solely to this task. I will therefore, in a general way, state my position on this question. I have for a long time been an advocate of universal military training and service and have repeatedly so stated. I favor the plan outlined by the General Staff of the Army and embodied in the bill introduced in the House at the present session by Representative KAHN, of California, ranking Republican member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Regarding the raising of the needed increments for the present war, I favor the administration plan of selective conscription. The liability of all to serve in time of national danger is indisputable. It is, of course, not intended to compel anyone to serve for whom any reasonable excuse exists for remaining at home.

The continuance of production of food products and necessary industrial products must be safeguarded against too great a depletion of producers along such lines. System and order in filling the ranks must be observed. Furthermore, there exists no reason why the burden of fighting the war should rest solely on those who realize their duty in the premises and not as well upon those to whom their duty must be pointed out.

It Means Something to Be An American.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,
OF WASHINGTON,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, April 16, 1917.

We have in America a melting pot into which all races have been placed, but you can not fuse until you have the fire; and perhaps this great war is going to give us the necessary fire to fuse all our elements together; and if there are elements that refuse to fuse, throw them into the fire. (Former Ambassador Gerard.)

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 2893, which would permit agents of foreign countries to come to the United States, pick up citizens of those countries who have come here presumably to complete the process of naturalization, and to be of us—to pick them up, carry them to Europe, and place them into the armies of their countries, should not be passed. At least it should not be passed without full and careful consideration. We should know something about it, and I regret that an effort was made to give it a quick "unanimous-consent" consideration here last Saturday, with a view to passing it, at a time when the House had spent the whole day in consideration and passage of the war-bond measure, and at a moment late in the afternoon when many of the Members, feeling that a day's work had been done, were leaving their seats for their homes.

Mr. Speaker, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 14 shows that unanimous consent was asked for the consideration of H. R. 2893, which bill is as follows, and which has since become No. 6 on the House Calendar:

A bill to amend section 10 of chapter 2 of the Criminal Code.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of chapter 2 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. Whoever, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, enlists or enters himself, or hires or retains another person to enlist or enter himself, or to go beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States with intent to be enlisted or entered in the service of any foreign prince, State, colony, district, or people as a soldier or as a marine or seaman on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque, or privateer shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than three years: Provided, That this section shall not apply to citizens or subjects of any country engaged in war with a country with which the United States is at war."

The amendment consists of the proviso—

That this section shall not apply to citizens or subjects of any country engaged in war with a country with which the United States is at war.

In making a brief statement in behalf of the bill, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee said:

The proviso permits allies to send their recruiting officers into the United States for the purpose of recruiting among their own citizens and subjects. It is a very important measure and a very urgent one. I do not feel at liberty to give all the reasons for the passage of the bill.

The debate over the request for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill Saturday afternoon resulted in an objection by Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, after some inquiry by Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. RAKER, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, and others.

I am pledged to support all measures that might tend to hasten the end of this war. But this bill, if enacted, will do more harm than good, I am convinced. I can not believe it is an administration measure. The attempt to pass it without even a report shows the need of a committee on the conduct of the war, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

REPORT ON THE BILL.

Subsequent inquiry developed that no report had been filed on the bill, and in to-day's House proceedings the following occurred:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 2893) to amend section 10 of chapter 2 of the Criminal Code, which bill was up Saturday afternoon and partially discussed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know that I shall, I see the gentleman from North Carolina is not here. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] told me the other day that the bill was reported, but I have not gotten a reported copy and it has not been printed as being reported and it is not on the calendar. His attention ought to be directed to it.

Mr. GARNER. What is the title of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is the bill (H. R. 2893) to amend section 10 of chapter 2 of the Criminal Code.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] told me on Saturday this bill has been reported.

Mr. MANN. I see it is not on the calendar; I looked this morning, and it is not on the list of reported bills. I am careful to get all bills reported, and I have not received that.

The SPEAKER. One of the clerks informs the Chair that the report on this bill has just been put in the basket.

Mr. Speaker, the report is now available. It is dated to-day, was printed late this afternoon, having been submitted by Mr. WEBB, from the Committee on the Judiciary, and is as follows:

Report to accompany H. R. 2893.

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2893) to amend section 10 of chapter 2 of the Criminal Code, unanimously report the same back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

It is quite evident that the allies who are fighting a country against whom we have also declared war, should be permited to recruit from their citizens and subjects in the United States for the purpose of fighting their country's battles.

In view of the fact that our own country is contemplating the conscription of our boys to wage war against Germany, certainly the allies should be permitted to, at least, persuade their citizens in the United States to go and do likewise. The bill merely gives the allies permission to recruit among their own citizens and subjects within our borders.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the report might be a little more complete. I hear that it is considered advisable to send some United States troops abroad quickly; that it is proposed to hurry up this bill, then solicit a lot of Italians, Russians, Polacks, and south of Europe subjects, throw them into companies, and send them abroad ostensibly as troops from the United States. Is that a good plan? Is it a fair plan?

My belief is that many thousands of aliens who were in the United States have returned to their colors abroad since the European war began. Others might desire to go, but is it a good idea to let officers of other countries enlist them within the borders of the United States? Will it not make trouble?

EFFORTS TO NATURALIZE ALIENS.

It has been said that we have been remiss in the effort to make citizens of those who have come among us in recent years. We have been. But, for a considerable time, a great movement for the naturalization of aliens has been going on. Night schools have been opened for that purpose.

The Department of Labor has carried on a great and successful propaganda for the naturalization of the aliens among us. Thousands upon thousands have taken out their first papers through these efforts. Are these "first-paper" aliens to be protected in any way if this bill, H. R. 2893, is passed?

These men go into the United States Army and the United States Navy on their first papers and have made good soldiers and good sailors. They will continue to enlist. They would rather be in our armies than in the armies of the countries they have left.

WAR TO FUSE THE DISCORDANT ELEMENTS.

Mr. Speaker, if there is to be one great advantage from the fact that the United States has entered the European war it is to be from the fact that it is likely to result in a real fusing of the hitherto discordant elements among us. There has been clashing and discord. Our national fabric has not been closely woven. Those who have advocated so strenuously for 20 years past a restriction of immigration have realized that.

Their opposition has not been against the individual foreigner, but against their arrival in such numbers as to weaken the fabric we have woven in the name of liberty, which we call the United States of America. We have felt that we could care for all who were here, but for not too many more. We are in duty bound to care for all who are honestly within our gates. This is their opportunity to learn that it means something to be an American—or even to have taken the first step toward becoming a citizen of the United States.

Former Ambassador Gerard expressed a great sentiment at a meeting in New York a week ago when he said:

We have in America a melting pot into which all races have been placed, but you can not fuse until you have the fire; and perhaps this great war is going to give us the necessary fire to fuse all our elements together; and if there are elements that refuse to fuse, throw them into the fire.

Mr Speaker, now is the time to bind all discordant elements. These aliens will go into our armies. Let them not be either coerced or even solicited to go into other armies by any agent who may set foot on these shores from any country whatsoever. The aliens among us will enlist in our armies, as they have done heretofore. They have earned citizenship that way from the time of our first war. The War of 1812 was a conspicuous example.

Mr. Speaker, if it is considered good military policy to send American troops abroad, let them be American troops, under the flag of the United States, with American officers, who shall give their commands in the English language. There are plenty of Americans who are anxious to volunteer for service abroad and who will be glad to have with them these "aliens" in liberal proportions. But they do not want an "all-alien American Army in France or anywhere else.

We have abundant proof that the foreign born among us are loyal to a degree. Every Member of Congress is receiving patriotic resolutions by the score from citizens who meant it when they took the oath of allegiance to the United States.

I have a great many, including one from the German born of Puyallup, Wash., one from the Greeks of Hoquiam, and one from the South Slav Culture and Political Club, of Tacoma. This last one I take the liberty of placing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I regret that I can not use space for all of the resolutions. The one in question follows:

Resolutions.

Whereas the South Slav Culture and Political Club, of Tacoma, Wash., having as its members men who immigrated to this United States of America, seeking refuge and peace from the tyrannous Government of Austria-Hungary, and having enjoyed here freedom and prosperity, in appreciation thereof, at a meeting regularly convened and assembled, as good and loyal citizens, do hereby Resolve, That we do pledge to the Government of the United States of America and to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, the President thereof, our unqualified and steadfast support in this critical time in any action they think best to guard the honor and dignity of this country and the lives and rights of its citizens; and be it further

Resolved, Being in favor of national preparedness, we do hereby approve and commend the passing of a law by Congress providing for universal military training as proposed by the Staff of the United States Army and as set forth in a bill introduced by Senator George G. Chamberlain, of Oregon; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be mailed by our secretary to the President of the United States and to our Representative in Congress, Hon. Albert Johnson, and to the Jugoslavenska Kancelarija (International Slavonic Office), in Washington, D. C., and that said resolutions be spread at large on the minutes of our club.

SOUTH SLAV CULTURE AND POLITICAL CLUB, OF TACOMA, WASH.

IT MEANS SOMETHING TO BE AN AMERICAN.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, it means something to be an American. Let me present this letter:

ABERDEEN, WASH., April 9, 1917.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Being one of the thousands of bitterly disappointed Germans, whose action in securing final citizen's papers was blocked by the declaration of a state of war, and who was once more encouraged by the news that Senator TOWNSEND, of Michigan, had introduced a bill the passing of which would admit Germans who have resided here five years or more to citizenship, I most respectfully petition you to support this or any similar measure that may come before the House, and do all in your power to give me a chance to share the privileges and responsibilities of citizenship in this country of my choice.

I have taken preliminary steps toward final papers two months ago, but owing to the fact that I entered the United States as a seaman on the American schooner Watson A. West, I was passed by the immigration authorities to "follow vocation" instead of being manifested as an immigrant. Thus much valuable time was lost in securing the certificate of arrival necessary to be able to file the petition for final papers.

Now I am termed an alien "enemy," a term that cuts me to the heart, because I am a most friendly alien, and I am, let me assure you, Mr. JOHNSON, the makings of a loyal and bona fide citizen of the United States.

Would you kindly give me your view as to whether or not and when the Townsend bill would carry?

Most respectfully, yours, A. W. K. HIRCHE-BRANDIS.

P. S.—Anno Domini 1812, during the British-American war, Congress lifted the bars to British subjects who wanted to become citizens of the United States; why not now to faithful applicants of German birth?

And, Mr. Speaker, why not?

BANKER TO SUPPORT DEPENDENTS.

It means something to be an American. At a great patriotic meeting in Aberdeen, Wash., two weeks or so ago, the leading banker there, Hon. W. J. Patterson, pledged himself to the financial support of every dependent of any member of Company G of the State troops from that city. Here is what Mr. Patterson said at that meeting, which was a farewell to the troops:

I came into the United States 26 years ago, after 19 barefoot years in Canada, because I thought there were greater possibilities. I am willing to go barefoot again for the sake of this blessed United States—my country. All I have accumulated or may accumulate, and life itself, are at the disposal of this Nation, to which I give my entire, whole-hearted loyalty.

Mr. Patterson said he regretted that he had passed the age limit for active duty in the fighting line, but that he could and would help all dependents of members of Company G, and would see to it that they were provided for until the return of the troops. That, Mr. Speaker, is what it means to be an American.

The United States has been since the beginning an asylum of refuge for the oppressed of all the world. Lately we partially barred the doors because we feared that if too many came we might before long jeopardize our own free institutions.

Now we are helping to carry liberty to all the world. Let us not mar our great record by permitting one single alien among us to feel that we have not protected him just as he knew we would when he came to us. If he wants to go abroad and fight under the colors from which he has not fully released himself, he can go without the aid of this bill, H. R. 2893, unless, of course, he would go to a country with which we are now at war. If he wants to help in the great struggle for the freedom of the world, he can enlist under Old Glory in the Army of the United States.

NOTE.

In seven years ended June 30, 1915, there came to the United States 6,253,087. A very large number of these have not completed naturalization.

The population of New York State (census of 1910) is 30.2 per cent foreign born; Connecticut, 29.69 per cent; Pennsylvania, 18.8 per cent; Rhode Island, 33 per cent; Wisconsin, 22 per cent; Washington, 22.4 per cent; Massachusetts, 31.5 per cent; Montana, 25.2 per cent; Illinois, 21.4 per cent; and so on down to Georgia, with 0.6 per cent; Mississippi, 0.5 per cent; South Carolina, 0.4 per cent; and North Carolina, 0.3 per cent.

Our Boys in the Army.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a letter received from a man who has a son in the Navy, with reference to the general situation.

The letter is as follows:

MESQUITE, TEX., April 12, 1917.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to express myself on conscription, and especially the calling out for service in the Army of our boys only of the age of 19 to 23 years. I am sure it is a better way to call for volunteers of men of military age, preferably young men. But it is an insult to our young manhood to ask them to absolutely bear the first and possibly the very worst of the hardships of the war. They are no more able to stand those hardships than men up to 35 years of age, and life is just as dear to them as to a man of any other age. Let the burden begin equal and end equal. We claim this a free country, not a European country. Every man will demonstrate his patriotism if given an opportunity. I have four sons, and it is possible all four of them will have to serve. The youngest is already in the Navy, and am sure the others will go if necessary. But no man wishes to see all his boys give their services and possibly their lives while others sit back and await results. Of course I am not so young, but I can and will put in my time farming to help feed the people and am just as patriotic as any man. I believe in all of military age doing their part and not put all the hardships on the youth of our beloved country. Hence I ask that you get this matter before Congress on behalf of our boys.

Most respectfully, A. J. JONES.

The Crisis Confronting the Country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BEN JOHNSON,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a resolution adopted by the supreme board of the directors of the Knights of Columbus.

The resolution is as follows:

The supreme board of directors of the Knights of Columbus, at a called meeting held this 14th day of April, 1917, in the city of Washington, realizing that the crisis confronting the country calls for the active cooperation and patriotic zeal of every true citizen, hereby reaffirms the devotion of 400,000 members of this order in this country to the Republic and its laws, and pledges continued and unconditional support of the President and the Congress of this Nation in their determination to protect its honor and its ideals of humanity and right.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and to the House of Representatives and to the Senate of the United States of America.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, President Wilson in his address April 2 suggested to Congress that Congress should declare war on the Imperial German Government and to immediately take steps not only to put the country on a more thorough state of defense but also to exert all its power, to employ all its resources, to bring the Government of the German Empire to terms and end the war. Practical cooperation in counsel and action of the Governments now at war with Germany and extension to those Governments of most liberal financial credit is suggested by the President.

The President states it will involve the drafting into service of at least 500,000 men, and the authorization of subsequent additional increment and the granting of adequate means to the Government sustained.

The purpose of the President is clearly indicated. There can be no question as to what he intends; so if we pass this resolution and the President carries out his plan, no Member of Congress will stand in his way or hinder him from carrying it out. After Congress has given the instructions no one, certainly no one of those who vote for the resolution and who are directly responsible for the course to be pursued, will stand in his way. It will be too late then to object to a $5,000,000,000 loan to foreign governments, our allies to be, or to the billions to be expended, or to the drafting of millions of men into service, and the possibilities of millions of lives being sacrificed. No; when war is once declared, it becomes the duty of American citizens to do everything in their power to sustain the President in every honest and patriotic endeavor to successfully prosecute and end the war. Certainly no one voting for war and the sacrifices to be made will desert him and the country in its hours of peril.

The issue is here, and no Member can escape it. The responsibility is grave. Honest differences of opinions, of course; one as honest and conscientious in his conviction as the other; all realize the great responsibility. To those who claim a corner on patriotism and to be the only pure champions of patriotism and what is in the best interests of all concerned we extend our sympathy. The question has been discussed in an honest, patriotic, and dignified manner on both sides. Every Member has made up his mind how he is going to vote, and anything I or anybody may say will not change a single vote.

The resolution is going to pass. No one doubts that. Notwithstanding, I feel it my duty to offer a few observations. In so doing, I shall deal only with indisputable facts. That is, facts universally admitted here in the discussion.

Property and American ships have been lost, American lives have been taken, our rights have been invaded, and our national honor is at stake. Germany and Great Britain, Mexico, and others are all guilty. No defense has been offered for either. Certainly, I have no word of defense for either one, and I shall confine my remarks to the three first named.

First, I desire to refer to a declaration of the accredited representatives of the German Empire, United States, and England, and other leading nations of the world in 1900, who met in London at England's request and prepared for in various Hague conferences. One of the many things declared for by the accredited representatives of the nations was that a blockade must be limited to the ports and coasts belonging to or occupied by the enemy, and that a blockade, in order to be binding upon one nation must be maintained by a force sufficiently large to prevent access to the enemy's coast, and that under no circumstances must a blockade bar access to the ports or the coast of neutral countries. Nothing new or unreasonable about that. That has been the international law for ages. It has been approved by our courts and adhered to by our own Government. In our Civil War our Supreme Court denied our Government the right to stop the shipping of goods from England up the Rio Grande to be loaded on the Mexican side to be transported from there to Brownsville, Tex., for the southern Confederacy. Certainly, if our Supreme Court was right in thus protecting the rights of neutral commerce in contending that foreign neutral ships and goods had access to foreign neutral ports no one will deny our ships and goods the same right.

No one, so far as I know, has questioned our rights as a neutral to ship food to the people of Germany or any other country. It is agreed that that right has been denied us by England. Three months after the beginning of the war, or on November 2, 1914, England announced that on three days' notice all of the North Sea, a vast stretch of the Atlantic Ocean extending from Scotland to Iceland, was barred not only to our commerce but to the commerce of the world. Under international law and according to the holdings of our Supreme Court all of that vast stretch of the area of the Atlantic Ocean was, and should be, free, not only to our trade, but to all neutral nations.

Notwithstanding our rights their deadly contact mines were planted there. Ships have been sunk. I refer to the Carib and the Evelyn.

The report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs (H. R. 21069) of the Sixty-fourth Congress calls attention to the fact that the Carib and the Evelyn were sunk by mines, with a loss of several American lives, because of entering into the Great Britain barred zone. Secretary Lansing, in his letter to Mr. RAMSEYER, under date of April 15, 1917, read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], stated that one American citizen lost his life with the Carib. Hundreds of floating mines taken up and rendered harmless in the North Sea were found to be of British origin. Our just rights and certain agreements by its accredited representatives have been denied us. So there is no question of England's having violated international law.

On February 3, about three months after England's declaring a blockade, Germany established her war zone and gave notice that ships going within the declared barred zone would be sunk by mines or submarines. American ships and many American people have been destroyed without warning. All agree that both England and Germany have violated international law. Neither Germany nor England has attempted to define the legality of the act. Our rights to free and open seas have been denied us by both.

The only difference seems to be the magnitude of the crime committed against us. To that all agree that more ships and people have been destroyed by Germany than by England, and that the reason for it is that we have submitted to the dictates of one and not to the other. All admit that had our ships with American citizens on them been sent into Great Britain's forbidden zone, as they have been sent into Germany's barred zone, the hazard would have been the same, and loss of property and lives would probably have been the same in one case as in the other. Deadly contact mines floating in the ocean are, of course, beyond control, and any ship coming in contact with them, whether neutral or not, goes down without warning.

Whether a ship is sunk or American lives lost by a mine or a submarine, with or without warning, in violation of international law, the consequences and responsibilities are the same, as before stated, the only difference being that Germany has destroyed more lives and property than England has, and for that no one can or will offer excuses.

I fear, if a full account was taken of property destroyed and confiscated, the mutilation and taking American lives in Mexico, or all the hardships inflicted upon us by Mexico, would be even greater than either of the two.

Considering it all, what is the just and proper thing to do? Germany is generally admitted to be guilty and should be brought to terms and end her warfare upon us; but how about others? If we are to fight for principles and national rights and honor, are not property rights and the lives of American citizens destroyed in one war zone as sacred and dear to us as in the other? If we are to go to war with one nation in order to maintain our rights, are we justified in excusing another? I am unable to distinguish between them. I am unable to see, if we are to fight for principles and our national honor, how we can justify our action or with dignity serve our ends by attempting to enforce our principles and terms upon one and not upon others.

When we are asked to declare our cause for declaring war with one and not the other, what will the answer be? The contention is, "To maintain our national honor, rights, and dignity." What will be the answer when asked why our rights and honor are to be fought for in one land and sacrificed in the other? Why are outrages committed against us to be condoned in one land and not in the other? Why are we fighting one nation guilty of invading our rights, and fighting side by side and loaning money to other nations equally guilty? Are we not by our action in declaring war upon one, and sending the cream of manhood into the trenches, fighting side by side and under the flag of another guilty nation, approving of the course of one and condemning the other? Will principles and justice be vindicated in that way?

It seems to me that after acquiescing in numerous violations committed by England, to now go to war with Germany because of her committing similar violations will place our country in a most embarrassing position.

No; if our war is to be a war for principles, then I submit that we can not fight one nation for wronging us and condone similar wrongs by another. No; our national honor, dignity, and rights can not be maintained in that way. The further we pursue along that line the deeper we get in the mire. It goes without saying that if we are to fight for principles and to assert our rights to the high seas our national honor and dignity require that both England and Germany shall respect our just rights upon the high seas. Washington, in his Farewell Address, warned us against entangling alliances. Why, under existing conditions, ignore his admonition?

I confess my inability to comprehend why the proposed alliance; why we are to vote and authorize a large bond issue, and loan money to nations on the verge of bankruptcy, and to send millions of our boys and men into the trenches to fight the battles of those equally guilty of wronging us as those whom we are to fight.

The President in his message of April 2, in expressing sympathy for the German people, said:

> It was not upon their impulse that their Government acted in entering this war. It was not with their previous knowledge or approval.

If the President's contentions are well taken, then the same rule should be applied at home. I do not take issue with the President. I believe the position was well taken; nor do I believe that the President would suggest war without previous knowledge and approval of the American people. I have not sufficient knowledge of their sentiments in that respect to venture an opinion, but I have received several hundred telegrams, letters, and petitions from people in the fourth Iowa district, which I have the honor to represent, and judging from sentiment expressed in those communications more than seven-eighths of my constituents are opposed to war. The actual percentage is according to the communications received—ninety-eight and one-half per cent against a declaration of war and 1½ per cent for war. Many of them are well known to me. They are all patriotic and high type of citizens. Many of them come from mothers and those who fought for the preservation of the Union.

I quote from a few:

> I am a mother among the millions of mothers in the United States who pray for your boys to be spared the horrors of the battle field and the unknown grave.

Another:

> You can not kill a man for humanity's sake if you are not attacked.

An old soldier writes:

> Of all the men I have talked with in Charles City I have not found one man that was in favor of war with Germany. As you know, I served three years in the Civil War to preserve the Union. I realize what war is. But the President was selected because he was too proud to fight. If that vote was taken to-day, he would not come within a million of being elected.

Another calls attention to the story told before election of the capitalist with large investments in Mexico going to Washington to see the President to see if something could not be done to save at least part of his investment there. After telling the President of his millions invested, almost all ruined and confiscated by Mexico, the President turned to the capitalist and said, "You, of course, want this Government to go to war with Mexico." The answer was, "No; I have a son; to me he is more than my millions." This story was frequently told before election in justification of the President keeping us out of war.

If the people of Germany were entitled to a hearing before declaring for war, certainly old soldiers who fought for preserving our Union, the mothers, and our people in general have a right to a hearing. With the apparent overwhelming majority of my constituents against war, and being in full sympathy with these views expressed by that large majority and the sentiments expressed by President Wilson and conscious of my oath of office, under the circumstances I can not vote to take from our homes the flower of manhood and send them into the trenches there to be slaughtered. With 26,000,000 in the trenches now, no one can forecast the number of millions of our men and the number of billions of our money that may be required.

If we stay out of Germany-forbidden zone as we have stayed out of England-forbidden zone, no one will suffer or be harmed.

No one can take pride or honor in fighting an insane man, even though he may have stepped on his toes. The insane man is not responsible for his acts. The nations at war are worse than insane. They know not what they do. By deferring action no pride or honor is sacrificed. We still maintain that we have a right to the sea, and shall always enforce and insist upon our rights, just as one insists and asserts his right to the highway. I voted for the McLemore resolution to warn our people from taking passage on merchantmen of belligerent nations. Had that resolution passed, and had we kept out of Germany's forbidden zone as we have England's war zone, no lives would have been lost or property destroyed.

I believe I was right then. I believe I am justified and right in not voting for war now. One contention is that we are already in war. Germany has not declared war with the United States. Congress is the only body vested with power to declare war in the United States. War with Germany has not been declared by Congress.

If we are in a state of war, why the proposed resolution? No; the responsibility is here upon our shoulders. Our vote will determine it. A vote for the resolution is a vote for war, and every vote against the resolution is to avert war. When the resolution has passed and been signed by the President, we will be at war. Then, and not until then, we will be at war with Germany.

Then billions of dollars must be expended, and possibly millions of men, the cream of manhood, will be required and demanded, not by volunteer enlistment, as in England, Canada, and France, our allies to be, did but as suggested, by conscription, to render service in foreign lands, there to wallow in blood, many to lay their lives on the altar, to die alone far away from their near and dear ones. Then will come the agony, sorrow, and privations of the mother, father, brothers, sisters, and sweethearts at home. Boasting or voting for or against a war to be fought by others is not a test of courage or patriotism. Neither justifies one claiming a corner on patriotism.

Now is not the time to criticize the action of anybody as to what has been done. The time has come for refraining from questioning the loyalty of any and every citizen. If war is declared, every effort should be to unite, not to divide, our people. Let the unfortunate, indiscreet insinuations made in the past be forgotten. Indiscreet, ambitious politicians may endeavor to make capital out of it, but sound judgment and patriotism will hold that the best interests of the country will be served better by everyone putting his shoulder to the wheel and aiding the President in every honest effort to successfully prosecute and end the war, if war is declared.

Availing myself of the privilege granted to extend my remarks, I append extracts from a few of the many letters received commending my action in voting against the resolution.

In the absence of a permit to give the names of parties, I omit names:

LETTER FROM MASON CITY, IOWA.

APRIL 9, 1917.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to express my appreciation of the cool and collected manner in which you represented your constituency in Congress recently.

I heard to-day that letters of severe criticism had been written you from this point, representing to you that everybody here was enthusiastically for the strong prosecution of the war, and that prior to the declaration a large majority favored it. I fear that this is not a representation of the sentiment here, and it is not right, nor is it good policy, to deceive you or delude ourselves.

You and I, as well as every true American citizen, are now loyal in supporting the Government, and should so remain, no matter what our opinions before the declaration.

But I do not believe that we should misrepresent matters to our Representatives and officials. I wish that now, after we are in it, the people were more unanimous on the matter, but the best I can report is that perhaps 1 out of 10 or 15 favor war. Many of those in favor of war are expecting to get commissions. I do not think that is good patriotism. I am told that one party, who is desirous of getting into your shoes, is advocating your public denunciation. Such patriotism will not win our war. Far rather do I prefer a cool, unselfish patriotism, asserting itself frankly, as I think you did.

Will you let me know if there is anything I can do in this crisis, and as well help keep history straight, and keep selfish hucksters from besmirching others' characters undeservedly?

Yours, very truly, ——— ———.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM MASON CITY.

APRIL 11, 1917.

Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAUGEN: I want to congratulate you on having the nerve to vote against war. I believe 90 per cent of the people of your district are with you. While loyal to our country and as patriotic as any people in the world, if called on to vote for or against war they would vote as you did. I have talked with a good many on this question, and I have failed to find one single person who was willing to vote for war. I have six boys, all of military age, three of them in school at Iowa City. All of them will go if needed to defend their country.

A LETTER FROM A MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL AT CLEAR LAKE.

APRIL 13, 1917.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to write and express my approval of the noble stand you took in the matter of a declaration of war. As I have been informed there are those who have tried at least to convey to you the impression that you did not vote in the matter as the people of this district desired. I am a public man. I come in touch with a great number of people. And I have not spoken with more than one man who favored the step taken by the Government. That is an insignificant minority.

Well, we are at war. We shall make the best of it. As loyal citizens Uncle Sam shall not find any fault with our actions. * * *

ONE FROM ST. ANSGAR, IOWA.

APRIL 10, 1917.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAUGEN: I wish to express my highest appreciation for your vote against the war resolution. A very large majority of the people here approve of your stand.

There are two things now which I hope you will be able to prevent. I hope you can get a provision written in the law that no one shall be sent across the ocean to fight without his own consent. If that is done there will be more than enough volunteers to fill up the Army without any drafting. I hope also that you can prevent drafting. It is one of the fundamental doctrines not only of the United States, but of all English-speaking nations, that men shall not be drafted into the army except in times of the greatest extremity. Neither Canada nor Australia have adopted it yet, and England but recently. I am aware there is a strong effort being made by militarists, capitalists, and some newspapers to adopt it at once, but the men who would have to go I know are opposed to it.

ROCKWELL, IOWA, April 9, 1917.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I see by the Mason City Times that Mr. ——— takes issue with you on your position in regard to the war situation. Permit me to express to you my deepest approval. I trust the man who acts according to the dictates of his conscience.

I take issue with Mr. ———. I believe that you are right when you say that seven-eighths of the people in your district are opposed to war. The die is now cast. We are all for the United States. But I firmly believe, judging from expressions, freely made, from men of all nationalities, stations, and creeds, that had the question been submitted to a vote it would have been overwhelmingly defeated.

Regrets are too late. Though with a sad heart it is, My country; right or wrong, my country.

Very respectfully, yours, ——— ———.

POSTVILLE, IOWA, April 11, 1917.

DEAR SIR: I have been requested by some of my fellow citizens to write to you expressing our hearty appreciation of the stand which you have taken in the vote against the war resolution. * * *

FAYETTE, IOWA, April 10, 1917.

Hon. G. N. HAUGEN,
Washington, D. C.

FRIEND HAUGEN: I want to congratulate you on your vote against war. I think more than 75 per cent of the people in the fourth district are against this war, and I think more than that many feel you voted right at this time.

Yours, truly, ——— ———.

War Bond Issue.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CORDELL HULL,
OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 17, 1917.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the United States is at war with the Government of Germany. This is not the time or occasion to discuss its causes, but to devise and adopt the most comprehensive and effective methods and means of conducting the war. Congress has authorized the President to proceed with "the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government" to a successful termination of the war. Almost a year will be required in which to raise, train, and equip an army of sufficient size and strength to play an important part in the present military operations against Germany. Our naval forces will be organized and ready almost from the outset to perform the maximum of service in whatever ways opportunity may offer, but the opportunity for sea fighting may be small for some time. Naturally, the Government will proceed with all dispatch to the work of increasing the Navy and raising, organizing, and equipping an Army commensurate with the great part the United States can and should take in the war—or to the extent, at least, that may be necessary to bring it to a successful conclusion. While this great work of organization, training, and equipment is proceeding, the military situation and the condition of those other countries who are making common cause with us in the war against Germany are such as to make it the plain duty of the United States to give such immediate aid and cooperation as will contribute most effectively to the active and successful prosecution of the war during the next few months. The nature and extent of this assistance is so patent as to admit of no discussion.

The allied nations are in great and urgent need of supplies and ships. Each of these countries has in operation the most perfect organizations engaged in the work of procuring and furnishing munitions, food, and other necessary supplies in sufficient quantities and in the most expeditious manner possible. What these countries most need just now, therefore, is credit. The most powerful blow the United States can strike at this early stage would be to arrange suitable credits for the allies to the end that their armies on the various battle fronts may be clothed, fed, and otherwise supplied with all the necessary equipments and munitions which will enable them constantly to prosecute their present military operations against the common enemy.

Now that the United States is at war it will be worse than folly from every viewpoint to prosecute that war on a small or insignificant scale or in a seemingly weak or half-hearted manner. Every consideration of safety and self-respect now and in the future requires that the entire weight of this great country should unreservedly be thrown into the war. This means that every man, woman, boy, and girl in America, with a keen realization of the issues involved, should lend their services to the Government in such lines as will be most valuable and effective.

The great and intricate problem of formulating and establishing a comprehensive policy for financing the war now confronts this Government. The bill authorizing bond and treasury certificate issues aggregating $7,000,000,000 constitutes the initial step of the Government in dealing with the financial side of the war. The amounts thus authorized, while large, are not excessive in the light of existing conditions and possibilities. The proceeds of these bonds to the extent of $3,000,000,000 are to be loaned to the allied nations at war with Germany. No sound criticism can possibly be offered against the wisdom of this step. It is both wise and timely.

With respect to the fiscal policies which this Government should adopt during the course of the war in order to finance it on sound lines there may be more or less conflict of views. This problem, however, can not receive too serious consideration, for the reason that the wisdom and soundness of its solution would be calculated materially to affect the economic affairs of the country both during and after the war. We have many lights by which to be guided, as presented by the experiences of our own and other countries in financing former wars.

We also have under observation the present and radically different policies of England and Germany in providing means for conducting the existing war. At the outset of any great war it is impossible to levy sufficient taxes to meet constantly increased demands on the treasury without disorganizing and dislocating business. Any government, therefore, must in the beginning resort either to short or long term loans. As to what proportion of the war expenditures should be met by taxes and what proportion by bonds is a controverted question. My own view is that no fixed rule can be established for all governments or even for one government. The relative amount of war taxes levied at the beginning of a war would naturally be affected not only by the amount of the early war expenditures and the possibilities of largely increased expenditures following it, but also by the ability of the country to bear largely increased taxation at the outset, and still greater increases as the war progressed, without crippling important classes of business. The condition of the country's credit and the estimated length and cost of the war are also factors. England has imposed taxes to the extent of about 25 per cent of her war expenditures and met the remainder chiefly by long and short term loans. At the outbreak of the war Parliament voted to the Government a war credit of $500,000,000. These were followed by additional votes of credit, until by the middle of 1916 they amounted to $14,000,000,000. They have now reached nearly $20,000,000,000. England met her early war expenditures by the issuance of low-rate temporary obligations having six months to run, very similar to our Treasury certificates of indebtedness, which have 12 months to run. In November, 1914, however, England offered a 13-year funded loan of $1,750,000,000, payable in fixed installments during the next five months and bearing 3 per cent interest. These bonds sold at 95. While this loan matures in 1928, it may be called after 1925. The next large loan—that of July, 1915—was for $2,900,000,000, at 4½ per cent at par value, and the bonds become due in 1945, but are redeemable after 1925. The 3½ per cent bonds of the previous war-loan issue were allowed in payment for subscriptions to the new 4½ per cent issue. Six hundred and seventy-five million dollars were thus converted. It may be here observed that during this period, as well as prior to the war, the rate on other outstanding British Government bonds was 2½ per cent. From the beginning of the war until March 31, 1917, the British Government loaned to its allies the sum of $4,450,000,000. The recent British war loan of $5,000,000,000 is in a sense already expended to the extent of $3,000,000,000 heretofore used to take up outstanding treasury bills. This loan was at the rate of 4 per cent with income-tax exemptions or 5 per cent without them. The chief bids were on the 5 per cent basis. Including the amounts loaned to her allies, the debt of Great Britain aggregates $19,350,000,000. At the outbreak of the war Great Britain held about $20,000,000,000 of loans made in foreign countries. The unloading of large portions of these loans enabled her citizens to take English war bonds in much greater amounts.

England made her first important war-tax levy in November, 1914. This embraced the doubling of the income and supertax. The tax on beer was more than trebled. A few other tax items were embraced. In December, 1915, a far more drastic tax measure was enacted. Income taxes were considerably increased. The larger incomes carried a rate of 30 per cent. A number of excise and import taxes were imposed. At the same time, the excess profits tax of 50 per cent was enacted. From August 1, 1914, to March 31, 1915, $858,000,000 was raised by taxation and $2,025,000,000 by bond and other forms of borrowing. The tax revenues for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1917, were 50 per cent greater than those for the previous fiscal year in England.

The wealth of the British Isles at the outbreak of the war was estimated at $85,000,000,000, while her debt was $3,500,000,000. Notwithstanding this proportion of indebtedness to national wealth, that country has been able to borrow nearly $20,000,000,000 during the present war. England's war interest now exceeds $700,000,000. The fact that she has financed one-fourth of the war expenditures by taxation has enabled her to meet all this interest and sinking fund requirements, as well as to make a substantial contribution to the current expenses from tax revenue. This combined policy of utilizing bonds and taxes in substantial proportion has undoubtedly operated to maintain the strength of her original credit. The British daily expenditures rose from a peace basis of $2,750,000 at the outbreak of the war to $10,000,000 in August, 1914, and averaged $25,000,000 near the end of the second year of the war. At the end of the first year of the war the daily cost to all the warring nations was $75,000,000. England's expenditure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1916, was nearly $8,000,000,000, and the average daily rate was constantly increasing. The Napoleonic wars, covering 22 years, only cost her $4,150,000,000.

Germany has pursued a different policy. She has depended until within the last few weeks almost exclusively upon bonds and treasury issues of paper currency to finance her part of the war. Prior to its outbreak her national indebtedness was $1,172,000,000, although that of the German States was $3,864,000,000. Her national wealth was then $80,000,000,000. At the beginning of the war Germany offered a 10-year 5 per cent loan, at 97½, for $824,000,000. She has made successive loans of from $2,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 every few months during the progress of the war. The result was that the German debt has risen from $5,000,000,000, including that of the German States at the beginning of the war, to $11,613,000,000 at the close of the year 1915, and to $15,260,000,000 on November 1, 1916. Her annual interest charges exceed $700,000,000. The failure of Germany to levy some war taxes has necessitated the application of portions of her bond issues to the payment of interest on already existing bonded indebtedness. Early in the war Germany enacted a law prescribing a severe penalty against any person who exported gold from the country or who asked a premium for gold in exchange for the greatly inflated paper currency. The percentage increase in gold reserves and outstanding paper currency in Germany between the end of June, 1914, and the end of 1916 was: Gold increase, 93, and paper increase, 359. It is true that the percentage in England for the same period was 106 gold increase and 544 paper increase; but it is claimed that substantial portions of the English paper took the place of gold held by certain banks or which was in circulation. Germany's bank-note issues are $2,041,000,000, as against $475,000,000 when the war began. This great inflation has caused a considerable rise in prices.

The flotation of German bonds has been greatly aided by the proceeds of foreign investments sold, by deposit banks, savings banks, and the various fiduciary institutions, as well as business profits placed in bonds instead of being reinvested in the business. The Government practically forced the investment of munition profits in its bonds. Germany's idea from the beginning seems to have been that her immense bond issues would be taken care of by large cash indemnities levied on the opposing belligerents. During the early stages of the war Germany only increased taxation to the extent of $120,000,000. She had, however, in 1913, imposed a heavy percentage tax on property of every sort, to be paid in three installments, for the purpose of increasing her standing army and her navy. The German Government also caused a proclamation to be issued insisting on the exchange for bank notes at face value of all the gold held by citizens of the Empire. Within the first seven months of the war $250,000,000 gold came from its hiding places. The redemption in gold of imperial bank-note issues, however, has been suspended since the beginning of the war.

During the first few months of the war France relied upon the national bank, which advanced her $1,200,000,000 in the form of note circulation issued against the Government obligations deposited with the bank. During 1914 and 1915 France issued 5 per cent bonds with short maturities to the amount of $1,500,000,000. These were supplemented by a loan of $2,762,000,000, in the latter part of 1915, at 5 per cent, in which the bonds running 16 years sold at 88. France did not undertake to levy any considerable amount of war taxes until the war had well advanced. The fact that Germany early in the war captured and occupied some of her most valuable coal and industrial sections prevented her from placing long-term loans at satisfactory rates. In the middle of 1915 the Government appealed to the citizens to turn in their gold and exchange it for Government securities, with the result that more than $250,000,000 came from its hiding places before the end of that year. It will be remembered that the Morocco crisis with Germany in 1911, which brought the two countries to the brink of war, caused the French people to withdraw all their investments in Germany and hoard the money. These withdrawals were accentuated by the Balkan War. The French were thus unconsciously fortifying themselves financially for the coming European war. It has been impossible, however, to prevent considerable inflation. France expanded her bank issues from $1,336,000,000 to $3,100,000,000, or 131 per cent, between July, 1914, and the middle of 1916. Her increase in gold reserve during this period was less than 30 per cent. Her currency has been expended to a considerable additional amount since that period. In 1916 the French Government induced her citizens to turn over their foreign securities on stipulated terms, which the Government in turn deposited as collateral for a loan of $100,000,000 in New York. France has had many severe financial trials during the war. Her expenditures, in the beginning, of $7,500,000 a day have daily increased to the present daily amount of $21,270,000. In order to float her recent loan of $100,000,000 in the United States France was obliged to present gilt-edged collateral and pay 6 per cent, not to mention large amounts for commissions, and so forth, and the war prices for our supplies she purchased, the final result of which was that she only received about 75 cents to the dollar thus borrowed. This little country has been able to limp along financially through the course of the war, and with an estimated wealth of only $55,000,000,000 has borrowed $9,500,000,000 in addition to her prewar debt of over $6,000,000,000. Her annual interest account is now staggering to a small country such as France.

Notwithstanding these loads of indebtedness which would have been considered overwhelming before the war, France and England, the one with an estimated additional expenditure of more than $7,000,000,000 and the other with more than $8,000,000,000 confronting them during the present fiscal year just beginning, move steadily forward in the prosecution of the war.

No special lesson is to be learned from the Russian method of financing the war. Suffice it to say that with the estimated wealth of $50,000,000,000 she has borrowed nearly $10,000,000,000. Russia comprises about one-seventh of the land of the globe, and has boundless resources of untold value, but they are almost wholly undeveloped.

The sum total of the borrowings of the allies is that, with the combined estimated wealth of $215,000,000,000, they have borrowed nearly $42,000,000,000. The estimated wealth of the central powers is only $113,000,000,000, and they have borrowed near $15,000,000,000, exclusive of their prewar debts of $9,000,000,000. The aggregate indebtedness of Europe has jumped from $27,000,000,000 at the beginning of the war to $75,000,000,000 at the present time, while the annual interest on the same has risen from $1,070,000,000 when the war broke out to $3,800,000,000 at the present time.

The fact that Europe owned about $33,000,000,000 of foreign securities at the outbreak of the war has stood her in good stead during her severe financial trials in the course of the past two and one-half years.

The United States has always adhered strongly to the policy of paying off its public debts. The debt of the Revolutionary War, amounting to $75,000,000, was cut almost half at the beginning of the War of 1812. This latter war debt of $127,000,000 was wiped out in less than 20 years. The Mexican War indebtedness of $68,000,000 was reduced to $28,000,000 when the Civil War came on. The Civil War debt of $2,381,000,000 was cut down to $585,000,000 as early as 1892. The Spanish War and unpaid debt of $1,046,000,000, including also the Panama Canal financing, has dropped to $971,000,000, which constitutes our present interest-bearing debt.

This record compares most favorably with that of other countries, such as Great Britain, whose public debt of $4,500,000,000 arising out of the Napoleonic wars still stood at the high figures of $3,500,000,000 when the present European war came on. From almost every important standpoint the United States is in the strongest possible attitude to finance a great war. A conservative estimate of our national wealth is $200,000,000,000. If we should borrow on the strength of this wealth in the same proportion that Europe has borrowed during the war we would have a public debt of near $50,000,000,000. The proposed loan of $5,000,000,000 is less than one-fortieth of our wealth and not exceeding one-tenth of our gross annual income. It is less than one-half of the net annual income of the limited number who are at present subject to the income tax, which is nearly $11,000,000,000. The present loans of the United States to belligerent nations aggregate $2,213,000,000. The proposed credit of $3,000,000,000 will make a total of $5,213,000,000. The net amount of gold received from abroad during the past two and one-half years is $1,000,000,000. The aggregate value of American securities held abroad and repurchased by this country exceeds $2,000,000,000. In the three items just named is comprised the change of credits in favor of the United States to the extent of $5,213,000,000, which has occurred during the past two and one-half years.

During the first year of the war Great Britain raised by popular subscription considerably over $5,000,000,000; France, $1,790,000,000; Russia, more than $2,600,000,000; Germany and Austria, $5,070,000,000. In the light of these loans successfully made by the foreign nations at war, the United States should without the slightest difficulty dispose of $3,000,000,000 bonds within a short time.

I shall undertake to discuss the tax phases involved in the raising of war revenue at a later date. I am most heartily and enthusiastically in favor of the proposed credit to the allies while the United States is getting ready to utilize the full strength of its Navy and a large Army. I realize that the placing of a large loan involves many intricate problems and the most careful handling to avoid business and financial disturbances. I have full confidence, however, in the ability of the Secretary of the Treasury and his advisers successfully to cope with every difficulty involved in the sale of these $3,000,000,000 bonds without any disarrangement of our financial or commercial affairs. It has been suggested that the furnishing of this large credit to the allies might in some way affect our favorable trade balance. My own opinion is that the balance of trade will continue in our favor to an increasing extent. Neither is there any sound support of the suggestion that a judicious and equitable levy of war taxes in substantial amounts will interfere with the satisfactory sale of the bonds. The fact that they are tax exempt will make them specially attractive to many owners of large wealth who prefer thereby to avoid subjection to possible future high tax rates. It is true that the flotation of $5,000,000,000 of bonds will scarcely affect the credit of the United States in its present impregnable financial condition. It is also true that the American people were never in a more favorable condition to pay a reasonable amount of taxes for war purposes in addition to those for normal purposes. Suggestions are always offered to the effect that future generations should bear a share of emergency indebtedness incurred in fighting a great war. These suggestions overlook the fact that the same future generations are generally called upon to bear contemporaneous war or other emergency taxes in large amounts. The experience of this and other nations in financing wars has taught the sound lesson that a nation should undertake to liquidate its indebtedness incurred in war or on account of other extraordinary causes as soon as possible, or at least within the period of not exceeding 20 or 30 years. My judgment is that the terms and conditions prescribed for the sale of the bonds authorized in the pending bill should be such as would enable the United States to pay off the entire amount at par (and not at a premium, as in 1890) within the period just stated. It may be found consistent with the successful sale of the bonds and desirable in policy to insert a redemption clause to the end just stated.

The aggregate bond indebtedness of our States, counties, and municipalities is near $4,000,000,000. The $5,000,000,000 bonds authorized in the bill now pending in the Senate, together with our present interest-bearing indebtedness of $971,000,000, will aggregate a bonded indebtedness in this country of near $10,000,000,000. Many would prefer to see reasonable tax rates imposed on all these securities. A small rate should be imposed in the beginning. When we consider that more than $12,000,000,000 of property belonging to charitable and other institutions is exempt from all taxation in this country, it is apparent that the United States will soon have $25,000,000,000 of its $200,000,000,000 of wealth practically exempt from all taxation. It would not be accurate to say that the just amount of taxes due thereon are saved to the Government, the States, and their localities, through the low rates of interest at which these tax-exempt securities are sold on the market. The purchaser generally secures immunity from a substantial amount of taxation in such cases. If the recent experience of England in floating her $5,000,000,000 loan, in which the purchasers of her bonds were given option of taking them at 4 per cent income tax exempt or 5 per cent subject to the tax, is of value, the action of the purchasers of these bonds in preferring the 5 per cent proposal in the face of the heaviest income taxation, present and prospective, ever imposed by any country in all history, is very significant. Furthermore, this condition, if allowed to grow, may in the future result in considerable disarrangement of our economic conditions. The investing public during the past year purchased a little more than $2,000,000,000 of domestic securities. If, however, attractive Federal, State, or municipal bonds, tax exempt, had been offered, they would undoubtedly have received the decided preference. In thus calling attention I merely seek to point out possible injurious results that may arise in the future unless a suitable remedy shall be devised and adopted. I am not thus offering any personal views.

The proposed bond issue, aggregating $7,000,000,000, including short-term certificates which will be absorbed from time to time by tax revenues or the proceeds of long-term bonds, is, in my judgment, amply justified in the light of present and prospective conditions. This step embraces wise and sound policy. I have no doubt that this action of the Government will meet the overwhelming approval of the American people. When the boundless resources of this country are considered—the tremendous annual incomes of the people, the enormous amount that can be saved during each year—it is manifest that the indebtedness about to be incurred can be met during the next few years in equitable annual allotments without appreciable burden to the citizens. Over $500,000,000 has been saved by the people of Canada during the past two years.

The war expenditures of Canada are now $250,000,000 per annum. The experience of the countries at war has been that expenditures have not been so great during the first year as were estimated, but they have grown with each succeeding month and year until they finally passed beyond the estimates originally made for the latter and advanced stages of the war. Tax levies and bond issues by the United States should conform to these probable conditions as shown by experience. The people can stand a very large tax levy now, and when the war advances several months business will be so adjusted to the new tax conditions as to be able to stand an additional and more drastic tax levy if necessary. I take it that the proposed bonds will be put on the market at such periods and intervals in blocks of some $1,000,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 as their proceeds are needed at home and abroad.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD COOPER,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the war resolution I desire to state the following orders and patriotic meetings of citizens of my district have adopted resolutions pledging their loyalty to the President and Congress at this critical time. I do not care to burden the RECORD by asking to have these resolutions printed in full, but wish to state that they all breathe the true spirit of enthusiastic patriotism, and it is apparent to me that while the people of West Virginia love peace, and while they had hoped for a settlement of our differences with Germany which would have kept us out of the European conflict, still they are willing to give their support to the President and Congress in protecting American rights against unlawful attacks on land and sea.

Resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Monroe County Improvement Association, Confederate Veterans, Sons of Confederate Veterans, pupils and teachers, Masons, and others, citizens of Monroe County, at Union, W. Va., pledge their unconditional loyalty to the Government of the United States, and pledge themselves to do their utmost to increase the crops of their great agricultural county in this time of need.

Eight hundred members of Bluefield Lodge, No. 260, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, pledge themselves to be with the President in the present international crisis confronting the American people, even to war with Germany.

Twin Branch Lodge, No. 169, Knights of Pythias, pledge their unlimited loyalty to the flag and fealty to the Government of the United States in this, their hour of travail.

The citizens of Bluefield, W. Va., of Graham, Va., and the surrounding territory in mass meeting held at Bluefield April 3, approved the act of the Executive in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, and Congress is urged to take the most extreme measures to protect the life, liberty, and property of American citizens, and to insure the Nation the freedom of the seas guaranteed by established law and custom.

Resolutions were adopted on April 2, 1917, at a meeting of the citizens of the town of Welch, W. Va., pledging the support of the community to the Government, at which meeting the Welch Home Guards were organized with a membership of about 60, and with a probable membership within the next few days of 150.

Resolutions adopted by Bluefield Lodge, No. 153, Knights of Pythias, on March 31, 1917, pledge support to the Government to all such measures as will secure life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness of the citizens of the United States. At the meeting at which these resolutions were adopted over 400 Knights of Pythias were present.

Resolutions adopted by colored Masons of Bluefield, W. Va., April 3, 1917, Cismont Lodge, No. 31, A. F. and A. M., offer money, life, and services to their country.

Resolutions adopted at a meeting of the colored citizens of Bluefield, W. Va., April 3, 1917, reaffirm their allegiance to their country and flag, and should occasion arise stand ready to offer the full measure of service and life. They further ask that fair treatment be accorded their race, both by those in positions of power and those in the common walks of life.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD B. ALMON,
OF ALABAMA,
Thursday, April 5, 1917.

On the joint resolution (S. J. Res 1) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, when the President issued his call convening Congress in extraordinary session and when I was at home, I thought, in common with our people, that he would seek from this body authority to protect our rights upon the seas and to destroy the hostile submarines preying upon our commerce, and I expected to vote for a declaration of war for this purpose and for the protection of American rights.

I have not the words with which to express my surprise and disappointment when we were called upon to place all the resources of our country at the command of the allies of Europe and to form alliances with foreign countries, against which we were warned by George Washington, the Father of our Country, in his Farewell Address, when he said:

> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence—I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens—the jealousy of a free people ought to constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy to be useful must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

Up to this time our country has heeded the advice of Washington, and we have been entirely neutral in our dealings with the belligerent nations of Europe.

As I have stated, Mr. Speaker, when I left my home to come to the National Capital, I expected to give my support to such action as might be deemed necessary to prevent the continuance of the wrongful and unwarranted submarine warfare by the German Government, but the resolution upon which we are now called to vote, and its effect as interpreted by the messages of the President and the arguments which I have heard in both Houses for the past six or seven hours, leave no doubt in the mind of any Member of this Hou that when this resolution becomes a law it means that we are to become allies with Great Britain, France, Russia, Italy, and Japan in every sense of the word, and when the amendment providing that our soldiers should not be sent to the trenches in Europe until further action of Congress was voted down by an overwhelming vote no one could then doubt that such was the purpose of this resolution.

Why is a million more soldiers wanted now if they are not to be sent abroad? Where else do they expect to kill Germans?

Our rights have been violated by Great Britain for more than two years. She has not only kept our ships out of the ports of the central powers but also out of the ports of neutrals and has unlawfully seized our ships and cargoes and rifled our mails. She mined the entire North Sea, and the only reason that more of our ships were not sunk and lives lost is because we kept out of it. We knew that this was wrong and unlawful, and not intended to injure us, but for military purposes and necessities.

Then Germany declared the war zone to the ports of our enemies, infested it with submarines, and warned neutrals to stay out. This was also wrong and unlawful, but it was also done for military purposes and necessities. We went in, and some of our ships were sunk and lives were lost, while by staying out we could have avoided war with Germany as we did with England.

Still, I do not say that we should have kept out of this war zone, and I do not base my opposition to this resolution upon that ground, but I refer to it to show that the only interest that we have and the thing that concerns us is the protection of American rights and American interests. The rights of ours that have been violated by Germany are our rights upon the seas, and I am now ready and willing to vote for a resolution declaring a state of war for the purpose of defending those rights and avenging those wrongs. Then why should we do more than place ourselves in a position, when we have vindicated our rights so far as the submarine warfare is concerned, to withdraw from the war?

When Congress was called in extraordinary session I understood that the purpose of our entry into the war would be to "defend American rights," and I expected to vote for that, but when I reached Washington I found that it had expanded into the "preservation of human liberties against autocracy," and for the formation of an alliance and partnership with Great Britain and her allies to fight for their cause as well as our own.

Our grievance against the Imperial Government of Germany is not the same as that of the allies. The war between the central powers and the allies is not our war, and I do not believe that we should become a party to it. I am not in favor of becoming allied with any of the foreign powers, and that is just what is going to happen if this resolution becomes a law.

The effect of this resolution is not only to protect American lives and American rights upon the high seas, but is to make the cause of Great Britain, France, and Russia our cause, and that, too, whether their cause is right or wrong.

When this resolution passes, we are going into full partnership and alliance in every sense of the word with Great Britain, France, and Russia, and I understand our Government will be expected to loan the allies $3,000,000,000 at the start, with which to buy ammunition, food, and other supplies for the prosecution of the war, and perhaps more later on, and we will, of course, have to raise many billions of dollars to support our Army and Navy, all to be paid now or hereafter by the levying and collection of taxes from a people, some of whom are already taxed to the extent of their capacity to pay.

It is also the program to follow the passage of this resolution, as is well known to us all, by trying to force the passage of a conscription law and take thousands and probably millions of the flower of our young manhood into training camps, and later on, if the war lasts six months or a year—and it may last several years—ship them to Europe to fight under the flags of kings and emperors and under the orders and directions of foreign officers, and to be slaughtered in the trenches and buried in a strange land in unknown graves. Entering the war at this late day and in this way, we could not, of course, prosecute an independent campaign, and for that reason our troops in a strange land will be commanded by officers of the allied armies and will be placed where they may see proper to place them, and it is not difficult to foresee to what hardships and dangers they will be exposed.

Ah, my colleagues and friends, the quarrel and the issues between the European nations are not ours. Then why should we be thrust into it? Why condone the wrongs of Great Britain and then enter into an alliance with her?

With my vote against the resolution and when it is passed, as it appears that it will, my opposition ends, and hereafter there should be no criticism of the Members who vote for or against the resolution. It will be our duty to stand together as one man for America and American rights. I claim that I have always been and will continue to be as loyal to our country as any Member who has voted for this resolution, and I would not for a moment question the honor, integrity, or motives of anyone who disagrees with me as to my views.

When this resolution becomes a law, if it does, as a Member of this Congress, I will support all measures which I think are right and proper for the purpose of providing men and money with which to prosecute the war to a successful termination, but in saying this, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish it to be understood that I favor the enactment of a law providing for conscription before the volunteer system is tried out and found to be inadequate, for I am unalterably opposed to it.

Every Member of this House fully realizes, from what he has heard and read within the last few days, that upon the passage of this resolution a strong effort will be made for the enactment of a conscription law.

I am not willing to vote for a bill to draft our boys and send them to England, France, or Russia, to help to fight their battles when many of their own sons have refused to do so. When it comes to fighting for the defense of America and American rights, a conscription law will not be necessary. All that are needed will gladly volunteer. The Army officers who are said to be behind the movement call it "selective draft" and "selective conscription," but it is the old-fashioned conscription.

Under the volunteer system Alabama boys would be together under Alabama officers. Under conscription, whether it be called "selective draft" or "selective conscription," they would be separated and shipped to every part of the country, to serve with strangers and under Army officers unknown to them.

Why all this talk about conscription before the volunteer system is tried out? It is, in my opinion, an insult to American patriotism. Is the patriotism of Americans distrusted? Is it because it is thought that America's sons will not volunteer for trench warfare in Europe, and that they should be forced by conscription to render such service?

If a conscription law should be adopted and forced upon our people, would not it be said by Germany that it was evidence of a want of patriotism on the part of our people or that they were not in favor of this war?

Has our country ever engaged in a war when it did not have the support of American volunteers, and at times when our population and resources were very much less than they are now? Shall it now be said that this, the greatest of all the nations in the world, with a cultured, educated, patriotic, and brave people, sufficient support from volunteers can not be secured to insure victory? I am not prepared to believe that there are fewer true and patriotic American citizens to-day than there have been heretofore when we were engaged in other wars.

Let us be careful, if we become entangled in a contest for the destruction of Prussian militarism and autocracy, as is contemplated by this resolution, and for the establishment of democracy in Germany, that we do not establish an autocracy and militarism at home.

It is estimated that 30,000,000 men have been called to take up arms in Europe since the war commenced. The loss of that number as producers has brought about such a decrease of food products that it has even in our country caused the prices of food and the necessaries of life to rise beyond the reach of our people, and many of our own people in times of peace are suffering for the want of sufficient nutritious food. We have already had bread riots in some of our cities.

If we go into this war, everyone in every walk of life will and should exert renewed energies and do his part in providing food and material with which to prosecute the war and relieve, as far as possible, all human suffering, and at the same time we should place some restriction upon the exportation of food if it is found necessary to prevent suffering and starvation in our own country.

I believe that the great masses of our people are opposed to sending our boys to the European trenches for anything that has happened up to this time.

The question of throwing 100,000,000 of happy and peaceful people into war is a stupendous responsibility, but that is what will follow the passage of this resolution. Yes; it is an awfully serious thing to plunge the people of this Nation into one of the most barbaric carnages in the history of the world.

It is an easy thing to vote for a war for some one else to fight. It is easy for some who will never go to the battle field or smell gunpowder if the war lasts five years and who have no boys to go to criticize one who opposes or votes against war; and we who have the courage of our convictions to vote against this resolution will no doubt be criticized by some people of this kind, who may also at the same time claim the right to express the sentiments of all the other people in the community on this question. I can not help but think this night of the millions of mothers in this fair land of ours who will have to give up their boys to go upon the battle fields in a foreign country three or four thousand miles from home, and who are now spending sleepless nights with aching hearts, and of the sisters who will have to give up their brothers. The women and children are always the greatest sufferers in times of war.

One young man during the day, while clamoring for war in a speech in the House advised all who opposed the resolution to be quiet and say nothing lest they embarrass the Government. I can imagine no greater embarrassment to our Government than for a Member of this House who has taken an oath to do his duty under the Constitution when his conscience dictates to him that he should speak to be denied the right of free speech.

Some one else has said that no one should oppose this resolution because it has the approval of the President. Then, what the reason and the need of that provision of the Constitution which declares that Congress alone can declare war and may do it without the recommendation of the President? I am sure the President would not respect a man who voted for something that he thought was wrong because some one else thought it was right.

I have served in this historic Hall with the most of you for the past two years. During that time we have had many important questions to pass upon, but none to compare with this. Your manner and the expressions upon your faces make me know that each one of you feels the responsibility resting upon you at this time.

In a short time and during the early hours of Good Friday, the anniversary of the crucifixion of the Savior of the World, we will be called upon to vote upon this resolution.

This resolution was only reported to the House about 24 hours ago, and I have not had an opportunity of submitting it to the people whom I represent and of giving them an opportunity to examine it and fully understand its purport, meaning, and effect, and to get an expression of their views upon it, but will send them my remarks in order that they may know my views upon this all-important question and upon what I base my decision.

The time will soon come when each Member of this House will be called upon to cast his vote. This is an awful hour. I have hoped and prayed that we would never be called upon to vote upon such a resolution as this. I have prayed to the Almighty for aid and guidance, and I will do my duty as I see it, voting my honest convictions and the way I believe to be right and to the best interests of my country and the people I represent, and, in doing so, shall vote against the resolution.

I may be criticized by some of my constituents, but when they have studied the question and have read my views and my reasons for voting as I do, I believe that those who know me, whether they agree with me or not, will give me credit for having discharged my duty as I saw it and in a manner which I believed was for their best interest, and I believe the time will come—and at no distant day—when they will practically all agree that I am right. If not before, they will no doubt when conscription officers come for their boys, the flower of the young manhood of the country, to train them for European warfare and to convert them into war machines for the slaughterhouses of Europe, and when the Federal taxgatherers come for the additional taxes to pay the expenses of the war, and when additional taxes are levied on coffee, sugar, and all other necessaries of life, to say nothing of the stamp taxes and all other kinds of taxes, though I do not base my opposition to this war resolution on account of the expense of the war, but on the grounds heretofore stated.

In casting my vote against this resolution, I yield to no Member of this House in patriotism and loyalty to my country, and I wish to assure you that the people whom I have the honor to represent and whom I love are as brave, loyal, and patriotic people as ever lived, and that if war is declared they will all rally to the flag and will bravely discharge their every duty, as they and their splendid and noble ancestry have heretofore done in all the wars of our country.

Patriotic Resolutions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DICK T. MORGAN,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 18, 1917.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, under the general leave granted to Members of the House to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the war resolution I wish to present certain matter relative thereto from my congressional district. I have been highly pleased with the patriotism and loyalty manifested in many different ways by my constituents. This I have gathered from many personal letters, from editorials in the newspapers of my district, and from resolutions adopted by citizens' meetings. It is true that many of my constituents were opposed to war and believed that war with the Imperial Government of Germany was unnecessary; but the vast majority, I believe, approved the course of the President, and in the mighty struggle in which we are now engaged will respond to every call of duty and do their full share to maintain the rights of our citizens and the honor of this Republic. As an evidence of the spirit of patriotism in my district I wish to print in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the citizens of my home county of Woodward, which are as follows:

WOODWARD, OKLA., April 12, 1917.

To Hon. DICK T. MORGAN,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORGAN: We, the committee appointed at a mass meeting of 5,000 people at Woodward, April 11, 1917, and charged with the duty of sending the resolutions adopted at that meeting to our honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress for their action—inclose a copy of the said resolutions—and respectfully request that they be presented to the honorable House of Representatives and, if possible, printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Very respectfully,

D. P. MARUM,
C. W. HEROD,
JOHN J. GERLACH,
S. M. SMITH,
Committee.

Resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the people of Woodward County, Okla.

Whereas our Nation has been forced into war by acts of the German Empire; and

Whereas our national rights have been ruthlessly violated on land and sea; and

Whereas American lives have been taken and plots formulated to destroy our national existence by two powers which were responsible for the Holy Alliance 95 years ago, said alliance having been formed for the purpose of destroying all republican forms of government: Therefore we, the citizens of Woodward County, Okla., in mass meeting assembled this 11th day of April, 1917, in the city of Woodward—

Resolve—

First. That we approve the action of our President and Congress in their declaration of war on the 4th day of April, 1917, against the German Empire.

Second. That we, as loyal Americans following in the footsteps of our forefathers, hold the enemies of our country to be our enemies, and the flag of our country, the Stars and Stripes, to be the flag for which we will fight.

Third. That we pledge the entire resources of our country, even to the last drop of our blood, the last penny of our wealth, in support of our Government in its efforts to vindicate our national honor and preserve for us and all the world the sacred right of self-government.

Fourth. That we ask our Senators and Representatives to give to the President their hearty support in organizing our Army and Navy to be of the highest efficiency, that our national honor may be vindicated and our future peace and prosperity guaranteed for all time to come.

Fifth. That the chairman of this meeting appoint a committee to present these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives, with the request that they be properly presented to the President of the United States and to both Houses of our National Congress as embodying the unanimous sentiment of the people of Woodward County, regardless of the countries of our birth and irrespective of our political affiliations.

I also present resolutions adopted by the citizens of Enid, the largest city in my district and one of the largest in the State of Oklahoma. The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions by citizens of Enid, Okla.

ENID, OKLA., April 4, 1917.

We, the people of Enid, Okla., in patriotic meeting assembled, do hereby declare that we are not a people of parties, neither partisans, but Americans. We are but a part of great democracy; we are individuals of a Government by and of the people; we must decide what the Government shall be and do.

We are here to-night, a part of this great democracy, to speak our word, to say that we are ready to do our part in bearing the burdens of a free people. We feel that the rights of a free people have been assailed by ruthless warfare, made not only upon armed men but upon helpless women and children; not only upon land but upon the high seas. The commerce of the seas made to cease, or are imperiled, so that children can not be fed and clothed. In fact, we feel that democracy has been assailed upon the earth and may perish unless this our land shall come to the rescue. We therefore, as citizens of free America, do hereby say that we are ready to bear any burdens that must be borne that democracy may not perish from off the earth: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, citizens of Enid, Okla., do hereby extend and offer to the Congress of the United States and to Woodrow Wilson, our President, our lives, our all, in defense of democracy; our lives, our all, in defense of the rights of all people to traverse God's highways of the seas with their commerce; our lives, our all, in defense of the rights of humanity; finally, our lives, our all, in defense of our flag, the Stars and Stripes, Old Glory; and be it further

Resolved, That we, as citizens, wish to express our heartfelt appreciation of the work of our own boys, members of Company K, First Regiment of Oklahoma Infantry. We give the officers of Company K and each member a hearty Godspeed as they go forth to fight our battles for us, and our sincere wish is that each boy may return, that we may do him further honor.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DENVER S. CHURCH,

OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I can see a multitude of reasons why we should not go into this war, but I am totally unable to see one reason why we should. Nothing was ever settled by war which could not have been settled better some other way. There never was a war that was not an indictment against the human race. If we must have war, it only shows our weakness and depravity, and that we are still uncivilized and yet in the jungles.

I had hoped that our people were at least a little wiser than the other peoples of the world; that our goodly land, our high pretenses, and our hopes and fears had caused us to actually grow and burst the shell; but such is not the case, for it is decreed that we must abandon our high ambitions, extinguish our lights, call back our vanguards, turn around and take up the barbarous methods of the past. It is decreed that we abandon our treaty plans and dreams of peace and adopt the methods of the ancients and help make again the world a slaughter pen.

To-day 14 of the great nations of the earth are engaged in a desperate war—more gigantic, more bloody and foolish, and more wicked than any of the wars that have preceded it. They are not fighting against ignorance or immorality, not fighting against diphtheria that chokes our little children to death, not fighting tuberculosis—our national scourge—not fighting to find a relief for cancer or leprosy, nor any other of the evils that beset the race, but fighting people of their own kind who kneel before the same shrine and worship the same God, apparently trying to exterminate the human race.

If all the money, energy, and human intelligence that has been expended in this war had been used for the alleviation of the woes of humanity, it could have caused the extermination of 95 per cent of all the venomous reptiles in the world; could have destroyed all of the wild, ferocious beasts of the woods and built homes for all of the homeless wanderers on the face of the earth, and yet it is demanded by the newspapers and a few other interested sources that we become one of the factors in the disgraceful struggle.

If a score of men were fighting in front of my house, fighting furiously with knives, clubs, and guns, striking wildly and all fighting madly for their lives, I would not think of standing around continually prodding the fighters about my rights. If I did, I would expect to get a broken nose or a nasty lick over the eye. Even if they staggered onto my radish patch, I would not at once challenge the whole bunch for a fight. No! I would get out of the war zone as quickly as possible and see them at their homes when the fight was over and they were no longer excited but were reasonable and cool, and I would ask them if they did not think they owed me something for tearing up my garden the day they had the scrap, and nine chances to ten they would pay me every cent I asked, and I would go away from them their friend.

It is no time to be too exciting when a fight or war is on. I once knew a gentle milch cow to run her master up a tree when he interfered with her fight, and at one time I was bitten through the hand by my own watchdog when I was trying to referee his scrap. That, however, was a long time ago, when I was young and foolish. During later years I have made it a practice to do my talking the day after the fight, when the air was no longer filled with dust, hide, hair, and fur.

I am perfectly devoted to the idea of keeping out of the war zone when a free-for-all fight is on.

To be frank with you, I think that instead of encouraging this war, we should devote all of our wisdom, energy, and skill in a gigantic effort to banish war forever from the face of the earth. It is necessary that we should do this, for war lowers all of our standards and threatens the very existence of humanity. It makes a mockery of our morality, a mockery of our humanity, a mockery of our religion, and it makes a mockery of our God. It makes prayer sound like the murmuring of the feeble-minded. Why should human beings call on God for mercy when they will not show mercy to one another? Millions of men to-day are in the trenches of Europe on their knees praying to God for mercy, while at the same time they are looking over the embankments trying to blow out the brains of their fellow men, trying to make their wives widows and their children fatherless. If our Creator is watching us at all, I wonder that He does not get tired of the whole proposition and blot out the human race. I wonder that He did not do so in the day of Darius. I wonder that He did not do so in the days of Julius Cæsar or in the days of Napoleon, and I wonder more than ever why He does not do so now. Yes; blot out the human race and start all over again with upright beings that have mercy and humanity in their hearts.

Mr. Speaker, I am constitutionally opposed to war, unless we are invaded or threatened with invasion, which is something almost too absurd to contemplate and something which will never occur so long as we treat the other nations in a just and humane manner. But if I were inclined to war I am sure I never could get the consent of my mind to vote my country into this present conflict. It is such a contagious, wicked, unheard-of strife, without precedent in all the years of time.

It is estimated that four millions of men have already been slain in this war. Some one who had computed it told me the other day that if all these dead were placed end to end a pedestrian could walk a distance equal to all the way from San Francisco to New York and return stepping every foot of the way upon the bloated bodies of the dead. It is also estimated that over 500,000 barrels of human blood has already been shed—shed in vain, for a cause unknown. The question is, Shall we get into this monstrous conflict and add a few thousand miles more to the long row of the putrid dead? Shall we simply—because we have an excuse—spill and have spilled a few more thousand barrels of blood? Humanity with uplifted hands screams "no" from the uttermost parts of the earth.

It is absurd to claim that one group of belligerents is wholly right and that the other is entirely wrong. The course of each finds justification among the highest, most sincere, and approved reasonings of their race. Each nation is fighting for what it thinks is right.

The rights denied us both by the allies and the central powers are of a temporary nature. They will be suffered by us only during the existence of the war. The rifling of the mails and the blockade of the North Sea by England and the declaring of the war zone by Germany are in neither instance intended as an insult to us, but are the result of exigencies, as they claim, to which they have been driven in fighting for their existence and life.

For one, I have no patience with any citizen of this country, devoid of patriotism and reason, who wants to go within the war zone. While three-fourths of the world is prostrate with grief and military law is generally in force and more than 30,000,000 men are on the battle field, it is no hardship for me or any of my kind to remain at home and enjoy the marvelous blessings and wonders of North America and my peaceful native land.

I know a thousand young men in my district in the West who in case of war will volunteer and follow the flag, if necessary, into the very jaws of death. I do not want these faithful, thoughtful boys, sons of pioneers, who, since they were 5 years of age, have had sense enough to take shelter when the storm is on, to have to lay down their lives to avenge the loss of those who, in search of trouble and new thrills, ventured into this condemned zone of war. Neither am I concerned because during the remainder of the war the attitude of the belligerents will prevent, to a certain degree, the exportation of our goods. In view of the unheard-of high prices which now prevail it is self-evident that more of our produce should be retained here in order to reduce the prices at home.

Another big reason why I am opposed to our becoming one of the belligerents is that not one man whom our soldiers will kill has had even a word to say in regard to bringing on the war, and not one in a hundred thousand who will fall before our guns will ever know the cause of the war in which they fought and died.

The saddest part of the whole thing is, that when it is all over and the terms of peace are presented the rulers of the nations will come out of seclusion with their families all intact—the same rulers who declared and brought on the war—and will treat together and arrange the terms of peace. They caused the war, and during its duration lived in luxury, suffered none of war's inconveniences, ate three good meals a day, and slept in a downy bed at night, while the soldiers, innocent of its cause, fought, suffered, and died.

If we enter into this war, it is just a matter of killing a sufficient number of innocent men to convince the rulers of the central powers that in order to save their own unworthy heads it is time to stop the war. I submit to you in all candor and reason that the poor soldiers who must be slaughtered, in many instances being men of responsibility, of home and family ties, it would be far more merciful and less far-reaching if the same results could be achieved, for our soldiers to brain an equal number of babies innocently sleeping in the cradles of the homes in Europe. The men whom we will kill in this war, in which we propose to enter to maintain our rights and honor, will be as innocent of its cause when they receive our fatal blow, and turn their pale faces toward home and wife and child and die, as they were in babyhood the triumphant morning on which they first learned to lisp their mother's name.

Another reason why I do not favor this proposed war, which the newspapers, the munition sellers, and the bondholders propose to bring upon us, is because many of the soldiers whom we will put to death will leave widows and children to mourn their loss. I never will believe that the honor of this people demands that we should flood the countries of Europe with a countless horde of orphan children.

We recently passed the child-labor law, preventing the little children of this country from being abused by working in manufacturing establishments and shops, but now it is demanded that we make war on the central powers, kill probably a million innocent men in order to make the Kaiser sorry, and thereby leave about 3,000,000 more fatherless little children to cry themselves to sleep at night, uneducated and uncared for, to travel childhood's weary and uncertain path alone. It is estimated that there are 8,000,000 children now over there whose fathers have already been killed. "These little ones, without being the least responsible for the horrors of this war, are suffering with hunger, pain, loneliness, and bewilderment, utterly ignorant of the cause of their sufferings. They bear malice toward none; they can not understand why life for them has so completely changed, or why they are in a world of such sorrow and suffering. These children, if they live, will be the men and women who will direct the course of Europe when our children of America have reached manhood and womanhood. What will be their attitude toward our children—enmity or deep-rooted friendship? Perhaps it is yet possible for us to decide these questions; perhaps it is America's mission to decide it in the right way—in a way that will make a deep impression on the world now and which will be remembered through many generations."

The two greatest agencies in the world are force and love. The effect of one is temporary, while the effect of the other is enduring. Force holds only while its power lasts. Love binds as if with cables and bands of steel. The father who rules his family as with a rod if iron will soon lose his power, and, ridiculed and despised, will sit at last alone, while the winter storms of age beat upon the roof of his abandoned home; while she who rules and draws by love, though her form is bowed beneath the weight of years, is the idol of her home and the inspiration of her children's children.

The government that holds the allegiance of its citizens only by an iron hand is ripe for revolution and is tottering on the brink of ruin; but the government that has the affection of its people is filled with patriotism and is in the morning of its long and useful day.

That nation that wins and holds its place by force among the family of the nations of the world is only hastening to a fatal day when some other power will grow strong, dispute its rights, and take its place.

No right-minded person believes that a household, in order to be respected by its members, must be ruled by force.

No right-minded person believes that a nation, in order to be respected by its citizens, must rule them by force, and no right-minded person, it seems to me, should believe that a nation, in order to be respected by the other nations of the world, must maintain and hold its position among them through acts of force and putting in fear.

Babylon, Media, Persia, Greece, and Rome, as well as all the other fallen nations of the past, are examples of the futility of the plan of nations trying to hold the respect of each other by force alone.

When I close my eyes at night, however dark, I see 8,000,000 fatherless children in Europe who, at the close of every long and lonesome day, cry themselves to sleep. War has decreed these little waifs shall drift down childhood's stream alone, beset by every kind of vice, by childhood's ills, by hunger, fear, and cold, with no fond eyes guarding from shore. War has caused humanity at last to forsake her young.

I will give you a human plan in which we can participate in this war, a plan which will not cost a life, a drop of blood, nor cause a tear to flow, save tears of gratitude and joy—that will not produce a moan, a sigh, a wrinkled face, or broken heart.

This war will doubtless cost the United States at least $20,000,000,000. Let us dedicate five billions of this sum to humanity's cause, and with it relieve suffering instead of using it in a way that will produce more. Let us send $100,000,000 worth of food and clothing a year to each of the belligerent governments, to the allies and the central powers alike, a gift to the little children whose fathers and brothers have fallen or who are fighting in the war. Five billions used in this manner would last more than three years, probably to the end of the war. If so, we will save $15,000,000,000 to our own Government by the plan. Let us print, in their native tongues, on each package and garment sent the words: "The heart of America is bleeding for you."

Let each garment and food package also show a picture of the beautiful American flag, so that when the little fellows rise from their beds each morning they will clothe themselves with at least one garment, a token of mercy and kindness from far away America, and when they eat their breakfasts they will see our flag and the inscription on the packages from which is secured their scanty supply.

Were we to follow this plan we would make both the giver and receiver glad. Were we to follow this humane, sympathetic plan, instead of the barbarous methods of war, America would soon become in reality the light of the world. Were we to adopt this method, in years to come, when the children of Europe are grown to be men, if some kaiser or war god should marshal his armies on the field of battle against us the then warriors, being the children whom we now feed and clothe, when they saw that flag planted upon the ramparts of the enemy would remember that they first saw it on their little jackets or food parcels sent them by a kind-hearted people across the sea when fatherless and friendless, too sad even to cry, as in bewilderment and desolation they sat alone. Do you think such an army would fire on that flag? No!

By force we can never make that flag permanently popular, but we can do so by acts of justice and affection. "Whosoever killeth by the sword must die by the sword."

For one I am thoroughly disgusted. I am sorry my country will not rise to this masterly occasion. I am sorry we are to throw down the weapons of humanity and take up the weapons of brutality.

Another reason why I am opposed to going into this war is because we have to lose and surrender so much, and because we will, at the best, gain so little.

We established the right to enter the German war zone during the few months or years of this war. Do not say we have settled the matter for all time. Such is not the case. We have no reason to believe we will not be confronted with the same or a very similar situation in the next great war. We are not fighting for a principle, but to remove a condition. We are simply angry with the Kaiser and we propose to get into the war and kill a few million quiet, friendly Germans in order to show the Kaiser how mad we are. We know that if we enter the war we will lose a thousand lives for everyone we will lose if we stay out of it. We will lose a thousand dollars for every dollar we will lose if we stay out of it. We all must admit that from the saving of lives and money the war is going to be a miserable failure. What else do we lose?

To-day the United States is the only great neutral power on earth. It stands aloof and alone. It stands just where it ought to stand. For 140 years we have declared our form of government to be the light of the world—that our position among the nations is that of a brother—that we are not here to slaughter them, but to do the other nations good. Let us maintain our position and keep our course, for the hour of our supreme usefulness is at hand. Soon the poor, foolish, struggling, bleeding, and dying nations will need the helping hand of a great, just, and powerful friend to lift them to their feet and steady them while they learn to stand alone.

It is an easy matter to get into trouble, but sometimes a very hard matter to get out of it.

When we go into this war we are 100,000,000 happy people, but what will we be when we emerge? When we enter it our stores and warehouses are full. How will it be when we come out? When we go in, the grass has grown for years upon the graves of our honored dead. How will it be when we come out? When we go into this war empty sleeves and sightless eyes are almost unknown. How will it be after the struggle? When we go into it crutches and widows' tears are out of date. How will it be when we come out? When we go in we are heavily laden with honor and are recognized as being the light of the world. How will it be when we come out?

To-day we are the only great neutral nation. This ought to be more sacred to us than was the ark of the covenant to ancient Israel. To whom are we going to surrender our privileges for humanity when we sell our birthright for a mess of war pottage? Will China or some one of the neutral South American Republics take our place?

Again, I am not willing to enter this war, for by so doing we will unite with the allies, espouse their causes, and be obliged to fight until their causes, as well as our own, are won. The American people, in my judgment, are not ready to form such an entangling alliance, against which we were warned by George Washington. Neither are they ready to help England, France, Italy, Russia, and Japan win their causes. We have not passed on the proposition as to who are right—the Allies or the Central Powers. Neither do we intend to, for it is none of our business. Let us beware lest in settling our own good cause we help settle also the causes of others that are bad.

We have but to go back to the Spanish-American War to find an example of how two nations were grossly wronged by the same agencies that are now at work bringing on another war.

John Sherman, Secretary of State during the Spanish-American War, said, in a public address at his home in Mansfield, Ohio, at a reception given in his honor just before he retired as Secretary of State:

> Had not the War with Spain been declared when it was we could have secured by treaty with Spain all that we demanded.

The United States Government in 1903 published a "Report of the Foreign Relations of the United States," for a period that included the diplomatic negotiations preceding the War with Spain. This report shows that on February 26, 1898, the American minister to Spain, Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, wrote to President McKinley that he had obtained the "practical adjustment of every problem" that had been intrusted to him. On April 3, 1898, Minister Woodford cabled to President McKinley as follows (p. 732):

If conditions at Washington still enable you to give me the necessary time, I am sure that before next October I will get peace in Cuba with justice to Cuba and protection to our great American interests. I know that the Queen and her ministry sincerely desire peace, and that if you can give me time and reasonable liberty of action I will get for you the peace you desire so much and for which you have labored so hard.

Just a few days before we declared war Minister Woodford again cabled President McKinley, on April 10, repeating the foregoing sentiments, and added:

I hope that nothing will be done to humiliate Spain, as I am satisfied that the present government is going, and is loyally ready to go, as fast and as far as it can. With your power of action, sufficiently free, you will win the fight on your own lines.

Yet on April 19 Congress ordered armed intervention in Cuba, and three days later adopted a resolution in which it was declared that "war exists."

What a shame to the American people that a war was unnecessarily declared, which resulted in the death of 6,395 officers and enlisted men, wherein hundreds of millions of dollars were spent, when the matter could have been settled by ink and pen on a scrap of paper.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to declaring war on Germany for the further reason that, in my judgment, 98 per cent of the people of the United States are against such a declaration. On January 31, 1916, I introduced House joint resolution 128, which provides for a change of Article I, section 8, division 11, of the Constitution of the United States, which section defines the powers of Congress to declare war. Congress has the power at present to declare war whenever it shall see fit. I seek by this resolution to restrict this power, and have provided in the proposed amendment that Congress shall have the power to declare war in cases of invasion or threatened invasion of the United States or any of its insular possessions by a foreign power, or in cases of insurrection or revolution within the United States or any of its insular possessions, and in other cases where the matter of declaring war has been submitted to the people and a majority of those voting have declared themselves in favor of the proposed war. In other words, Congress shall have the right to declare war only in cases of emergency. In all other cases it shall be left to the people.

Mr. Speaker, I consider this scheme the solution of the whole war proposition. The people of one nation seldom, if ever, want to fight the people of another nation. It is the rulers of nations that bring on war. President Wilson, in his Chicago speech several months ago, said: "Rulers, not public opinion, brought on the present war in Europe." He could with the same degree of truthfulness have said that nine-tenths of all the wars that have come in the past to blight and curse the earth have been brought on by the rulers, instead of by the public sentiment of the people. The rulers of our country here in Washington, changing, as they frequently do, every two, four, or six years, are just as apt to mistake newspaper agitation for public sentiment and bring on war as are the rulers of other lands. Remove the power of the President and Congress to bring on war, except in cases of invasion, threatened invasion, revolution, or threatened revolution, and nine-tenths of the danger of war will pass.

Congress, that now has the constitutional power to bring on war, is composed of Senators and Representatives who are exempt from war. This is a wise provision, for most of them would be a hindrance on the battle field. In case of a charge they would hardly escape being run over by the Red Cross, the newspaper boys, and the commissary department; and yet on the most trivial provocation we find many of them anxious to bring on a war that other men must fight.

Our present plan is neither safe or fair. I hear much about the honor of our country, and I believe the honor of this country should be maintained; but I want to see the term "honor" defined by the men who have to maintain it.

I would not like to have some fat fellow define my honor, tell me when it had been assailed, and shove me into a fight.

No man should have to be a factor in his country's defense in time of war who was not a factor on election day in determining whether there should be war.

War so vitally affects every citizen that I think every citizen should have a right to express his views as to whether there should be war.

War is the most important of all subjects. Why should not the people decide it?

Why should not the interested parties decide the most interesting to them of all subjects?

Do we not believe that the people should rule? Do we mean that this is a Government wherein the people shall decide matters of minor importance, but when it comes to deciding whether we shall have war, the largest and most important of all questions, that the people are not qualified to decide? As human blood and human life are of more importance than all other considerations, so the question of war is of more importance than all other subjects.

During all the history of the world small minorities have been declaring wars for the large majorities to fight. The men who fought the battles of olden times fought not for a cause but for their kings. To-day the same old system prevails, and now the armies of Europe fight not for a sacred cause but for their Kaiser, their Emperor, their King, or Czar.

Fighting, bleeding, and dying for a cause to them unknown! It is now proposed that a handful of rulers here, who really ought to be the servants of the people, but who will not be if they declare war, shall follow the example of the rulers of Europe and pry this country over into the seething hell of war. For one, I am not in favor of it. I am in favor in this people's Government of letting the people decide whether they want war or not. I am in favor of letting the mothers and fathers who will furnish the fuel decide whether this wildfire shall be started. I am in favor of the men whose country will be imperiled, whose blood will be spilt, and whose lives will be lost in case of war, having a chance to say whether there shall be war. I am in favor of hearing from the poor fellow who in case of war will die in the trenches, from the fellows who will have their eyes shot away, who will wear empty sleeves, and go on crutches for the rest of their lives. I do not care so much about hearing from a few well-fed newspaper men and a few fat bondholders as I do the young, lean fellows, who will have to stand, and who are willing to stand, if necessary, like a granite wall and face without a quiver the fiery hell of war. Before this war is deliberately declared, as long as there is plenty of time, I want to hear from the firesides and thresholds that will be saddened and ruined in case of war. I know how the people feel who are going to profit in case of war, but I want to know for sure how the people feel who will defray its expenses. For the sake of the result of the war, I want the voters of this country to have a voice in declaring the war, for when this great people decide for war, their cause will every time be just. It will be a human cause, a cause as free from stain as that flag is free from stain, a cause as pure as the dewdrops that fall upon the mountain sides.

Do not decide against this plan because it is something new. Remember that this is a new age. Progress beckons from the mountain tops. Our best ideas have not yet found their way in books. Humanity has come up from the Stone Age step by step up the long and weary way. Remember, the absurdities yesterday are the accepted truths of to-day.

Let me call your attention to the fact again that the people of one country scarcely, if ever, want to fight the people of another country. Had the peoples of the belligerent countries been consulted this war never would have been fought, and if we were to take time now, and we have lots of time, for it never does any harm to postpone a fight, and let the people speak by ballot, America will not become a factor in this hideous strife.

I am desperately in favor of abandoning the old system. It is wrong on the very face of it, and it has proved itself to be wrong in all the wars of the past.

The old system has caused as many drops of blood to be shed along the Mediterranean as there are drops of water in the sea; it has caused as many teardrops as there are drops of water in the Amazon; it has reduced to putrid flesh, grinning skeletons, and bleached and withered bones the youth and flower of every age and land; it has disgusted humanity with itself, made religion a farce, prayer a mockery, and by universal consent closed the windows of heaven to mankind; it has caused the chief occupation of man to be the shedding of his neighbor's blood, and made implements of husbandry secondary to implements of death; it has caused the soldiers to be superior to the tiller of the soil and the army officer to be regarded head and shoulders above his fellow man; it has caused human sympathy to become dry at the fountain and has turned the heart of man to stone; it has outraged decency and morality and caused mankind to fall below the level of the beast, and the iron and bloody foot of war has trampled without regret the noblest inspirations of the human heart.

I submit that it is time to get rid of war or it will get rid of us. It is an unwelcome visitor, and I want to make it impossible for it to reach our shores. I want to make it a stranger and drive it to the uttermost parts of the earth. I will never be willing to pursue it as some desire across the sea. I want to remove it as far from us as the east is from the west. I want to put thorns and thistles in its pathway. I want to make its way devious and uncertain. I want to throw up barriers against it, mountain ranges, trackless deserts, oceans, and continents between my native land and war.

Some one told me the other day if a war referendum were declared there would be no war, that the people would never declare war unless we were invaded or threatened with invasion. He argued that this would be a calamity. I would rather, ten thousand times rather, argue in favor of yellow fever, cancer, or smallpox than bewail the loss of war. I would rather raise my voice in behalf of diphtheria or the great white plague than court this monstrous evil.

It has been said that the devil is the cause of all our natural earthly woes. Mankind is the cause of war, and in bringing woes upon ourselves we have outdeviled the devil. We certainly have made the devil feel silly. We have discounted him at his own game of bringing misery.

All power in government rests with the people. In some instances they delegate their power to a few men; but the important matters they refuse to delegate. For instance, we do not delegate to our State legislators the power to change the State constitution. That must be done only by a vote of the people of the State. We will not permit our State legislators to vote a bond issue upon the State. That power has not been delegated. It is of so much importance that we refuse to let it go out of our hands. If the change of a State constitution or the voting of a bond issue is so important that the people have refused to delegate the power to representatives, why should we delegate to the President and a little over 500 men here in Washington the power to declare war? War is of as much more importance than all other things as human blood is more precious than oats or corn. War may mean the death of 10,000,000 men; it may mean 10,000,000 children made fatherless, 10,000,000 wives made widows; it may mean every dollar taken from the Treasury, and it may mean the lowering of our flag.

Will you trust your hired man with your complicated automobile but not with a simple cast-iron plow? Will you trust your doctor with the life and health of your wife and children but refuse to permit him to prescribe for a poodle dog?

I can not reach the viewpoint of those who claim that the people should not have charge of their war-making power. They have all of the power. The soldiers and sailors who do the fighting must be furnished by them. The people furnish every dollar of the expense. They own the ships, the guns, ammunition, and all the other machinery of war. The question is, Why should they not decide when it is all to be placed in operation? I can not possibly see why they should have a few men to say when it is time for them to fight and die on the battle field.

It astounds me to think that in spite of the fact that Jesus of Nazareth, the founder of the Christian religion, declared in his Sermon on the Mount, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." An element of the American people revile those who lift up their voices against war and certain newspapers and moral cowards try to make it appear that he who in this fateful hour prefers peace to war is a traitor to the country in which he lives.

A little while ago I heard a Member on this floor denounce CLAUDE KITCHIN, of North Carolina, because in deep sincerity he spoke the honest sentiments of his great heart and bravely gave to this House the best product of his masterly mind. When this country really becomes acquainted with its great men of this time the name of CLAUDE KITCHIN, in my judgment, will head the list.

In conclusion let me say I am sorry we are not far enough from the jungles to take the right course. I am sorry we have to matriculate again in the tedious university of time. Some nation in the future will rise. I know not when or where will be its seat of power. I fondly trust here in our goodly land. That nation, like Saul, the son of Kish, will stand head and shoulders above all around. It will be a nation of destiny, its purpose to uplift the human race. Its people will be just and wise; excitement will not sweep them off their feet. In that nation there will be no assumption of power, no inroads or intrigues. The legislators there will fear no whip, but, guided by what they feel is right, will bow their heads only to duty's call. There will be no war gods there, no thirsting for human blood, and newspapers will be the servants of the peoples' will. Before that day comes republics like our own may crumble a hundred times. No one can tell, but until it does come this world will not be a fit place in which to live. Humanity will finally learn its lesson. Humanity must finally win.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
OF COLORADO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 16, 1917.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I wish to present a number of resolutions of patriotic citizens and associations showing the loyal western public sentiment prevailing throughout the State of Colorado.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PLEDGES LOYALTY—GOV. GUNTER SPEAKS FOR THE CENTENNIAL STATE.

[By the United Press.]

DENVER, April 3.

Gov. Gunter to-day pledged Colorado's loyalty to the President in the following telegram:

DENVER, COLO., April 3, 1917.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

As the chief executive of the State of Colorado, I pledge to our President in this great crisis the most loyal and earnest support of this Commonwealth and its citizenship.

JULIUS C. GUNTER,
Governor of Colorado.

ASKS LOYAL RESPONSE—GOV. GUNTER ISSUES WAR PROCLAMATION—EXECUTIVE URGES COLORADOANS TO DO DUTY AND ACCORD JUST TREATMENT TO LAW-ABIDING ALIENS.

[Western Newspaper Union News Service.]

DENVER.

Gov. Gunter has issued the following proclamation:

"To the people of the State of Colorado:

"A state of war exists between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government. Every thoughtful citizen, while determined and confident of the issue, realizes the awful and stupendous character of the world conflict upon which we are entering. Calmly, patiently, thoughtfully, in the fear of God, and in obedience to the principles of international law, our country has proceeded. Every reasonable effort known to the law of nations or to intercourse between civilized peoples has been made to avert this conflict—yet made in vain. Our country now has no other recourse in defense of our rights and the honor of the Nation but to declare war. War has been declared. As becomes a brave, proud, and patriotic people the citizenship of Colorado will loyally bear their full part in this struggle, will unhesitatingly give to their country all that is needed of our resources.

"I, Julius C. Gunter, as governor of the State of Colorado, do hereby enjoin upon our people the strict observance of every provision of our President's proclamation declaring a state of war, and especially urge considerate and just treatment of all aliens within our borders, who are observant of our laws.

"This conflict may be long. It will certainly demand largely of our resources. As the chief executive of the State I urge loyal response to all calls for volunteers, State and Nation. The young men of our Commonwealth are as loyal as were their forefathers. They are patriotic, brave, and manly and require no conscription to respond to their country's call. Let there be no halting step in the action of the youth of our State.

"We must solemnly realize the demand that will be made upon our people—money, provisions, men. Let economy be entered upon. Every citizen, whether it be by the garden tract, the larger area, or aid by seeds, money, or otherwise to the farmer, should endeavor to increase our food production. There is now no scarcity of food products, no occasion for purchases which will stimulate prices and add to the burdens of those ill able to bear them; but there should be economy and provision for the future. Our maidens, our women, should continue in the work they are entering upon, preparing to serve their country as nurses and otherwise. Let our girls and boys of tender age be trained in their line of service. They will be needed before this struggle is over.

"In conclusion, let every citizen of our State perform, as he will, his full duty. In asking service of our citizenship the executive appeals to our citizens of all nationalities and all beliefs with as perfect confidence as to those native to our land.

"Given under my hand and executive seal this 7th day of April, A. D. 1917.

"JULIUS C. GUNTER, Governor."

DURANGO, COLO., April 6, 1917.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

At a mass meeting of citizens held at Durango, Colo., on April 6, 1917, the following resolution was adopted by unanimous vote, with direction that copy be wired to the President:

"Whereas the despotic rulers of Germany, in betrayal of the friendship long existing between the common people of Germany and the people of the United States, and in defiance of the law of nations, and in violation of the laws of humanity, have forced our Government to declare an existing state of war; and

"Whereas that war is declared and, under the wise guidance of our President, will be waged not for conquest nor any selfish gain but for defense of the rights and principles of our beloved Republic against the lawless and inhuman aggressions of monarchy, and for the preservation of republican self-government among the several nations of the earth, and to make human liberty secure and a safe and lasting peace among nations possible: Therefore,

"Resolved, That we pledge our earnest, loyal, and active support to our President and the Government in the coming conflict, and will do all within our power to bring victory to the American flag; and let it be known that this pledge covers many German-born loyal American citizens."

E. P. WILSON, Secretary.

CITY OF SALIDA,
Salida, Colo., April 11, 1917.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TAYLOR: At a patriotic mass meeting held in the Salida Opera House on Monday evening last the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas a state of war exists between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government; and

"Whereas the President of the United States and the Congress should have the united support of the citizens in the conduct of the war: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That as loyal American citizens of Salida, Colo., without regard to political party lines, we approve the action of the President of the United States in severing relations with the Imperial German Government and of the Congress in declaring a state of war to exist between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government, and that we pledge to the President our hearty support in every act of the Government to provide safety for our citizens and to protect the honor of our Nation and the cause of freedom and democracy throughout the world; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chairman of this meeting shall transmit copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

MONTROSE'S RESOLUTIONS OF PATRIOTISM.

MONTROSE, COLO.

Congressman EDWARD T. TAYLOR:

Copy of resolutions adopted Thursday evening, April 5, 1917.

S. S. SHERMAN, of Committee.

Be it resolved by the citizens of Montrose County in convention assembled, That we recognize but one flag as our flag, the Stars and Stripes. That we acknowledge allegiance to but one Government, which is represented by that flag, the United States of America. That we recognize but one head of the Government, the man who now occupies the chair formerly occupied by George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson. That in our present national crisis and emergency, without thought of party affiliations, we unhesitatingly commend, sanction, and indorse the address of our President to Congress, made on the evening of April 2, and pledge to him our unqualified support in the maintaining and carrying out of these principles, and this we do as fully and determinedly as did our forefathers who pledged their fortunes, their lives, and their sacred honor. That we are residents of an agricultural community, and as such must not forget that food staples grown by the farmers are as necessary in war as are munitions, and that of all food staples wheat is predominant. That we urge upon all farmers the growing of a larger and increased acreage in wheat and food staples that can be used not only by our own armies and people but also shipped to the people of the allied nations who are fighting our battles: Be it further Resolved, That there is no room in this country for traitors or spies. Those who are not with us are against us. We demand strict respect and allegiance from all within our borders to our President, our Nation, and our flag.

Respectfully submitted.

OFFICE OF BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS,
MONTROSE COUNTY,
Montrose, Colo., April 10, 1917.

To all road overseers of Montrose County:

Our country is now at war with the Imperial Governments of Germany and Austria, not with the German people. The question to be fought out is not the subjugation of these people but the elimination of the Kaiser and Emperor. In other words, the elimination of Prussian militarism and the substitution of democratic government for the German and Austrian people.

As appointive officers of Montrose County you are part of its peace representatives. It is your duty to warn all persons against seditious talk and to inspire a reverence for the flag and a spirit of true Americanism. It is also your duty to warn Americans against intemperate talk or actions against their foreign-born neighbors. We should all be Americans in the broadest sense.

However, it is your duty to report at once anyone guilty of seditious talk, and, if necessary, to arrest them and notify the sheriff's office at Montrose.

Any American, whether born or naturalized, who shall by talk or action be guilty of sedition is a traitor.

Any citizen not naturalized who shall be guilty of sedition is an alien enemy.

Either offense is subject to severe punishment.

By order board of county commissioners.

OFFICE OF CLERK OF THE DISTRICT COURT, EAGLE COUNTY,
Red Cliff, Colo., April 9, 1917.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Pursuant to telegram, herewith find copy of resolutions adopted at a patriotic loyalty mass meeting of the citizens of Red Cliff, with request that you lay the same before our President, Woodrow Wilson.

With kind regards, we remain,

Very truly, yours, CHAS. W. COURSEN, Chairman.

To the Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
President of the United States of America:

Whereas our United States is at war with the Imperial Government of Germany; and

Whereas the people of Red Cliff wish to tender their sincere loyalty and support to our President and our Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved in mass assembly by the people of the city of Red Cliff and State of Colorado, That they fully concur in and indorse the actions and proclamations of President Wilson and the concurrent action and legislation of the Congress of the United States in the declaration of war against the Imperial Government of Germany, and as a pledge of our loyal support we have perfected an organization for the military instruction of our young men and an independent division of the American Red Cross Association of the ladies of Red Cliff, Gilman, and Eagle County.

Approved and adopted this 8th day of April, A. D. 1917.

Resolutions of the citizens of Fort Morgan, Colo.

We, citizens of Fort Morgan, Colo., in mass meeting assembled, make the following declarations: As loyal citizens of the United States we pledge our unqualified support to the administration at Washington in the endeavor, through suppression of unlawful invasion of our rights, both upon land and sea, by the German Government, to perpetuate freedom, happiness, and tranquillity for all nations of the world.

That in the declaration of a state of war as approved by the Congress President Wilson has consistently promulgated a principle of which the Imperial Government of Germany was duly warned following the initial unlawful submarine warfare, destruction of our ships, and murder of our citizens.

We as citizens of the Centennial State shall demonstrate in this emergency that the criticisms by the East of apparent apathy in our attitude toward the war issue is unmerited; that consistent patriotism of Colorado citizens is not subject to the spell of distance from the scenes of either military activity or of possible aggression by a foreign enemy; this regardless of the recent actions of a "little group of willful men" in the Colorado congressional delegation. We therefore commend the patriotic support of the war measures by Congressmen CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE and EDWARD T. TAYLOR and of Senator JOHN F. SHAFROTH.

We further pledge our support to the endeavors to be required of Colorado's governor in the war emergency, and that his call for supplying the State's unit in the military, civil, and commercial requisitions of the Government shall meet with prompt response in so far as our ability may permit.

Apparently secure in our position in the shadow of Pike's Peak and the eternal hills of the Rocky Mountain Range on the one side and the vast expanse of plain and valley on the other from eastern invasion of a foreign enemy, yet who knows but German intrigue and Mexican treachery may require our personal activities, every man of us, in defending the fair State of Colorado against invasion and disintegration by our neighbors on the south? Hence the further necessity of an awakening to the sense of our immediate duty in the pending war, abhorrent in any phase of its development.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President and to Members of the Congress from Colorado.

C. W. BALLARD,
Committee.

The Indian Problem.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. SCOTT FERRIS,
OF OKLAHOMA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, April 18, 1917.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the Indian problem, like the poor, is always with us for solution. Every four years we have had a new commissioner, new administration, injecting all sorts of doctrinaire into the administration of the Indian tribes. It has all been perplexing, confusing, and disturbing to them. Commissioner Sells, under date of April 17, 1917, has put out a new pronouncement of the policies that are to be followed in that bureau hereafter. If the policies laid down in that pronouncement are carried out to the letter it will be the most advanced step yet taken in Indian affairs and, I think, will result in no little benefit to the Indians and to the communities in which they live. I have not at all times been in full accord with the methods of handling Indian affairs, but Commissioner Sells's pronouncement of April 17, if carried out, will amount to an intelligent handling of the Indian situation and will, I am sure, bring good results. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 17, 1917.

DECLARATION OF POLICY IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

During the past four years the efforts of the administration of Indian affairs have been largely concentrated on the following fundamental activities: The betterment of health conditions of Indians, the suppression of the liquor traffic among them, the improvement of their industrial conditions the further development of vocational training in their schools, and the protection of the Indians' property. Rapid progress has been made along all these lines, and the work thus reorganized and revitalized will go on with increased energy. With these activities and accomplishments well under way we are now ready to take the next step in our administrative program.

The time has come for discontinuing guardianship of all competent Indians, and giving even closer attention to the incompetent that they may more speedily achieve competency.

Broadly speaking, a policy of greater liberalism will henceforth prevail in Indian administration to the end that every Indian, as soon as he has been determined to be as competent to transact his own business as the average white man, shall be given full control of his property and have all his lands and moneys turned over to him, after which he will no longer be a ward of the Government.

Pursuant to this policy, the following rules shall be observed:

1. Patents in fee: To all able-bodied adult Indians of less than one-half Indian blood there will be given, as far as may be under the law, full and complete control of all their property. Patents in fee shall be issued to all adult Indians of one-half or more Indian blood who may, after careful investigation, be found competent, provided that where deemed advisable patents in fee shall be withheld for not to exceed 40 acres as a home.

Indian students, when they are 21 years of age, or over, who complete the full course of instruction in the Government schools, receive diplomas, and have demonstrated competency will be so declared.

2. Sale of lands: A liberal ruling will be adopted in the matter of passing upon applications for the sale of inherited Indian lands where the applicants retain other lands and the proceeds are to be used to improve the homesteads or for other equally good purposes. A more liberal ruling than has hitherto prevailed will hereafter be followed with regard to the applications of noncompetent Indians for the sale of their lands where they are old and feeble and need the proceeds for their support.

3. Certificates of competency: The rules which are made to apply in the granting of patents in fee and the sale of lands will be made equally applicable in the matter of issuing certificates of competency.

4. Individual Indian moneys: Indians will be given unrestricted control of all their individual Indian moneys upon issuance of patents in fee or certificates of competency. Strict limitations will not be placed upon the use of funds of the old, the indigent, and the invalid.

5. Pro rata share—trust funds: As speedily as possible their pro rata shares in tribal trust or other funds shall be paid to all Indians who have been declared competent, unless the legal status of such funds prevents. Where practicable the pro rata shares of incompetent Indians will be withdrawn from the Treasury and placed in banks to their individual credit.

6. Elimination of ineligible pupils from the Government Indian schools: In many of our boarding schools Indian children are being educated at Government expense whose parents are amply able to pay for their education and have public-school facilities at or near their homes. Such children shall not hereafter be enrolled in Government Indian schools supported by gratuity appropriations, except on payment of actual per capita cost and transportation.

These rules are hereby made effective, and all Indian Bureau administrative officers at Washington and in the field will be governed accordingly.

This is a new and far-reaching declaration of policy. It means the dawn of a new era in Indian administration. It means that the competent Indian will no longer be treated as half ward and half citizen. It means reduced appropriations by the Government and more self-respect and independence for the Indian. It means the ultimate absorption of the Indian race into the body politic of the Nation. It means, in short, the beginning of the end of the Indian problem.

In carrying out this policy I cherish the hope that all real friends of the Indian race will lend their aid and hearty cooperation.

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

OF
HON. HOMER P. SNYDER,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 18, 1917.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a telegram from certain citizens of Rome, N. Y.

The telegram is as follows:

ROME, N. Y., April 17, 1917.

Hon. HOMER P. SNYDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The citizens of Rome, to the number of 2,500, in mass meeting assembled, held under the joint auspices of the Rome Defense League, the Rome Chamber of Commerce, and the citizens' Navy recruiting committee, appointed by Mayor Midlam, have, by a unanimous vote, instructed me to telegraph you the following resolutions and ask that you present them to the House of Representatives:

"Resolved, That we hereby pledge ourselves to support the President in a vigorous prosecution of the war; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge our Representatives and Senators to work and vote for the immediate passage of a law providing for universal military training and service."

Chairman of the Meeting.

The Declaration of War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WALTER A. WATSON, OF VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 5, 1917.

On the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, being unable, on account of recent sickness, to speak at length upon the resolution declaring war against the Government of the German Empire, I shall avail myself of the privilege to extend my remarks.

While there has been no lack of interest here or elsewhere in this important question, like most Members of this body I have hesitated to express opinions which might tend to embarrass the administration in the conduct of delicate negotiations, or which might compromise my own freedom of thought when subsequently called upon for action. The importance of the subject itself and respect for the interests of those we represent seemed likewise to impose silence on our part until diplomacy had exhausted its resources, the record made up, and all the facts in the long controversy were given to the world.

At length that time—deprecated, I am sure, by every patriotic citizen—is here; debate, remonstrance, protest have all been in vain; the time for action has come.

Upon the Congress the Constitution devolves the solemn duty to say whether there shall be peace or war.

I need not tell that the people whose commission I hold do not want war. Fifty-two years ago this day the closing scenes in the War Between the States were being enacted in their midst, and the memory of that great tragedy is too fresh for them to lightly invoke the god of battles in any cause. Their landscape is still marked here and there by frowning trenches and soldiers' graves, and there is scarcely a fireside at which the children have not learned the sad lessons of war—its toils, its privations, its sacrifices.

Having themselves drained the bitter cup to its dregs, my people would be the last to press it needlessly to the lips of their fellow men. The wreck of a civilization they are slowly and hopefully rebuilding, the restoration of their waste lands under changed economic conditions, the working out in peace and good will of the grave problems of race which confront them—all these domestic issues likewise admonish them to peace. And yet, with such memories and their vital interests at stake, if asked to-day whether they would have "peace at any price," I think I know what their answer would be.

"Is life so sweet or peace so dear as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?" was the question Patrick Henry propounded to their ancestors in the Revolution, and the answer was written in the bloodstained snows of Valley Forge, and sounded from the cannon's mouth at Yorktown.

The American people could have had such a peace in 1860 had they been willing to yield without a struggle their deep-rooted convictions concerning their constitutional rights and the fundamental principles of their Government; but had they done so many of its brightest pages would have been lost to their history. The trials and sacrifices of heroic conflict would not have come to strengthen men's character; Manassas and Gettysburg, Shiloh and Chickamauga, would not be recorded in our annals to inspire the Nation with courage, and the people of this land could not have been welded together in this great "Union of indefinite duration and illimitable expansion." Hence there is no American patriot who does not now rejoice that his people, in the settlement of their own vital domestic concerns, did not stoop to compromise with principle; but when the need came, like their fathers before them, boldly staked life and fortune upon the issue.

It is this fact which gives finality to the contests of the past, extinguishes the embers of controversy along with its flames, and which to-day imparts strength and stability to our institutions.

THINGS DEARER THAN PEACE AND WORSE THAN WAR.

Mr. Speaker, in this world there are things dearer than peace, and some things are worse than war. Peace is not an end in itself, but only a means to a higher and nobler national life. Honor is dearer than peace, justice is higher, liberty is more important, humanity is far nobler. Without these a nation might have peace, and yet be so lacking in morals and self-respect as to deserve the contempt of mankind. What shall it profit a nation to gain peace everlasting and lose its own soul? It was Robert E. Lee, the great and the good, who said, "What is life without honor? Dishonor is worse than death."

So some things are worse than war. Dishonor and breach of faith are worse; so are cowardice and inhumanity; death is preferable to lasting disgrace. "Injustice is infinitely worse, and it were better that civilization should perish altogether than have injustice permanently enthroned by force."

If, then, these things be true, the nation so lost to shame as to resent no insult to its honor, to have no rights it is willing to fight for, to acquiesce in the destruction of its property and the slaughter of its own citizens, and to condone the breach of public faith and deeds of inhumanity in the family of nations—that nation has lived too long already, and sooner or later must face the obloquy of mankind. Either it will fall a prey to its own weakness, or the fierce barbarian from without will come in to mend the puny breed.

Therefore, while impressed with the weight of responsibility for those whose interests are committed to my keeping, and conscious, as I am, that my people desire peace as long as it can be kept with honor, it is for considerations like these, so imperfectly enumerated, that I have been impelled to the conclusion it was no longer possible to maintain friendly relations with Germany without the sacrifice of interests far dearer to us than peace. Hence, I lift my voice for war in the profound conviction that in this crisis, when liberty and law and humanity are all at stake—when the foundations for the future government of the world are being laid—it is better for America and for mankind that we should take our predestined place in the great conflict.

DUTY TO ASSIGN REASONS FOR OUR ACTION.

Decent respect for our constituents and for the opinion of the world would seem to require some statement of the reasons for so important a step in our career, the consequences of which no man can foresee. Fortunately most of the salient features in the controversy with Germany are well known, and judgment upon their merits has long since been made up in the minds of the people. They may not have followed the sequence in which events have come, or the technical details in dispute, nor felt always satisfied what remedy should be applied; but upon the essential questions of right and wrong our people seem practically of one mind. And while this does not excuse us from the duty of assigning reasons for the course we pursue, it does in a measure simplify the task. Leaving then to others, whose service on the Foreign Affairs Committee has brought them in closer contact with the subject, the task of expounding the matter in detail, I shall now submit in a general way some of the reasons which have actuated me in giving support to the resolution before the House.

REASONS FOR WAR.

1. Only means by which we can save the foreign commerce of the United States upon which the material welfare of the Nation depends.

There is an idea in some quarters that this controversy with German is all "a tempest in a teapot," and that at most it only concerns the technical rights of a few hard-headed Americans who persist in going where they have no business, and of American ships which voluntarily continue to sail the seas after repeated warnings to stay away. Why do not our citizens remain at home in times like these and forego the exercise of their rights, rather than run the risk of plunging their country into war? is the question frequently asked. And Why do not our ships stay in port until the danger is over?

Apart from the consideration of national honor and right involved, such questions lose sight of the immense material interests at stake.

According to the report of the Department of Commerce the value of the imports and exports of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1915, aggregated the vast sum of $4,442,759,080. During the war our export trade has rapidly increased and our total foreign trade now approximates $6,000,000,000.

For the same period the products of the farm exported to foreign countries were valued at $1,470,344,195—54.1 per cent of all the domestic exports from the country—and the amount has since largely increased. This sum represents a material part of the produce from the labor and toil of millions of our people who till the soil. In the year mentioned 37.31 per cent of the wheat crop, about 35 per cent of the tobacco crop, and (1914) 55.35 per cent of the cotton crop went into the export trade—enough to control the price in the domestic market. In addition to this, for the same period, other agricultural products found a market abroad, as follows: Live stock, valued at $77,953,686; eggs, $5,003,764; hay, $1,980,297; hides and skins, $4,685,724; meat and dairy products, $220,051,847; seeds $3,861,064; and peanuts, $325,725.

Of these exports 68.82 per cent went to Europe, in the area directly affected by the submarine blockade of the German Government.

It is thus manifest that the prosperity of our agricultural population, from ocean to ocean, to say nothing of the countless numbers who labor in the factory and the mine, is vitally concerned in keeping alive our foreign commerce. We make more than we can consume; and most of our staple products must find a market across the sea. It would be but poor consolation for the tobacco grower of Virginia, the cotton planter of Carolina, the cattle raiser of Texas, the wheat farmer of Minnesota, to wake up one fine morning and find the submarine master of the ocean; the merchant ships of the country chained to the docks of the Atlantic seaboard, afraid to put to sea; and the products of his year's toil without market and without price. Then he might realize, for the first time perhaps, that the quarrel with Germany was farther reaching than the rights of the pleasure seeker and adventurer upon some remote sea.

Not only is the farmer affected, but the lives and fortunes of many thousand American citizens personally engaged in our foreign trade. The mere adventurer and pleasure seeker ought to, and perhaps does, stay at home in time of danger; but the importer and the exporter of the seaboard—the captains of trade who search out a market in foreign lands for the things we have to sell, and bring back the things we have to buy; they and their countless employees—"the drummers of the ocean"—have no such choice; they can not abandon the sea but to sacrifice the business upon which they and many thousands of their countrymen depend for the necessaries of life. The report of the Department of Commerce for the year ending June 30, 1915, shows that the number of American citizens arriving by boat at our principal seaports during that period was 239,579. No figures are available for the number taking passage out of the country for the same time; but, assuming that approximately the same number went out as returned thither, it may be said that a quarter million of our citizens yearly find it necessary to go to sea in pursuit of their lawful business.

And shall we deny them that right or refuse to defend them in its exercise? Shall the Anglo-Saxon skulk and hide on shore, when his ancestors won the freedom of the sea from the Armada and the pirates of the Spanish Main? Shall the flag of this great Republic, which, in its infancy, kept the sea against a Napoleon and a Pitt, and for more than 100 years has proudly ridden the ocean's wave, retire now before Von Tirpitz? Not if I understand the temper of my countrymen will they consent to such ignominy; not unless they are willing to submit to despotism at home will they surrender the rights of the humblest American citizen in any part of the habitable globe. "Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, an uncondemned," was the appeal of Saint Paul which stayed the centurion's lash before the mob at Jerusalem. If the citizenship of a Pagan country in a barbarous age, 20 centuries ago, could shield its possessor from personal indignity, will we not now protect the life of the citizen of a Republic many times more powerful than the empire of the Cæsars?

2. NECESSARY TO RESTORE THE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS.

Before this war the seas were the common highway of the nations, upon which citizens of every nation had the right to travel and to trade, but subject to the control of none. In war an enemy's ports might be blockaded under certain conditions, and his merchant ships captured upon the high sea, provided safety were extended to the passengers and crews. Even the ships of neutrals were subject to visit and search to prevent the passage of contraband, but with like protection to persons on board.

As far as I am advised, the first attack upon the freedom and safety of the sea in this war was the announcement by Germany in August, 1914, very shortly after hostilities began, that she had mined certain portions of the North Sea, and it was no longer safe for navigation. As is known, this was followed by the countermining of other areas of the same water by Great Britain. The conduct of both was against international law, but with this difference, however: Great Britain did not attempt to close her war zone to neutral trade, which she permitted with some restrictions, and offered to furnish neutral ships with safe pilotage through the mined area. This in turn was followed by the proclamation on the part of Germany of a war zone on all the high seas around the British Isles, dated February 4, 1915, in which that Government said:

Every enemy merchant ship found within said war zone will be destroyed, without its always being possible to avert the dangers threatening the crews and passengers.

This proclamation has since been enlarged so as to extend the so-called war zone to practically all the waters of the Atlantic, the Baltic, and the Mediterranean communicating with any of the allied ports of Europe, and so as to include within its prohibitions the merchant ships of all neutrals as well as of belligerents.

Thus was inaugurated the submarine war; and for the first time in modern history the ruler of a civilized nation announces not only that a great ocean is to be staked off against commerce, as if it were a private fish pond in Prussia, but what is far more important to mankind, that passengers and crews sailing the same, however peaceful their mission, whether belligerent or neutral, would do so at the imminent risk of their lives. Until then no principle of public law was more securely established than that war should be confined to the armed forces of the enemy. Under the benign influence of this principle the calamities of war had been spared to woman from respect for her sex, to old age and childhood because of its helpless condition, and to noncombatants because it was not kind or brave to strike one who could not return the blow. The principle is old as civilization, and had been the practice of enlightened Greeks and Romans long before the Son of Man delivered the Sermon on the Mount. Chivalry, a Pagan institution, founded not upon the sanctions of a future life but the simple instincts of courage and courtesy, held its shield over the noncombatant of the Middle Ages. Neither the scimitar of Saladin nor the broad sword of Richard was ever wielded against an unarmed foe.

In the submarine war over 600 neutral ships have been destroyed, and it is estimated over 2,000 lives of noncombatants sacrificed. Nineteen American ships and over 200 American lives have gone to pay the ominous toll.

It is not the submarine, but the use that is made of it that is a crime. It is as fair a weapon as any in the naval armory when properly used and in humane hands; in itself no more cruel than the battleship and far less formidable. Employed against the armed fleet of the enemy, it would be within the laws of war and might demonstrate its efficiency; but as a commerce destroyer the submarine is an outlaw, and its use for such a purpose is common piracy. Because, by reason of its structure and operation, it can not afford to merchant ships the protection for crew and passengers required by the law of nations and the dictates of humanity. The battleship has the same and even greater power to destroy commerce. But before now what civilized government would permit its navy to fire upon and sink the unoffending human cargo of a peaceful ship?

The idea that because the submarine is a new invention it may rightfully commit deeds which would be criminal in other warcraft is ridiculous and monstrous.

The wild savage of the American forest gave the war whoop before he pitched his tomahawk; the fierce reptile of nature, the rattlesnake, sounds the alarm ere it strikes its victim; but the submarine, lurking in the hollows of the deep, without warning casts its human prey to the mercy of the pitiless waves.

Nor will necessity alter the case. No necessity ever justified murder, no policy of state can condone cruelty, no ambition of man can atone for inhumanity to man.

What exigency of state was ever greater than that which beset the Southern Confederacy from the beginning to the end of its stormy career? The disparity in arms between it and the North was much greater than that which exists to-day between the central powers and the allies. It was cut off from the world more effectually than Germany now is; money failed, transportation broke down, bread and raiment became scant; it, too, was fighting for its national life, and dear to its people was the cause they struggled to maintain. Striving to break the hold of its competitor by assailing his commerce upon the sea, it fitted out the Sumter and the Alabama as commerce destroyers, and sent them upon their mission. Yet, as the son of a Confederate soldier and as an American citizen, I am proud to proclaim what the records attest, that during a cruise of three years under Raphael Semmes, though the American marine practically disappeared from the water and the Confederate flag sailed every sea from the Indian Ocean to the banks of Newfoundland, and though many ships were destroyed and over 2,000 captives passed from their decks—I am proud to say that not one man, woman, or child among them all lost his life or suffered a personal injury.

3. NO HONORABLE ALTERNATIVE TO WAR.

Mr. Speaker, I have reflected in vain to find if there were any honorable way out of the difficulties surrounding us short of war. All desire peace, but nobody can suggest any practical thing to be done beyond what has already been attempted.

Against the violations of our neutral rights—the laws of nations and of nature—this Government has not failed to protest from the beginning, and the two years since elapsed is a long record of patience and forbearance on the part of our people under great provocation. All conventional efforts to obtain redress having failed, we declined further intercourse with a government so regardless of our rights, sent its ambassador home, and armed our ships for self-defense; but still declined to appeal to force, in the lingering hope that reason might resume its sway at Berlin and we be spared the ordeal of war. But when, instead, atrocities have multiplied anew; plots against our domestic peace are hatched within our own gates; and we find Mexico being incited to invade our soil and Japan invited to assist in the partition of our country—what recourse is left but war?

Shall we be told to arbitrate when the facts are known to all the world and our adversary has had two years to consider, to refrain, and to redress? If the dead of the Lusitania could not move him to relent, would any award from The Hague soften his hard purpose? May the Congress escape responsibility in the crisis, and by a national referendum cast upon the people a burden itself has not the courage or the ability to bear? There is no constitutional way to submit such a question to popular adjudication; and if there were, there is no power to stay the arm of the aggressor while the election is being held.

4. WAR NECESSARY TO SAVE THE IDEALS OF CIVILIZATION.

Mr. Speaker, thus far I have tried to present the material interests involved in this contest, and chiefly those appertaining to us as a neutral Nation. But the issues are of far wider import than the material welfare of any nation or of all nations. The physical environment and material fabric of a people demolished by war can be restored by the industry of peace; but their liberties once lost may not be recovered, and in the tide of revolution their social and ethical standards may be submerged forever. War has been likened unto a grand surgical operation in the hands of Providence for the purpose of eliminating the cancer from the body politic; but in the hands of mortals the knife is often extended far beyond the bounds of the disease it was originally designed to correct.

With the causes of the European war we were not originally concerned; but the methods by which it has been conducted on one side, the means employed, the principles proclaimed, and the objects now become manifest are such as to fill the world with alarm. The very temple of civilization itself—so slowly and painfully wrought by men struggling upward through the ages—seems threatened in the blind rage of the Prussian giant. What principle of public law, public liberty, or public morals has not been abrogated already in the war he has waged?

Truth among men is the foundation on which the personal intercourse and business of society rests; and good faith among nations is the only tie by which the peace of the world has been made possible. Yet Germany signalized its entry in this conflict by the deliberate violation of its own treaty securing Belgium—a feeble but friendly State—against invasion; and when remonstrated with characterized her own solemn obligation as "only a scrap of paper."

Hitherto in every civilized age respect has been shown for the handiworks of art and science and religion, because they were supposed to perpetuate knowledge and were beneficial to mankind at large. Attila, "the scourge of God," in time of invasion saved the library of the Athenians from the vandalism of his followers; Rome was sacked many times by the fierce barbarian of the north, but Trajan's Column, the Arch of Titus, Hadrian's Wall, and many public monuments in "the Eternal City" yet survive all the ravages of time and war; even Napoleon, called in his day the robber of Europe, who, as conqueror, visited every capital and carried away treasures to enrich his own land, never stooped to destroy the monuments of human taste and skill. Contrast with these the modern invader of Belgium and France. Where are the trophies of Liege, Louvain, and Rheims? Priceless monuments of antiquity are fed as targets to the cannon, and temples of the Most High are crumbled into dust.

In better days both Moslem and Christian were wont to spare the civil population the penalties of battle, but now we see large areas laid waste as the desert—food, raiment, and shelter swept away—and men, women, and children dragged from home into foreign exile; and in Armenia the slaughter of thousands of followers of the meek and lowly Saviour, for no cause but conscience.

If "might make right" is to become the law of nations, mankind will be severed from its ethical standards and relapse into moral chaos.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. Speaker, democracy and military autocracy are now in death grapple on the plains of the Old World. One or the other must prevail and become the standard of human government for the future. Nature's law is the survival of the fittest.

If Germany succeed and impose her will on Europe, it will mean that democratic governments are not strong enough to stand in a trial of strength with the highly organized and well trained military State; it will mean that henceforth the soldier, and not the citizen, will make the State.

At this time the issue is by no means sure.

The military autocracy has at its command the most numerous, best equipped, and highly trained single army the world ever saw. It has the heart of Europe to subsist upon and a population of 150,000,000 to recruit from. It has the advantage of consolidated territory and is moving upon interior lines. Its opponents, while able to draw from a larger population and area, are, for the most part, far removed from one another in time and space; their soldiers are less highly trained, are compelled to move upon exterior lines, and, in case of Russia, are inadequately armed and fed.

For near three years victory has hovered in doubt over immense battle fields from Bagdad to the walls of Paris. What if she perch at last upon the Prussian banner?

If Britannia cease to rule the waves America would be the last hope for democracy in the world; and in that catastrophe does any wise man doubt that, single-handed and alone, she would have to face the mighty conqueror, flushed with the pride of victory, backed by veteran arms, greedy to recoup financial losses, and bent upon destroying the people's rule in its last strong citadel?

This hour the destiny of the human family is being fought out, perhaps, for generations to come; it may be the future liberty or slavery of the world.

In such a contest, can the people of this great free Republic afford to remain neutral? Ought they be content to make money out of the misfortune of their brethren across the sea, who are dedicating their lives and their fortunes to the cause of liberty and humanity? Can we shut our eyes any longer to the immense import of the great conflict, or still hug the delusion that distance alone may exempt us from its calamities? Rising rather from our long sleep and facing the future with clearer eyes and stouter hearts, ought we not bravely to resolve that the children of men shall not again be bruised by the despot's heel, nor bow down and worship before the god of force?

Jehovah yet rules on high and there is such a thing as conscience in the world. Mankind really believes that the weak should be protected against the strong; that there is such a thing as international honor and good faith; and that right is more powerful than might.

Then, since we must, let us take the sword; and, appealing to the God of Battles to make our aims just, let us "smite the smiter with manly arms, as did our fathers before us."

Emergency Bond Issue.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 14, 1917.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the $7,000,000,000 bond bill because I believe that in that manner we shall help to shorten the war and give notice to the world that we are determined that victory shall be won by us regardless of the cost.

The people of the United States did not seek this war; and heavy as the financial burden may become, they know that their money is going to be spent in this war in a most careful and prudent manner in order that the best and quickest results can be obtained.

The important question before us now is the question of war taxation, and the New York Times published a very important article on the subject by Victor Morawetz, and I insert same in full, as it is worthy of the most careful consideration and thought. It reads as follows:

WAR TAXATION—DISTURBING EFFECTS ON BUSINESS AND LABOR OF THE MOST DRASTIC MEASURES PROPOSED.

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

We entered upon the war not for present advantage but to insure the future safety and welfare of the people of the United States and of all humanity. It would be equitable, therefore, to spread the payment of the cost of the war over a generation, or about 30 years, by requiring the people to contribute annually, through the payment of taxes, one-thirtieth of the aggregate principal and interest of the cost of the war. Justice, however, requires that we should first appropriate by taxation and apply to the payment of the cost of the war a large share of the profits in excess of the normal profits of business obtained by companies, copartnerships, and individuals during the continuance of the war by reason of the conditions resulting from the war. Only the balance of the cost of the war, after deducting the war profits appropriated by taxation, should be spread over a term of years and be raised by ordinary taxation. Part of the people should not be permitted to obtain large profits through the war at the expense of the rest of the community, but it would be injudicious to tax away all the extra profits due to the war, as this would destroy the incentive to industry.

The sums advanced to the allies would not have to be raised by taxation, as the principal and interest of the bonds issued for this purpose would be repaid by them. Assuming, however, that the war will cost us $5,000,000,000 over and above the sums advanced to the allies and the sums raised by special taxation of war profits, the repayment of the principal of the $5,000,000,000, together with interest at 3½ per cent per annum, in 30 equal annual installments would require additional taxation amounting approximately to $250,000,000 a year.

It has been proposed, however, to impose enormously high, if not confiscatory, taxes not merely to provide for the cost of carrying on the war but for the collateral purposes of preventing the increase of prices of commodities which otherwise would result from war conditions. It has been urged that a large issue of bonds would cause inflation, and that the imposition of heavy taxes, forcing the people to practice severe economy, would counteract the increase of prices by diminishing the demand for luxuries and by causing labor now applied to the production of luxuries to be shifted to the production of necessaries of life and supplies for the Government.

It should be observed at the outset that the argument that a large bond issue by the Government would cause rising prices by increasing the volume of bank credits is untenable. It is not proposed to lower the standard of value, as was done during the Civil War, by the issue of irredeemable paper currency. The purchase of bonds by transfers of existing bank credits to the Government would not increase the volume of bank credits. The purchase of bonds by the banks themselves or by inviduals with money borrowed from the banks for that purpose would increase the volume of bank credits, but it would likewise diminish the surplus reserves of the banks and their power to grant further credits. It would tend to cause higher prices only if it should result in an increase of the aggregate activity of business and of the aggregate use of bank credits. Wages and prices will be increased by the war for two reasons, namely, (1) the enlistment of a large number of laborers in the Army and Navy, thus diminishing the supply of labor, and (2) the employment of part of the remaining labor in producing war materials and supplies for the Government, thereby diminishing the supply of labor available for the production of things consumed by the people and for other necessary purposes. This increase of wages and prices, due to the inadequacy of the supply of labor, together with the uncertainties and risks of business in times of war, will prevent any unnecessary use of bank credits or excessive activity of business, which should be checked by artificial means.

The problem is not a problem of currency or of bank credits, but it is essentially a labor problem. The inflation to be guarded against is not inflation of currency or credit, but inflation of prices of commodities due to the diminished supply of labor applicable to their production. This inflation of the prices of commodities can be checked only by diminishing the demand for the commodities or by increasing the supply or the efficiency of labor applicable to their production.

However, it must not be overlooked that unless we place an embargo upon the export of foodstuffs and other exportable articles, their prices will be fixed by the world's supply of these articles and the world's demand for them. The prices of these articles consequently will rise until their consumption throughout the world is reduced to the diminished world's supply. Diminished consumption or increased production of such articles in the United States alone will affect their prices to a limited extent only.

The warring nations in Europe have partially met the situation created by the war by the following three means: (1) They have diminished the consumption of food and of other necessaries of life by the use of food cards and other methods; (2) they have increased the volume of labor by the employment of men who previously were idle and by the employment of women; and (3) they have diminished the use of labor in the production of luxuries and for other unnecessary purposes, so as to force this labor to find employment more useful to the community.

The kind of labor which it is desired to increase in volume or to shift to the production of necessaries of life and war materials is ordinary unskilled labor and skilled labor which would be available for these purposes. It would be desirable to prohibit, or to diminish largely, the employment of labor of this kind in the production of luxuries or for any unnecessary purposes, but nothing would be gained by causing laborers of any class to remain unemployed.

In the absence of labor conscription there are only two ways of shifting labor from one employment to another, viz, (1) by attracting labor to the new employment through the inducement of higher wages and (2) by causing unemployment of laborers or a reduction of their wages in their present employments. The purpose of the proposed drastic increase of taxes is to cause the desired shifting of labor by causing the discharge of laborers now employed in the production of luxuries or for other unnecessary purposes or a reduction of their wages, so as to force them to seek other employment.

The imposition of enormous taxes is not an effective or an equitable means of attaining the desired result. In considering the effect of such taxation three classes of persons should be considered separately, viz:

(1) The very rich; that is to say, those whose incomes largely exceed their living expenses. The very rich are not numerous, and taxation which is not practically confiscatory would not compel them largely to reduce their living expenses—certainly not their consumption of necessaries of life. The principal effect of taking away from the very rich a considerable part of their incomes would be to depress the value of securities and to diminish the amount of new capital that would be available for new construction or for the enlargement of existing works.

(2) Those who receive incomes substantially larger than needed to supply the necessaries and ordinary comforts of life, but not substantially larger than needed to maintain the standards of living to which they are accustomed. Heavy taxation would force persons of this class to diminish their consumption of luxuries, but nothing short of practical confiscation would cause them to diminish their consumption of food and of other necessaries of life. Persons of this class commonly spend nearly a quarter of their incomes for rent, an item which could not be reduced promptly, and they commonly spend a considerable part of their incomes for the support of dependents and the education of their children. Heavy taxation would force many persons of this class to vacate the houses which they own or lease and to readjust their entire mode of living. As such a readjustment can not be effected quickly, many of them would be forced to draw upon their principal or incur debts.

(3) The relatively poor, whose incomes are not more than enough to supply the necessaries of life and a very moderate degree of comfort. This class includes most laborers, clerks, and farmers, and many professional men. It includes the vast majority of the people of the United States. Therefore to effect through taxation a substantial lessening of the aggregate consumption of food and of other necessaries of life it would be necessary to impose substantial taxes on the relatively poor.

Drastic taxation, such as has been proposed, would not merely cause suffering among those who are taxed. It would bear with special hardship upon the owners of dwelling houses and shops, the rental value of which would be greatly depressed, and upon all those engaged in the production or sale of things that can be dispensed with, or in rendering services that are unnecessary. It would cause far-reaching business disturbances and many business failures.

Possibly a radical readjustment of social conditions resulting in a permanent shifting of labor to other occupations and an impairment of the values of many classes of property might ultimately prove beneficial to the Nation, but such a readjustment could not be effected quickly without much present suffering and injustice, or without causing business derangements that would seriously imperil the financing of the present war.

This is not the time for undertaking to bring about a social revolution or for trying experiments in taxation. The sounder and safer course is, as above suggested, to impose heavy, but not confiscatory, taxes upon the extra profits of business during the continuance of the war, and to raise annually sufficient sums to pay off the remainder of the cost of the war in a generation by means of a moderate increase of the income and inheritance taxes and by imposing stamp taxes, taxes upon the use of vehicles for pleasure, and other indirect taxes.

To check the rise of prices of commodities and the other evil results due to the inadequate supply of labor, a popular campaign should be started to attain the following ends: (1) To dimipish waste and unnecessary consumption of food and of other necessaries of life; (2) to increase the volume of labor by the employment of those who are idle and by the employment of women wherever practicable, and (3) to diminish the use of labor in the production of luxuries or for any unnecessary purposes. To enact direct compulsory legislation to attain these ends would probably not be practicable at the present time. To attempt to attain these ends indirectly by means of drastic taxation would, for the reasons above stated, be unwise.

VICTOR MORAWETZ.

Location of the Government Armor-Plate Plant.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADAM B. LITTLEPAGE,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 23, 1917.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include some remarks on the subject of the location of the Government armor-plate plant.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I appreciate this opportunity to explain to the Members of Congress the situation and give a brief description of the site recently selected by the armor plate board in the Great Kanawha River Valley, near Charleston, in my congressional district, and in fact in dear old Kanawha County, where I was born and where the scenes of my life's struggles have occurred.

The site was recently settled upon by Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, and the board of naval officers and Government engineers by unanimous report, and in accordance with the act of Congress of the last session appropriating $11,000,000 for an armor-plate factory and $1,700,000 for a projectile factory. These two factories will be located at the same time and within close proximity to each other.

I have been greatly interested in this matter and have been contending every opportunity I have had during my stay here that the Government has been robbed for many years by having to pay such tremendously exorbitant prices to private manufacturers engaged in the manufacture of both armor plate and war munitions, and in fact they have grown immensely rich off of the great profits our Government has had to pay. I think it was clearly demonstrated before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate last year that it was high time the Government was undertaking to get rid of this terrible drain upon the Treasury and undertake to save the people taxes and money, and stop this leak, which has been going on for more than 30 years, during which time had the stupendous profits been saved by the Government and invested in battleships, submarines, and so forth, we would now have the greatest Navy in the world for our defense and protection. Those of you conversant with the hearings before the two committees named during the last session can not fail to remember how we were beset and almost overwhelmed with letters, propositions, protests, and petitions that we do not appropriate to construct a Government armor-plate factory. We were told by interested witnesses that it would cost the Government $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 to construct and equip for successful operation an armor-plate plant, and that the Treasury would collapse if we did. You all remember these letters, protests, and petitions, and that the witnesses all came from practically the same source—from the representatives of the millionaires engaged in the armor plate and munition business. These manufacturers have amassed great fortunes from the profits derived from the Government. You remember it was charged by some that they had been making in some instances $227 net profit per ton off the Government on the armor plate, but of course it was strenuously denied. Finally, when it was seen that the House and the Senate were determined to stop the leak and commence the making of its own armor plate, the manufacturers proposed to the Government to make its armor plate at $30 per ton profit, which in itself would have been a tremendous saving to the Government. When it was ascertained that the Congress was still determined they finally offered to make the armor plate for the Government and leave it to the Government officials as to what profit they should have; but it was too late. A revolution of sentiment had set in. Congress was determined to act—had made up its mind to stop that one awful drain upon the Treasury. President Wilson and his Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, in order to economize and save for the Government when and where they could, favored the position Congress had taken. The bill authorizing the appropriations I have mentioned went through the House and Senate by an overwhelming majority and finally it was signed by the President, which means the ultimate saving of hundreds of millions of dollars to the people in this one of many instances which could be enumerated in other directions to the eternal credit of the Wilson administration.

This is bringing the Government back to the people and wrenching it from the hands of predatory wealth. The Great Kanawha Valley in West Virginia is about 100 miles in length, extending from the historic city of Point Pleasant, on the Ohio River, where that noted Indian chief and warrior, Cornstalk, fell before the army of Gen. Andrew Lewis in his effort to advance the westward course of civilization, to Kanawha Falls, near the spot where Van Bibber leaped over the cliff into New River and swam away in order to escape from the Indians who were after his scalp. This great and valuable waterway has been improved by the Government by the construction of 11 modern locks and dams, rendering this stream navigable for passenger and tow boats and coal and coke barges practically the year around.

Our freight rates are about 25 cents per ton cheaper than at any of the other sites examined. This of itself will result in a tremendous saving of money to the Government, and our railroads, because of the immense travel and amount of freight hauled, are making money rapidly.

Our coal operators and coal miners, nearly every one of whom is heart and soul behind and with this Government, produce in the coal fields, in close proximity to the site, from 30,000,000 to 50,000,000 tons per year of the finest coal and coke in the world, excepting only the anthracite coal, and this, you know, can not be successfully used for steam purposes. The site is in the midst of one of the greatest oil and gas fields in the world. The Government can command these most excellent fuels much cheaper than at any of the other sites proposed. This important situation affords the most natural, convenient, economical, and safe location to be found on the American Continent.

This valley is traversed by two trunk lines of railroads—the Chesapeake & Ohio, running through passenger and freight trains from New York to St. Louis and Chicago, and the Kanawha & Michigan Railroad and connections, from New York, Baltimore, and Washington to Detroit, Mich. Both these great railroads, with their connections, permeate all the eastern and western sections of our country. The Virginian Railroad, the Norfolk & Western Railroad, the Coal & Coke Railroad, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad afford transportation north and south. All of these railroads, with connecting lines, reach both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The water facilities afford transportation of freight and passengers direct to the Gulf of Mexico. The site will be in the valley, entirely above high-water mark, inland about 400 miles from the Atlantic Ocean, with mountain ranges from 1,000 to 1,500 feet high on each side of the valley, and each within three-fourths of a mile of the plant site, thus affording a natural fortification, when guns are mounted on them, against the raid of any hostile aeroplane or bomb dropper.

Any quantity of pig iron can be had within 70 miles, direct railroad and water facilities for shipment, and an inexhaustible amount of fine-grade iron ore within 175 miles of the city, down-grade haul, direct railroad connections. One of the most desirable water-power sites and within close proximity can be had and doubtless will be taken advantage of by the Government in the more economical operation of these plants in the near future. One of the largest electric-power plants in the whole country, generating power and transmitting it throughout a radius of perhaps 100 miles is being successfully operated in this great valley and within 20 miles of the site.

The Government will have ample railroad facilities for shipment of the product of these plants east and west, north and south, and magnificent water facilities for shipping the finished products to the Gulf of Mexico and elsewhere along the Atlantic coast. Shipping facilities could not be better or cheaper.

It is urged, and I believe it truly so, that the Government will save 20 to 25 per cent on account of its fuel to run these plants more than at any other site proposed in the country. Within a radius of, I should say 50 miles of the plant site, there are perhaps 125,000 hardy, skilled, and industrious workmen employed. On account of this cheap fuel in the Great Kanawha Valley, its convenience and facilities for its handling important industries from the different sections of the United States are being rapidly located there.

We have the largest ax factory in the known world, furniture factories, steel and rolling mills, lumber factories of nearly every character, some of the largest glass factories in the country, and all of them doing a successful business, and to the eternal credit of them all each one is interested in the others' upbuilding and success.

In the city of Charleston there are about 16 banks, every one of which is solvent and prosperous, controlling deposits of perhaps $20,000,000. The legal rate of interest authorized by State statute is 6 per cent. The banks are all accommodating and are invariably helpful to one who is trying to help himself.

The people of the city of Charleston are a God-fearing, liberty-loving people, and they are intensely patriotic. We have the finest churches to be found anywhere in the United States for a city of its size, and the Christian religion is the dominating influence there, as it ought to be throughout the world.

The hospitality of our people is well known throughout the Republic, and once a stranger visits our people and becomes acquainted he will either linger there or return and settle.

There is, indeed, every good business reason for the location, and, above all, the natural conditions surrounding the selected site, would impel anyone who had the interest of the Government at heart, whether he be a civilian, military, or naval expert, that its location is ideal, and there is not a single good reason why this city should not have been selected.

When these important plants are completed and are being successfully operated, it is presumed that there will be 3,000 skilled mechanics employed. There is plenty of land and it is cheap enough so that every employee who wants to serve well his Government can upon easy terms acquire his own home.

The city of Charleston, in a business sense, is controlled by a chamber of commerce, composed of liberal, aggressive, and honest business men, every one of whom loves his Government better than himself. In fact, they are among the best people that any man ever saw. The rich and the poor, the high and the lowly, are in fact grateful to the Government for the consideration shown our community, as are the people of the State at large, and every possible effort will be put forth by them, one and all, on account of their loyalty and devotion to the Government to cause President Wilson, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, the members of the Armor Plate Board, the Senate, and the Congress to feel proud as long as they live of having selected Charleston, W. Va., as the most suitable place in the United States for these two great plants, the completion and perfection of which will ultimately cost the Government possibly a hundred million of dollars, and, mark my words for it, in after years the members of this national administration and their successors will have the supreme satisfaction of realizing, as this plant site is seen and understood, that first-class, up-to-date, unselfish, and good business judgment was exercised from a civilian and military standpoint, as well as that a great naval, safe, and sane strategic location was selected. These facts and these conditions will run with the Government and be appreciated as long as this Government shall endure.

Let me say to you further that our people will be self-sacrificing whenever the occasion may arise, as it will during the coming future, in order that these plants in their operation shall measure up to the full expectations of the great men who love this Government and who are responsible for their location in such a suitable place, and upon which plants the Government will be more or less dependent as the ages come and go.

As for my humble part during the eight months I have labored for this important accomplishment, I claim no credit. I am but a humble public servant of my people, the ambition of my life being to respond and measure up to their expectations; and every man, whether in public or private life, ought to try faithfully to do his best to make his community better on account of his living there.

I have tried to impress upon you that Charleston offered the best location in the United States for the plant, and I feel safe in saying that many of you would have agreed with me and lent me your influence but for the fact that you wanted the plants in your own district. For the splendid fight you have made to get these plants for your respective districts you deserve great credit at the hands of your people.

This has been an open, highly honorable contest, and thousands of great men have been deeply interested in its outcome and result.

The board, including, I believe we all think now, one of the greatest Secretaries the Navy has ever had, heard us all. They were patient with us in the extreme, and they labored day and night, traveled practically all over the country, personally visiting the different sites proposed, and from the few they did not personally examine they heard the witnesses and received the maps and drawings and were made familiar with their surrounding conditions and value.

Never in my day has any committee of any House or Senate or any board of either the Army or Navy striven harder to promote the best interests of the Government than did the Secretary of the Navy and the Government armor-plate board, which selected the site referred to; and, so far as I know or have heard, the decision made has left but one sore spot in the United States, and I regret very much to say, indeed I do, that this exists in the biased mind, but not in the heart, of but one man in one section of my own State, according to a newspaper editorial; but I am glad to say that he does not voice the sentiment of the rank and file of the people where he himself lives.

To those of you who are fair and just enough to speak truthfully of the natural conditions and surroundings and who are conversant with the facts pertaining to these natural conditions and who realize the desirability of the location selected, if not the necessity therefor, upon the part of the Government, I want to express to you individually and collectively my unstinted gratitude.

My home city's cause was presented to the board in the open. The Charleston Chamber of Commerce craves no credit for its industry and tact. The committee from that chamber and the public-spirited men who contributed to the preparation of Charleston's cause and its thorough presentation to the board, I know the officials of the Government appreciate because of their fairness and the reliability of their representations, especially after investigations, to each and all of whom I bid God-speed through life's journey.

I have received many letters of congratulation from the Members of the House, some from Senators, from citizens of my State on the successful contest made, and for which I am gratified. I claim no credit, neither do the people of Charleston claim credit, neither does the chamber of commerce claim credit, nor do the members of the committee of that body having in charge Charleston's cause claim credit. The case was decided and won for Charleston upon its merits. All any man or association of men did was to try faithfully to present the merits of Charleston's cause to the minds of the great men who had to pass upon and settle it. We all tried faithfully to do this in an open, honorable way.

Let me say in conclusion that the people of the whole State of West Virginia are proud of and grateful for this wonderful accomplishment, justified by nature, sagacity, and principles of economic justice. On behalf of Charleston and West Virginia I beg to say the action of this great board has filled our hearts full of pride, hope, and gratitude.

Death of Will H. Parry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,
OF WASHINGTON,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 23, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the brief announcement made by me to-day of the death of Hon. Will H. Parry, vice chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, I desire to refer at some length to his life, his character, and his achievements, and to express the sorrow of myself and my colleagues at his death, which occurred at the Emergency Hospital in the city of Washington late Saturday afternoon. He had been desperately ill for more than a week, and until almost the hour of the end it was hoped that he might be spared.

The loss to our State of Washington, Mr. Speaker, is great. Although a native of New York, educated at Columbia University, Mr. Parry, by reason of his long life in the West and his complete attunement with the spirit of that region, typified that which is best and manliest of the westerner. His was a gentle soul, but a fearless one; he was a strong man, fighting a strong man's battles; a tolerant man, charitable toward his adversaries, and broad visioned withal.

After some time at newspaper work in Oregon, Will H. Parry went to Seattle 28 years ago as a newspaper reporter. In that modest capacity, so high was the quality of the man, he impressed himself upon the civic life of the community, a lusty, growing, vigorous western city not lacking in strong men. In five years he was chosen city comptroller to straighten out and reorganize the city's muddled financial system. The work he did brought high praise from eminent financiers of the Nation.

Presently a shipbuilding concern, grown great from a small beginning, called upon him to organize it on sound lines of business management. This was in the days before we had heard of "scientific management" in industrial corporations, but Mr. Parry, seemingly by instinct, produced the results that efficiency experts promise to-day. One of his achievements was the building of the battleship Nebraska, a ship that in her splendid career has won the "E" awarded by the Navy Department for efficiency, and since her launching has had to undergo the minimum of repairs.

Other great business enterprises called Mr. Parry for service in organizing and reorganizing, but always he found time to serve in a self-effacing but powerful way as a leader in civic enterprises for the betterment of his city and State, and thus of the Nation. He was the business genius of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at Seattle, the first great international exposition that did not lose money.

Called to the Federal employ by President Wilson on the organization of the Federal Trade Commission, Mr. Parry, as a commissioner and latterly as vice chairman, worked as few men in the public service work. The confidential character of the business adjustments effected by the commission, the quiet way in which corporations offending against the definitions of unfair competition have been brought to book and compelled to reform their ways, have prevented full publicity being given to his notable accomplishments in this work, but they are well known to his associates.

He knew months ago of his grave physical condition, but he refused to take the rest and the surgical treatment he needed until the huge national tasks he had undertaken had been performed. Never did he find that time. Deferring and ever deferring care for himself, he finally died in harness.

Mr. Speaker, while the heart of Mr. Parry was always in wholesome public works, a trait equally strong was his thoughtfulness for his friends. For them he was always doing something. Only a day before he went to the hospital for an operation which he knew might result fatally he paused long enough to write a letter for a friend. This letter, which was handed to me by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, April 16, 1917.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have long been interested in trying to get a change in assignment for our mutual friend, Tommy Sammons. Information has come to me to the effect that he is worn out and needs a rest and a change of climate. I have wondered if it would be possible to get him assigned to service here in Washington, or possibly to some European billet, although, of course, I understand the latter are greatly restricted at the present time because of the war.

The reason why I am writing to you to-day is that I have been quite ill and am going to the hospital to-morrow for a rather serious operation, and I want to be sure to speak to you about Tom before going.

With warmest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely, yours,
WILL H. PARRY.

Mr. Speaker, that letter is typical of Will H. Parry, with whom my acquaintance began many years ago, for I took up newspaper work in the State of Washington at about the time he laid down the pen. I have known the members of his family for many years, and to them I can only say that their great loss will be felt in part by all the citizens of our Evergreen State.

In a statement to the press yesterday, Hon. Joseph E. Davies, formerly chairman of the Federal Trade Commission and Mr. Parry's close associate, said of Mr. Parry:

> The commission has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of Mr. Parry. He was in many respects an ideal public servant, devoted to the public interest, indefatigable in industry, preeminently judicial and fair. The country also suffers a real and great loss in his death. He was one of the most high-minded men I ever knew. He was beloved by every man in the commission. By that I mean actually every man, not merely the commissioners.

Mr. Speaker, no man ever lived who so fully exemplified the great truths penned by William Cullen Bryant in that immortal poem, "Thanatopsis." Will H. Parry has taken his place "in the silent halls of death." And, Mr. Speaker, he had so lived that he could and did approach the grave—

> Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Reception to Congressman Ricketts on His Return Home.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 23, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article published in the Logan (Ohio) Record, describing the reception given ex-Congressman Edwin D. Ricketts, from the eleventh district of Ohio, on his return home after serving faithfully through the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The article is as follows:

RECEPTION TO CONGRESSMAN RICKETTS ON HIS RETURN HOME.

At 7.30 o'clock Friday evening the citizens of Logan and Hocking Counties held at the courthouse a public reception in honor of their distinguished Congressman, Hon. Edwin D. Ricketts, who so ably, faithfully, and efficiently served them in the Congress of the United States during the past two years.

The courthouse was filled to a comfortable capacity, while the Ladies' Band rendered some very appropriate selections.

Judge Elmer O. Pettit was made chairman of the meeting, and he appointed a committee of five to escort Mr. Ricketts to the courthouse, where he was greeted with an enthusiastic ovation from the large audience which had assembled. People of all parties, classes, and professions were there to do honor to the one who had so ably and faithfully served them. Many very high compliments were paid Mr. Ricketts by Attorney J. F. White, Senator Dollison, Rev. L. L. Magee, F. M. McKay, A. E. Huls, and Attorney John C. Pettit, all of whom were loud in their praise and eulogy of his ability and faithful service as a Congressman. Hon. H. M. Whitcraft, in a presentation speech, presented to Congressman Ricketts a watch chain and charm, which charm was engraved, "Presented to Edwin D. Ricketts, M. C., by the citizens of Logan, March 16, 1917," as a token of the high esteem in which he is held by them and their sincere appreciation of the able and faithful manner in which he served his constituents in Congress.

Mr. Ricketts was then introduced by Chairman Pettit, and responded in his genial and eloquent manner, which made everybody present feel and know that he was their sincere friend and had to the limit of his ability endeavored to do his full duty.

His address follows:

"Mr. Chairman, friends, neighbors, and fellow citizens, I am indeed delighted to meet each and all of you and to know that it is again my privilege to be one of your number and to reside among those whom I have long since learned to know, to love, and to appreciate.

"I thank all of you from the very depth of my heart for this public reception and for the beautiful present you have given me as an evidence of your appreciation of my services as your Representative in the Congress of the United States. I can not find words sufficient to express my real gratitude to you for the honor you have conferred upon me.

"Believe me when I say I would rather have your respect, your esteem, and your appreciation than the gold of the world.

"When I look into your faces, after having listened to the many compliments paid me by the numerous gentlemen of all parties who have spoken here to-night, the question arises in my mind, 'Well, what does it all mean anyway?' This certainly is an honor that any man should cherish and appreciate, coming as it does from the citizens of his own home city and county, and being, as it is, the general expression of true and generous gratitude to one who simply did what he believed to be his full duty in carrying out the trust imposed by the generous suffrage of the people whom he represented.

"I am glad, my friends, that I was able to please you. I assure you that I did at all times that which seemed to me to be right, and what I believed to be right, in the interest of all the people.

"I have no regret because of any vote I cast. If I had it to do over again, I would do exactly the same thing which I did do, in each and every instance.

"Every act of mine was taken, only, after a most careful, sincere, and honest consideration.

"The two sessions of the Sixty-fourth Congress were the most strenuous in the history of the Nation, as must be conceded by all fair-minded men. The country and Nation, during this time, passed through many critical crises. As said by the President: 'These are times that try men's souls,' and I fully agree with that sentiment.

"My record in Congress is an open book, and subject to public inspection, and I stand squarely upon that record. It is the result of an earnest and untiring effort upon my part to serve all the people of this congressional district faithfully, efficiently, and well.

"I went to Congress feeling deeply the responsibility and I return, convinced in my own mind, that I have fully discharged my official duties to those whom I had the honor to represent.

"This public expression on the part of my own neighbors and friends richly repays me for each and every effort and sacrifice that I made in trying, truly, to represent the people of the eleventh congressional district of Ohio.

"Now, in conclusion permit me to again express to you my most sincere and profound gratitude for the high honor of this occasion, and I especially express and extend my gratitude and appreciation to the distinguished gentlemen who have so ably spoken and so highly complimented me with reference to the service rendered. This action, taken voluntarily by you, is an expression of regard that I shall ever treasure with sincere fondness, remembering at all times that it is in fact the greatest event of my life, and an honor seldom conferred upon men in public life for public service rendered. To me this is indeed a most happy moment, and I again thank each and all of you from the very bottom of my heart for this public reception and expression of your loyalty to me and your public sanction and approval of my feeble effort to render the best service of which I was capable to the people of this district.

"I am proud to be one of you, and to know that I am the only man from Hocking County that has ever had the honor to represent the people of the eleventh district in the Congress of the United States.

"I bid you all 'Good night, and may God bless you each and all.'"

The affair was a success in every particular, and Democrats and Republicans alike felt they were indeed glad to do honor to one who had brought honor to them, a man who put the eleventh district back on the map and after 100 years' waiting brought old Hocking into the limelight.

BACK HOME.

Congressman Ricketts has returned to his home in Logan after two years at Washington. He has served with distinction, and Logan is proud of him, regardless of politics. The first time in the history of Hocking County we have had a resident Representative in the Congress of the United States, and, regardless of politics, we may say he has served his constituents well and has made a record to be proud of. He has the distinction of answering to every roll call in the session, being the only Congressman with such a record. He is one of the brilliant young men of Ohio, and when he shall have served a second term in Congress, or perhaps ere that time, Attorney Edwin Ricketts, of Hocking, will be called upon by his party and by the people to serve Ohio as its governor. He is one of the rising young men of this Nation, with a future before him which means political prominence and further national reputation. Hocking tips her hat to her favorite son.

The War Resolution and the Bond Issue.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 13, 1917,

On the bill (H. R. 2762) to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, a week ago to-day this Congress, acting under the supreme authority of the Constitution, registered its decision upon the most momentous question ever submitted to it.

Fully conscious of the horrors of war and impressed with the weight of the grave responsibilities which that decision involves, it was with profound sadness that I cast my vote in favor of the war resolution. It is a fearful thing to plunge a nation into the travail of war, and I had hoped that the fateful hour would not come when this great Republic would be compelled to unsheath the sword and enter the field of conflict.

An appeal to the abitrament of arms should be the last resort of an enlightened nation, the final step after all other means have failed. In my judgment all honorable means have failed, and the time for action has come. However much I may regret the necessity of the act, I am firm in my conviction that justice demands and humanity sanctions it.

The salient features in our controversy with Germany need not be reviewed. They are well known, and the judgment of the American people has been rendered. Protest and remonstrance have been unavailing; diplomacy and persuasion have been exhausted. We have appealed to justice, to international law, and to the humane instincts of civilization, but our appeals have not been answered. We have protested against the violation of our rights—the laws of humanity and of nations—but we have not obtained redress.

Arrogant and despotic power has deliminated a war zone across the highway of nations in defiance of every precept of international law. It has inaugurated on the high seas a reign of terror, decreeing death to all who venture within the prescribed area. Our flag has been fired upon, our citizens slain, our honor assailed, and our power mocked and ignored. Submission to brute force, the abrogation of justice, and the denial of protection to our citizens must never be the path for this Nation to follow.

We have been patient and forbearing. To the last we have hoped that our Republic, by remaining neutral, might hasten the day for peace to stricken humanity, but our hopes and our prayers have been in vain for war has been thrust upon us. We have no choice now even should we desire to exercise it. We have done all; yea, more than any nation conscious of its duty to the future as well as to the past can or should do.

Continued patience and forbearance cease to be a virtue. Instead they become a confession of timidity and weakness, evidence that this Nation supinely submits to insult and injury.

Steadfast in our determination to "preserve the principles of human liberty, the principles of democracy, and the light of civilization," cherishing our traditions and our ideals, America draws the sword to do battle for humanity against despotism.

In this crisis, Mr. Speaker, partisanship disappears and we rejoice that patriotism knows no party distinction; loyalty no sectional divisions; and that Americans of every race and creed and station stand united in the presence of the common danger.

We enter the war not for conquest or territorial aggrandizement, not for trade expansion or commercial development, not for any indemnity or political advantage which peace may bring. We bear no malice toward our enemies. There is no hatred in our hearts of the German people. Our quarrel is not with them, only sympathy that they have been misled victims, crushed under the iron heel of the Prussian military obligarchy.

We enter this war, Mr. Speaker, to preserve all that civilization has acquired in its centuries of advancement up through the ages, to prevent despotic military power and autocratic political creeds from strangling free governments, to stop the ruthless violation of treaties and of national obligations. We wage battle for the defense of our national existence, for the maintenance of our rights, for the reestablishment of law and order, and for a victory which will destroy militarism and secure peace—a peace so permanent and lasting that it will bestow its blessings on all mankind forevermore.

To-day representative democracy and military autocracy are in a death struggle on the plains of Europe. One or the other will prevail and become the standard of government for the future. The American people take their stand on the side of democracy and place their faith in Divine Providence, trusting that the star of destiny will guide the great Republic onward to victory and to glory.

THE WAR LOAN.

Last week this Congress declared war against Germany, and to-day we are called upon to take the initial step in carrying out the policy then decreed. We are supremely confident of the result, yet as we have never been a military nation we are not prepared for war. We have vast resources, undaunted courage, and untiring energies, but we can not at once mobilize our wealth or transmute immediately our gigantic strength into effective organization.

We can not send troops to Europe, for we have no army, and upon the sea, outside of the submarines, Germany has no navy that we can reach. There is, however, another field for our activities while we are preparing; another way of striking effectively, and that is by furnishing money to the entente allies which will enable them to purchase new supplies of war munitions. Here we can act quickly, and I doubt if there is anything we can do now which will give such confidence and hope, as well as ultimate material assistance, to those with whom we stand in the conflict as a prompt and unanimous passage of this bill. By the enactment into law of this measure we accomplish three things: We provide funds for our own defense; we strengthen the credit of the foreign governments to whom the money will be loaned, thus stimulating them to greater activity; we deliver a demoralizing blow to Germany by showing her in no uncertain terms that there is no faltering on our part; that all our strength and all our resources, no matter what the cost or the sacrifice, are to be thrown into the balance against her. Every blow struck at Germany by any of her enemies is a blow struck in our interests. There can be no halting or hesitating now.

I desire briefly to refer to the pending measure, appropriating the largest amount ever passed upon at any one time by any legislative body in all history.

This bill authorizes an issue of $5,000,000,000 of bonds, $2,000,000,000 of one-year certificates of indebtedness, and the issue under new terms of $472,000,000 of bonds authorized by previous acts but not issued, making a total of $7,472,000,000, all of which is to bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent.

Of the $5,000,000,000 of bonds authorized, $3,000,000,000 are to be used in extending credits to foreign governments by purchasing with the proceeds from the sale of the bonds the bonds of those foreign governments. It is stipulated that these foreign bonds must carry the same rate of interest and conditions as the bonds issued under this act. In reality this feature of the bill empowers the Government of the United States to invest in the public securities of the nations at war with Germany—an interest-bearing loan—which will enable those nations to extend and increase their credits and purchasing power by the amounts thus loaned them.

The remaining $2,000,000,000 of bonds are to be used in meeting expenditures for the national security and defense. The $2,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness are to provide funds for the immediate needs of the Government, pending the collection of taxes.

The total interest-bearing debt of the United States on February 28, 1917, was $973,000,000. This act adds $7,472,000,000, making a total of $8,445,000,000. From this stupendous sum should be deducted, however, the $3,000,000,000 loaned to foreign governments, for, while these bonds are an obligation on our part, the interest will be offset by the interest received from the bonds issued in exchange, and eventually the loans also will be repaid. Such a vast sum is staggering, and we can only comprehend its bearing upon our finances by comparison. Considering our wealth, population, and productive power now in comparison with what they were in 1865, this huge debt is far less a burden than that assumed by the Government during the Civil War. Then part of our country was impoverished, now all is prosperous; then dissension and bitterness prevailed, while now all is unity and harmony. At the close of that great conflict our bonded indebtedness on August 31, 1865, was $2,381,000,000, the interest on which amounted to $150,977,000 per annum. The interest charges we will now be obliged to meet will be about $285,000,000 per annum. Deducting the interest on the $3,000,000,000 of bonds to be exchanged for the interest-bearing bonds of foreign governments and our yearly interest charge will amount to $185,000,000, an amount not greatly in excess of that paid in 1865. Let us compare our resources then and now. At the close of the Civil War our wealth was estimated to be $20,000,000,000 and our population was 34,750,000. Our wealth now is estimated to be $250,000,000,000 and our population is 100,000,000. When we remember the enormous wealth of the Nation, gigantic as is this loan, it will produce far less of a strain upon the credit of the Government and the financial resources of the country than did the bonds issued during the Rebellion.

I submit some interesting tables, which, owing to the lack of positive figures, are to some extent approximations:

Wealth, population, and debts of countries.

Country.	Wealth.	Income.	Debt.	Population.
United States	$250,000,000,000	$50,000,000,000	$8,445,000,000	100,000,000

Grand total all nations	61,769,000,000	105,000,000

Let us act and act quickly. Thus will we send the message across the sea to the brave boys in the trenches, to the undaunted heroes of Belgium and the brave soldiers of Italy and France. The tidings will echo in far-off Russia, writhing in the throes of revolution, "Hold on, help is coming; the great Republic of the West is with you with all its mighty strength, united in your cause until the end. Hold on."

The War With the Imperial German Government.

Resolutions of Kazoo's Patriotism.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. M. C. SMITH,
OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 23, 1917.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me I wish to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a patriotic resolution passed at a citizens' mass meeting held in the city of Kalamazoo on Thursday evening, April 19, 1917, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS OF KAZOO'S PATRIOTISM.

The following preamble and resolutions are presented at a general mass assembly of the citizens of Kalamazoo County, Mich., held at the armory in the city of Kalamazoo, April 19, 1917:

"Whereas our Nation has been forced into this war in order to protect the lives and property of our citizens and to defend the principles for which our forefathers mutually pledged to each other their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor, and that Nation now needs assistance of every true and loyal citizen; and

"Whereas the Chief Executive of the United States has formulated and presented plans for increasing the Army and Navy to meet the important crisis before us, and has called upon our people to join in common cause in defending and protecting our rights and in carrying the blessings of freedom which we enjoy to others, even though they may now be our enemies, and that to accomplish these purposes there be provision made for universal military training and enforced military service; and

"Whereas Michigan has always rallied around the flag whenever the Nation has called for help, and it intends to do so now: Therefore the citizens of Kalamazoo County, in mass convention assembled, join together in support of these resolutions:

"Resolved—

"First. That our country needs the service in the Army and Navy of sufficient men to carry our banner to victory; that it also needs volunteers in civil life who will care for those who may be injured or disabled in the conflict and to aid the dependents of those who are on the firing line, and still others are wanted in our manufactories and on the farms and in the gardens for the purpose of furnishing the necessary material and food for the military forces and our civil population, and that every loyal and patriotic citizen should act in accord with every other one to carry forward this work by the employment of their time, their money, and their energies, and by making all necessary sacrifices.

"Second. That we are eminently proud to note that our delegates in Congress were among the first in all the States of the Union to pass a resolution to stand back of the President in his plans for national defense.

"Third. That we are to-day all Americans, irrespective of where we or our ancestors may have been born. We can all trace our lineage from some foreign land, but the very fact that we and those before us left some other country and took up our residences here gives positive proof that we and they prefer the liberal laws and desire to enjoy the extended rights vouchsafed to us in these United States to anything which is offered by any other nation on earth, and neither political opinion, religious belief, wealth or poverty, social distinction or otherwise, race or previous condition of servitude should sway us from dutiful loyalty to our country.

"Fourth. We congratulate the noble men who have come voluntarily forward and offered themselves through enlistment for service at this time of the Nation's need, and we honor them and those who may hereafter join them for their patriotism and their loyalty. Our prayers are for their safety and our hopes for their speedy return to our midst. We who are left in the community of which they have been members do pledge to them that we will not only do all we can for them during their absence, but we will not be wanting in our hearty greetings and in extending them proper honors when they, with victory, march home again.

"Fifth. That we stand in unreserved and full support of the policies of Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States and Commander in Chief of our Armies.

"We believe the position taken by him for universal military training and for selective draft for military service as approved by our Army leaders is the correct and only proper mode of establishing in the shortest possible time an efficient soldiery, this, however, not to interfere with voluntary enlistment in the manner and for the purposes proposed by him.

"We not only pledge our support to President Wilson upon these questions, but we offer him our aid in all legitimate ways that we may be able to serve, to the end that we may be successful in the great task which is set before us, that our flag may not only continue to float unsullied over our own land, but that its folds may protect the downtrodden of other lands and bring new hope to the people of all the earth."

DALLAS BOUDEMAN, Chairman.
WM. E. PRAGER,

War Situation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. S. D. FESS,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 24, 1917.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an address delivered by myself in Springfield, Ohio, on the war.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS DELIVERED IN MEMORIAL HALL, SPRINGFIELD, OHIO, ON THE WAR SITUATION, APRIL 14, 1917.

For 30 months and more we have tried neutrality only to see it lead directly to the vortex. With three-fourths of the world in arms in the last gasps of a life and death struggle, it might have been too much for us to cherish the fond hope of exemption from war. The titanic contest was noted from the very beginning between the militarism of the Prussian on the one side and the navalism of the Briton on the other. The one superior on the land, the other on the sea. In the nature of the situation our relation was precarious from the beginning, due to our ability as a great commercial neutral country.

Fully aware of the critical situation our Government immediately upon the outbreak of the war endeavored to induce the warring nations to agree upon a code of naval warfare, suggesting that adopted in the declaration of London. In this we failed. We then endeavored to induce them to limit the operations within certain proposed regulations. In this we also failed. We then announced we would hold all countries to a strict adherence to the rules and practices of international law.

CONTENTION WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

In due time we were in diplomatic disputation with both great belligerents. England's pretended blockade we denounced first as no blockade at all, and later as "ineffectual, invalid, and indefensible." We also complained that she must not extend it to neutral countries. To our first protest her answer was proclamation of a real blockade to extend to all the coasts of her enemy. To our second she quoted against us the Springbok case of the Civil War. Whether her blockade was effectual was a matter of fact and not of law—to be determined as any other fact in dispute. The ".continuous-voyage" doctrine of the Springbok case raised a question of doubt which England agreed to adjust by a proper court proceeding after the war.

All our differences with the great naval power extend not beyond property rights, and are therefore subject of judicial adjustment in the prize court.

CONTENTION WITH GERMANY—"WAR-ZONE" ORDER.

The retaliation against England's blockade and her extension of the lists of contraband making all goods subject of capture under the laws of war, Germany, in February, 1915, announced her famous "war-zone" order, declaring she would sink all belligerent merchant vessels that were seen in the barred zone without regard to passengers, whether belligerent or neutral. Our Government at once addressed the German Imperial Government our protest, in which we declared we would hold to "strict accountability" the government under whose orders any American citizen should perish while he was exercising his lawful pursuits.

THE "LUSITANIA," AND WHAT FOLLOWED.

Just three months later the Lusitania was torpedoed with its frightful loss of life, among which were over 100 American citizens. Then began our series of diplomatic notes in which Germany justified her submarine action on the ground that the United States did not compel England to abide by the laws of neutral rights. Our contention was that our adjustment of disputes with England must not be named as a condition of Germany's recognition of protection of American life from unlawful attacks of submarines. In the meantime the Gulflight and Cushing were attacked. The Nebraskan and the Falaba were also torpedoed without warning. Then the Ancona, and at last the Sussex. Our Government finally addressed an ultimatum to the Imperial German Government to the effect that diplomatic relations would be severed unless disavowal was forthcoming. Germany then promised not to attack without warning and forwarded necessary instructions to her submarine commanders.

THE BREAK.

Later she withdrew these instructions, and on the 31st of January last sent us warning that all vessels, neutral as well as belligerents, found in a specified barred zone would be sunk without warning. Three days later, February 3, we broke off diplomatic relations. The President announced to Congress an overt act would most likely lead to armed neutrality. On the 26th of February he asked Congress for authority to arm merchantmen. The American vessels Illinois, Memphis, and Vigilanti were sunk. The President called the special session of Congress to meet, first, on the 16th and then a hurry call for the 2d of April.

WAR.

The war resolution was passed by the Senate on the 3d of April and by the House on the 5th and signed by the President on the 6th. We are now in war.

In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, our great country, this giant Republic has ceased to be the peaceful people, and are now arrayed in the habilaments of war. Yesterday ours were the joys of a peaceful prosperity of farm and factory, of mine and manufactory, of institutions of home, state, church, and school. To-day we are absorbed in the fatalities of war. Yesterday our busy population were threading the thoroughfares of peaceful pursuits of production and exchange. To-day it is leaving these fields for camp and the training grounds. Yesterday our citizenry went about their vocations undisturbed, save by the hum of industry, the music of peaceful pursuit. To-day they are marching in line to the step of martial music.

Yesterday our public debt, all told, was but $973,000,000, less than one billion, or less than the amount necessary to run the expenses of the Government in time of peace for but one year. To-day that debt is $8,000,000,000, or more than eight times what it was but yesterday.

THE REAL SITUATION.

My fellow citizens, I come to make a few statements to you that we may not underestimate the real situation. We are now in the greatest war, by all odds, known to man. Our entrance is the last fading hope to see its end by mediation. It is now a test to the death. We are against the most efficient, the most powerful military aggregation in ancient or modern history. We are to make a trial with a Government which for three years has held the world at bay, without so far as having fought a single battle upon her own soil. We must not think of our enemy as gasping for breath or suing for peace.

We did not enter because we thought it a struggle of short duration or that our enemy was so far spent that we need not expect a supreme test. We entered because we could not avoid it. War was not of our choosing. It was made upon us. It was left to us to either surrender rights, dignity, national honor, which might have meant all the blood-bought principles for which we stand, or else take up the gage of battle.

We enter it without revenge, without hatred. Our country loves the great German people. Among us our very best citizenship numbers those who came from the fatherland. In this hour of stress, where our life is in the balance, we will find no more patriotic element in our citizenship than those of foreign birth who came here because of the prospect of American rights, which we are now fighting to preserve.

I come to indicate to you the situation. We must and will win! Our cause is just. We are armed in the holy cause of liberty and justice, man to man, and we can not fail! We must not fail!

PROBLEMS LOOM HIGH.

How are we to cooperate? We, of course, must make common cause with the nations fighting against our common enemy. We will of necessity be compelled to seek unity of action for the sake of effectual cooperation. Can this be done without effecting alliances, which we all fear to do? In case we do not make common cause with our colleagues, is there danger of a separate peace with them and a final struggle alone to fix an indemnity? What is the real situation in Russia? Revolution is always uncertain. Its issues can not be definitely fixed. Revolutionary Russia is a problem and this country must not lose sight of possibilities in that quarter.

Let no man deceive himself into a belief that we have not entered upon a dangerous voyage—a course we could not have averted. I have come to you to speak of the duty of the hour. Let no man indulge the fond hope of peace or immediate mediation. There is no peace. On every side, in every quarter, it is war. War as never before in all history. Our Nation must buckle on the armor. We must mobilize our abilities. It must not be confined to military activity, including munition making, but it must extend to industrial and agricultural as well, including labor. The duty of the hour looks beyond the trench into the field of production. We must utilize to the fullest the productive capacity of the farm and garden, and if necessary exercise the military powers of enlistment to assure that production. Here is also the field of the women of the Nation not only to insure production but to conserve resources to avoid needless waste.

CONTROL OF HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Our enemy is not to be confined in the German trench or the barred zone, but he will be active in the field of speculation. We must, if necessary, take charge of the food supply of the country, or at least handle as with the mailed fist the food speculator who thrives from the agonies of war by compelling a docile population to pay him tribute in the form of exorbitant prices for the necessaries of life.

The Government has already taken steps to commandeer the country's industries. It voted to-day the most fabulous sum ever presented in the form of a budget for war in the history of the world.

THE ARMY—VOLUNTEER VERSUS DRAFT.

It will not hesitate to take all necessary steps to end the war successfully. Its problem to-day is the Army. Personally I am naturally not in favor of conscription until the volunteer plan is given a trial. The conscription plan seems to me un-American. It can not be put in readiness short of one year so soon as the volunteer. The volunteer system can begin at once. We are rapidly filling up the ranks to war strength. If we find the volunteer system will not succeed, it is then time to undertake conscription. I may be compelled to vote for it as the only way, but I am not yet so convinced. I believe universal military training and service must be adopted, and I shall vote for it when it comes up. But this is far from conscription for European trench service. Let the country call upon all her youth to train for the defense of her shores, and then, if it be necessary to enter the European trenches, make a call from the trained men, and there will be no lack of volunteers. The ranks will be swelled by seasoned soldiers.

OUR MISSION TO THE WORLD.

My fellow citizens, we have lived for near three years over a possible volcano. During that time we have shown remarkable equanimity in the face of danger.

The Nation has been lulled to sleep over the assurance dinned in our ears that exemption from war was assured if we but refuse to show a willingness to defend ourselves. We now face the reality of war. Columbia has been called to action. She has accepted the gage of battle. She has been challenged to defend her honor and her liberties. She to-night calls her sons to the colors. She summons her daughters to make necessary sacrifice to bring speedy recognition of her rights as first expressed over 100 years ago when our fathers fought for life, liberty, and opportunity in the rivalry of life. She goes to war to preserve her blood-bought principles of justice, man to man, the general welfare of all her citizens and the guarantee of the fruits of freedom to her posterity. To establish these principles our fathers went to war with the "Mistress of the Sea." To extend the principles to the domain of the high seas, the Nation entered a second contest with the "mother country," and later went through the fires of the greatest civil war known to man. Later, hearkening to the call of oppressed Cuba, she took up the sword in behalf of humanity and gave freedom to Cuba. To-day this great Republic of over 100,000,000 freemen, no less patriotic and brave, is challenged to defend her rights against the greatest military power of Europe. She has bravely taken up the sword, and I can assure you that she will make good account of herself. Already our Navy is under orders. Every department of national defense is alert and ready for action.

The German interned ships, representing the flower of Atlantic sea-borne commercial power, are now under the American flag. My fellow citizens, it is well to remember this banner is the only national emblem that floats the breezes to-day that was never lowered to a foreign conquerer. In its struggle for the rights of man it has been planted on the ramparts of every country which denied to us human rights, and holds sway to-day over a continent. If it becomes our mission under God to extend human right and liberty to other lands denied the same, that mission will be supported by a united nation, that knows neither party division, religious contention, national bias, nor racial prejudice. But as one man our citizens will place their all on the altar of their common country and for the rights of mankind.

Memorial of American Economists to Congress Regarding War Finance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,
OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 24, 1917.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a memorial signed by all of the teachers of economic and political science in Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, relating to raising war finances by taxation.

The memorial is as follows:

GRINNELL COLLEGE, April 22, 1917.

Hon. C. W. RAMSEYER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing a memorial signed by all the teachers of economics and political science in our college relating to the methods for financing the war. This memorial was drawn by prominent members of the American Economic Association and will be signed by nearly all of them, I believe, and sent to their Representatives.

It is not intended at all as a criticism of the legislation for the issue of $7,000,000,000 in bonds recently passed, but suggests additional legislation providing adequate and proper taxation to support and eventually pay off these bonds.

I dare say the proposal is in line with your own ideas in general, for I have heard you refer to the needless inflation of prices and unnecessarily heavy cost of our Civil War period.

Our idea is not simply to arrange to have the wealthy pay a proper share of the cost, but to lessen decidedly the cost of the war to all.

I have been studying and teaching the subjects of taxation and finance for 20 years, and I want to assure you I am convinced that the positions taken in the memorial are sound. I believe you will find them almost unanimously supported by the economists of the country.

With great sympathy for you in these difficult times, I am,
Yours, truly,

G. P. WYCKOFF,
Grinnell, Iowa.

MEMORIAL OF AMERICAN ECONOMISTS TO CONGRESS REGARDING WAR FINANCE.

We, the undersigned, teachers of political economy, public finance, and political science in American universities and colleges, respectfully urge upon Congress to adopt the policy of taxation rather than that of bond issues as the principal means of financing the expenditures of our own country in the war on which it has embarked.

The taxation policy is practicable. It will prevent the price inflation which must result from large bond issues. It is demanded by social justice. It will increase the efficiency of the Nation in the conduct of the war.

The argument in support of these statements is briefly as follows:

THE TAXATION PLAN IS PRACTICABLE.

The taxation policy is practicable because the current income of the people in any case must pay the war expenditures. The choice between bond issues and taxation is merely a choice whether the Government shall take income with a promise to repay those who furnish it or take income without such promise. The actual arms, munitions, and other equipment and supplies for use in the war, except to the small extent that they have been stored up in the past, must be produced now, during the war itself, not after the war; and, moreover, must be produced by our own people. The policy of borrowing within the country itself does not shift any part of the nation's burden of war expenditures from the present to the future. All it does is to make possible a different distribution of the burden among individuals and social classes, to permit repayment to certain persons who have contributed income during the war by other persons after the war. If the people can support the war at all, they can do it on a cash basis. Borrowing creates nothing. Except by borrowing abroad, which we can not do, we can get nothing which we do not ourselves produce.

It may be necessary for a month or two at the outset to issue a limited amount of bonds pending the collection of increased taxes, but beyond these, which might well be made repayable within a year, no necessity for bonds exists.

TAXATION PREVENTS PRICE INFLATION.

The taxation policy and no other will enable the country to escape the enormous evils of further inflation. The present high level of prices in Europe and America is primarily due to the war bonds and the paper money issued abroad. If the United States joins on a huge scale in this policy of borrowing, prices are bound to become far higher still.

Price inflation is harmful even in times of peace. During a war it is disastrous. It increases the cost of conducting the war. It postpones victory and thus adds to the war's toll of lives as well as to its money expenditures. By every bond issue the Government enhances the prices it must pay, and thus creates the need of more bonds. The policy works against itself.

Moreover, inflation of prices works injustice between different classes of society. The burden rests chiefly upon wage earners and salary receivers, whose pay never rises as fast as prices, and upon those who receive fixed or contractual incomes. The hardship which millions of our people are already suffering from the increased cost of living will be made many fold greater if the Government issues billions of dollars of bonds to finance the war.

The manner in which bond issues inflate prices may be briefly explained. The bond policy increases the amount of bank credit, which is equivalent in effect to an increase in the currency.

For example, if the Government takes $1,000 from a man in taxes, his credit or purchasing power is lessened to the same extent as the Government's is increased. On the other hand, if the Government borrows $1,000 from him, the quantity of purchasing power in existence is greatly increased. He now has a bond worth $1,000 on which he can and very often will borrow at the bank. Say he borrows $800; to lend him $800 the bank does not have to give up 800 actual dollars. Instead, it gives him a deposit account of $800 and, inasmuch as most of those who present checks do not ask for actual cash, but have their checks credited to their deposit accounts, the bank can keep this $800 in checks floating by setting aside, say, only $200 of actual cash. In other words, this bond issue transaction has resulted in increasing the Government's credit by $1,000, in decreasing the man's credit by only $200, and in decreasing the bank's money by only $200; that is, there has been a net increase of credit currency (checking deposit accounts) of $600, in contrast with no net increase if taxes had been adopted instead of bonds.

If the man had given up his money in taxes, he would have ceased to compete with the Government and other buyers of commodities and labor, to the extent of $1,000; but when the Government gives him a bond for his payment, he is still enabled to compete to the extent of $800. The purchasing power of society as a whole has increased by $600. This inevitably forces up prices.

The above illustrates the result of a bond issue that is taken by the public. As a matter of fact, if bonds are issued a large part of them will be taken by banks. It is likely that the Federal reserve banks will buy these bonds wholesale by giving the Government checking accounts to the extent of the bonds. This causes immediate inflation to the full amount of the checking accounts thus created; that is, inflation to 100 per cent instead of to 60 per cent of the bond issue, as outlined in the illustration above.

As the Government draws checks on these bank accounts to meet its requirements, the banks will try to recoup themselves by retailing the bonds to the public. To the extent that they succeed, the bonds get into the hands of the ultimate investor with the resulting inflation already described. In so far as the banks are unsuccessful in this distribution, they are almost certain to issue bank notes on the basis of bonds left in their hands, and these notes will cause inflation even worse than that due to the checking accounts of the public based on bond collateral.

JUSTICE DEMANDS THE TAX POLICY.

The policy of taxation for war expenditures is demanded by justice. Apart from the injustice arising from price inflation, the policy of paying for the war by bond issues gives property a preference over life; it deals unjustly as between citizen and citizen. The question of taxation versus bonds is not merely one of economics; it is one of morals, of right against wrong.

This war is a great social enterprise. The American people have undertaken it as a people. The future welfare of the country as a whole is involved; the future welfare of every citizen is involved. It is the duty therefore of every citizen to share in war's burdens to his utmost. For some the duty is to fight; for others to furnish money. For all the duty is without limit of amount. The citizen who contributes even his entire income, beyond what is necessary to subsistence itself, does less than the citizen who contributes himself to the Nation.

The man who goes to the front can not be paid back the life or the limb he may lose. The man who stays at home should contribute his just share of the money cost without expectation of repayment. That the soldier or sailor who gives himself to his country should, if he be so fortunate as to return, be taxed to pay interest and repay principal to him who has contributed the lesser thing—money—is a crying injustice. If conscription of men is just and right, conscription of income is the more so; conscription of both is just and right when the Nation's life and honor are at stake.

TAXATION WILL INCREASE WAR EFFICIENCY.

The policy of taxation for war expenditures will increase the efficiency of the Nation in the war. Its effect in keeping down the cost of the war has already been pointed out. Its effect on the spirit of the people is still more important. The general recognition of the justice of requiring every one, according to his ability, to share the burdens of war, will bind the people together; the sense of injustice in the policy of borrowing will tend to drive them apart, to array class against class. Our soldiers and sailors will fight loyally in any case, but their spirit will be the more indomitable if they feel that every man who stays at home is serving the country to the utmost with his substance. An America in which every citizen without discrimination, is called upon to do and to give all that he can, all that his powers permit, will be a united America, and a united America is bound to be victorious.

SUGGESTED FORMS OF TAXATION.

Without entering into details, concerning which opinions may differ, we recommend that, among the tax measures to be adopted for the war period, the following should be included:

(1) A tax which will take substantially all of special war profits.
(2) A material lowering of the present income-tax exemption.
(3) A drastic increase in the rates of the income tax, with a sharper progression in rates as incomes become larger.
(4) High consumption taxes on luxuries.

War With Germany.

SPEECH

OF

HON. OLLIE M. JAMES,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Wednesday, April 4, 1917.

The Senate had under consideration the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States, and making provision to prosecute the same.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, no man loves peace more than I do. I had hoped and prayed as all of our people had up to not quite three years ago that the day of war with its suffering and its death had passed. I attended a great peace conference in London about 11 years ago where more than twenty-odd nations of the world had assembled. England was there, France was there, Italy was there, Russia was there, but Germany was not there. But I had hoped that peace would become a realization and that no longer would armies have to be raised and battles have to be fought in order to determine the rights or settle the disputes of nations.

Mr. President, I read once of a maiden who was making her way down the dusty road. She held in one hand an urn of water and in the other hand a faggot of fire. The God of the universe asked her, "My dear maiden, what are you going to do with the water and the fire?" She answered, "With the fire I am going to burn up heaven, and with the water I am going to quench the flames of hell, so that mankind will do right without the hope of reward or the fear of punishment."

Mr. President, unhappily that dream that nations and men would do justice because they loved the right has not come to pass, and a tyrant threatens not only the liberty of those across the sea but the liberty of the greatest Republic in all the tide of time—our own beloved land.

There is one beautiful thing about this fight here. A gallant Confederate soldier introduced this joint resolution to declare war in the defense of American rights and the Starry Banner of this Nation. My heart leaped with joy the other night as I sat in that great and history-making assembly and heard the President of the United States deliver that matchless message, as I saw another Confederate soldier, that great judge, that matchless American, Chief Justice White, leading the applause for a common country's right and the glory of her flag.

We are a united people. I rejoice that though I am the son of a Federal soldier my mother's people fought upon the other side, and I represent old Kentucky, whose people are unexcelled in their loyalty to that flag and will furnish as brave soldiers who will sacrifice as much and dare as much as any other soldiers who ever marched under a heroic banner or fought for the liberty of mankind.

The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] read to us in tearful tones to-day a letter from a mother who was telling him of the horror that would come to her if we should undertake to defend our flag, our honor, and our country. It was a very touching letter; but has the Senator a letter from one of the mothers with her little babe clinging to her arms upon a cold night, who without warning were pitched into a surging sea by a submarine shot in violation of the law of humanity, the law of God, and the law of all the nations of the earth?

Mr. President, in my judgment men mistake the temper of the German-American citizen. I have known many of them long and well in my own State, and I am happy in the thought that no treasonable utterance or act has come from a single one of them. If anybody thinks that he courts favor by pleading the cause of Germany against America with these Americans, these men who came here and sought this as an asylum of freedom, he is mistaken. Those men have prospered here; they have enjoyed our splendid and wonderful liberty; they have many of them married here; their children were born here; their dead are buried here; and when the time comes you will find them, in my judgment, as loyally fighting for the supremacy of the American flag as any other class of our citizenship.

You cry peace. That is a beautiful word, but its awful price is slavery. Not one of you who has risen has not admitted that Germany has violated international law. What has she done? She has murdered our citizens; she has sunk our ships; she has dynamited our factories; she has spread her spies over our land; she has sent her ships within 3 miles of our shores, preying upon and harassing our commerce that had made its way from our ports. Not only that, but Zimmermann, speaking for the Kaiser and the Imperial German Government, wrote a letter seeking an alliance with Japan and Mexico to plan an alliance with a monarchy, neither responsive to nor elected by the public will, and with Mexico, which is in practical revolution and yet swarming upon the United States shores, would have come this alliance, if Germany had her way, to overthrow our liberty, destroy our country, enslave our people, give Arizona, New Mexico, and the imperial State of Texas to Mexico and give California to Japan, reserving to Germany's own brutal kultur the balance of the Union. Yet Senators tell us that we should halt; that we should hesitate; that this great democracy should sleep while the other democracies of the earth are destroyed.

Mr. President, we are not warring upon Germany. We are warring in defense of the rights of America. I remember very well when the Zimmermann letter was read here hearing some Senators flouting the very thought that it was authentic, asking the question where did it come from, why was it given out at this time, insinuating that it was done for the purpose of forcing some legislation through this Chamber. It was inconceivable to them that it was possible that Germany would seek to make a conspiracy against not only America but many thousands and millions of Americans who had come from her own shores. But when it became a sad reality, when it finally dawned upon them that it was true, they tell us that we ought to go to war with England—England that has not taken the life of a single American. Germany has made an area called the death zone of 1,500 miles long upon the sea and 1,100 miles wide, and that does not include the Mediterranean Sea, which they have included in this death zone, except a narrow strip of 20 miles of it. The open sea, the gift of God to all mankind, the common property of the world, the highway of commerce, is made a death zone by this blood-bespattered monarch of Germany. If our ships go there, or if they are coming through that zone to an American port, as some of them were with the American flag painted upon the vessel, loaded only with ballast, coming back home—without warning, without search, or seizure our ships are sunk, our citizens murdered, our flag shot to pieces. When the frailest bark that is seaworthy flies our flag, the Stars and Stripes of this Nation, is fired upon, it is not fired alone at the single ship and those on board; it is a shot fired at 100,000,000 of American freemen, a shot fired at the sovereignty of this Republic, a shot fired at the very life of this Nation. We are told that America, with her 100,000,000 people, must cowardly submit to the murdering of her citizens, the sinking of her ships, the dishonoring of her flag, when one hundred and odd years ago 4,000,000 of our people asserted the right to the free sea, and Henry Clay, whose fame rests upon his great speech in favor of the compromise that prevented war, made one utterance that, in my judgment, approaches that when he said in 1812:

> In such a cause, with the aid of Providence, we must come out crowned with success; but if we fail, let us fall like men—lash ourselves to our gallant tars, and expire together in one common struggle, fighting for "seamen's rights."

Mr. President, this is no time for talk. It is a time for action. Some want a referendum. I suppose when the ships of the enemy were destroying our cities and when the hostile foe could be heard upon our shores you would cry, "We want to vote." I say we want to fight. Yes; this is more, even, than the War of 1812 was. It is a battle between liberty and slavery. It is a battle between democracy and autocracy. As the President happily said, this is not a war upon the people of Germany; we war upon the despotic, autocratic, and brutal Government of Germany. I pray God that before this trouble ends Germany may do what Russia did—throw off the control of the Kaiser and all who constitute the military party there and become, as I know they can, a free government in the Empire of Germany. Mr. President, for myself I am willing to cast my vote to defend that flag. It is the emblem of my country. It speaks the language of hope, liberty, opportunity, and justice to our more than hundred millions of people. That flag was hung in the sky and consecrated by tears long since dried, by blood long since shed. The heroic fathers who fought and died, the dear mothers who suffered and prayed, committed this flag and the liberty for which it speaks to us. Shall we maintain it? That flag has no dollar mark upon it to my eyes. It is the flag that patriots fought for. It is the flag that Lincoln loved. It is the flag that will be borne by our heroic soldiers in this great struggle, with every star ablaze and every stripe aglow, and he who is unwilling to march under it is unworthy to breathe the free air of American liberty.

Sweet Potatoes, Etc.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FRANK PARK,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 25, 1917.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement made by the Department of Agriculture on the sweet potato, its uses, its value as a food crop, and the curing and shipping of the same. Also a letter by Mr. J. B. Wight, of Cairo, Ga., showing the practical application of the instructions regarding the growing and curing of the sweet potato as above set out.

I wish to add that the sweet potato as a food product during war times has a precedent. When the "Swamp Fox," Gen. Francis Marion, during the Revolutionary War period, was fighting the British in the swamps of South Carolina a British officer appeared under a flag of truce to discuss some measure and was invited by Gen. Marion to dine with him. When they sat down for refreshments the general had served on pieces of pine bark roasted sweet potatoes and water in gourds. The British officer inquired if that was the kind of food the army was living upon. Gen. Marion replied, "Yes; it is sufficient in starch and sugar to make a wholesome and sustaining ration. We have plenty of sweet potatoes, plenty of guns, powder, and ball, and are enlisted for the war." The British officer refused, as history states further on, "to carry on war with people who lived on roots." But these "roots" contain food properties which will alone sustain the body. In the Southern States, without fertilization, 200 bushels can be raised on an acre of land, and with fertilization 400 bushels of the finest quality of potatoes can be raised. For the provisioning of the Army nothing can be better in times of stress, and they can be shipped across the water, after being cured and packed in accordance with the methods outlined by the Department of Agriculture, at little expense for curing and packing, and I trust the people will be alive to the commercial value of this product.

I also include a letter from Mr. J. B. Wight, of Cairo, Ga., explaining the practical operation of the suggestions of the Department of Agriculture and the results obtained by him.

SWEET POTATOES.

[Statement by Department of Agriculture.]

The sweet potato ranks second in value of the truck crops grown in the United States, being preceded only by Irish potatoes. In the South the sweet potato is ahead of the Irish potato in value. In 1916 the area planted to sweet potatoes was 774,000 acres, which produced 70,955,000 bushels valued at $60,141,000. The 13 Southern States produced nearly 90 per cent of the crop (63,304,000 bushels). The value of the crop produced in the South was estimated at $48,049,000 or practically 80 per cent of the value of the total crop of the United States. If the demand for sweet potatoes justified the acreage would be enormously increased as there are millions of acres of cheap, cut-over land in the South well adapted to the production of this crop. No doubt the consumption of sweet potatoes could be greatly increased by putting on the market a better and more attractive product than is being generally sold at the present time.

The production of sweet potatoes does not present any very difficult problems, but more attention should be given to varieties. There are 35 to 40 varieties of sweet potatoes grown in this country and these are badly mixed, especially in the South. The growers are careless in handling the potatoes, storing the different varieties together and as a consequence most fields of potatoes contain several varieties. It would be very easy to separate the varieties and develop good strains of all of them.

Certain sweet potato diseases, notably black rot, scurf, and soft rot, are found wherever the crop is grown. Stem rot, foot rot, and one or two others of minor importance are severe only in isolated centers where the crop is grown intensively. Certain varieties, such as Yellow Jerseys, Big Stem Jerseys, Nancy Hall, and Early Carolina, are particularly susceptible to stem rot. Most of the other commercial varieties are more or less resistant.

All these diseases, except the foot rot, are worst in the sections of the Northern States where sweet potatoes are grown intensively and there reduce the crop annually from 10 to 40 per cent. The losses in the South from all causes, that is from field diseases and storage rot, roughly estimated amount to from 10 to 20 per cent. Black rot, both a field and storage trouble, is found everywhere and is by far the worst enemy of the crop. Soft rot, exclusively a storage trouble, occurs in the storage houses and in the banks, and exacts a toll variously estimated from 5 to 50 per cent. These storage rots, however, can largely be controlled by carefully following the directions given in Farmers' Bulletin No. 548. The different diseases of sweet potatoes and methods for their control are discussed in Farmers' Bulletin No. 714.

In growing sweet potatoes for the market the main point that should be considered is the individuality of the markets. Most southern markets prefer a moist-fleshed sweet potato, such as the Pumpkin Yam, Georgia, Nancy Hall, Dooley, and Porto Rico. The northern markets prefer a variety which is rather dry and mealy when cooked. The Yellow Jersey and Big Stem Jersey are the varieties commonly sold on these markets. The markets of the Central West and West will take such varieties as Nancy Hall and Dooley if they are properly graded and packed, and put up in neat attractive packages. It is reported that the highest price paid for sweet potatoes on the Chicago market in 1915 and 1916 was for southern-grown Nancy Hall. Some southern growers have produced the Triumph for shipping early in the season to the large cities of the East and Central West. This is a promising industry.

The main problems to be solved in connection with the sweet-potato industry are the proper methods of handling, curing, storing, grading, packing, and marketing the crop. A large part of the crop grown in the South is stored in out-of-door pits and banks. Probably 30 per cent of the potatoes so stored are lost by decay. This results in a loss of millions of dollars to the growers. In addition to this, potatoes stored in banks or pits do not undergo a curing process and consequently are not of high quality when taken out and do not keep well when put on the market.

The Department of Agriculture has been conducting experiments and demonstrations on sweet-potato handling and storage for the past five years. After studying the methods used in the few sections in the North where sweet potatoes are stored commercially, a house was designed for use in the South. During the first year of the work a few houses were built in Alabama and Mississippi for experimental purposes. The results were so satisfactory that many houses were built the following year in those States. During the last three years the work has been extended to all of the Southern States, and several hundred houses have been built, and all have been a decided success.

In all of the experimental work with sweet-potato storage accurate records were secured to show the value of the methods used. During the four years 1913 to 1916 records were secured on 228,318 bushels of sweet potatoes stored for an average of 124 days. The average decay was 2.45 per cent. In addition to reducing the amount of decay in sweet potatoes, the storage house has many other advantages over the pit or bank method of storage. Too much labor and expense are required to make the banks every year and to get the potatoes out when wanted. It is not advisable to open a pit or bank during cold or rainy weather, as these conditions injure the potatoes and induce them to decay. It often happens that when there is the greatest demand for sweet potatoes the weather is such that it is not safe to open the pits. Where the potatoes are stored in houses built for this purpose they can be taken out at any time. The details of construction and management of sweet-potato storage houses are given in Farmers' Bulletin No. 548.

By using the methods of storage that have been abundantly proven at least $10,000,000 could be added to the value of the sweet-potato crop of the South each year. In addition to this, consumption could be materially increased by putting on the market good varieties of sweet potatoes properly cured, graded, and packed.

The sweet potato is a valuable crop for feeding to live stock, but its value is not appreciated by most farmers. Three to four bushels of sweet potatoes are equal to a bushel of corn for hogs, and where fed in connection with rich concentrates, like cottonseed meal or peanut meal, they provide a good feed for cattle and hogs. On light soils that will produce 20 to 25 bushels of corn to the acre, 100 to 200 bushels of sweet potatoes can be grown with the same care and attention. All classes of live stock need succulent feed during the winter, and the sweet potato can be used to advantage for this purpose.

The sweet potato is not utilized to its full extent as food for man. In fact, in practically all sections of the United States, with the exception of the South, this product is considered a luxury rather than an important and cheap food crop. The sweet potato has about the same general chemical composition as the Irish potato, containing, on an average, about 9 per cent less water and 9 per cent more carbohydrates. Table II, in Department Bulletin No. 468, gives the composition and fuel value of the sweet potato and Irish potato.

Experiments that have been carried on by the department indicate that sweet potatoes might be artificially dried to advantage. The advantage in this drying are: First, to reduce the bulk and weight; second, to make a product that could be kept as long as desired. The dried product would be of special value for shipping long distances. However, the experimental work has not been carried far enough to show conclusively the practicability of drying on a commercial scale.

Hon. FRANK PARK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE PARK: Replying to your request for information as to my method of keeping sweet potatoes, I give you the following information:

BUILDING.

The building for storage is a two-story frame building 25 by 50 feet. The lower story is 7 feet and the upper story 11 feet. The upper story, however, is not used for potatoes, but for the storage of seeds and farm products of various kinds. The sills rest on brick pillars, and the weather boarding extends to about 6 inches of the ground on all sides of the building. The floor is of plank 1 by 4 inches, so laid as to leave a space of about one-half inch between each plank. This is for the purpose of admitting air from underneath to all parts of the building. When it is desired to make the building tight this may be done by piling dirt up to the weatherboarding.

In each end of the building there is a solid closely fitting door 4 by 4 feet. On each side of the building there are two glass windows about 3 by 4 feet, which can be lowered to secure ventilation. In the ceiling there are two closely fitting trap doors on hinges opening into the second story. I should have said above that the second floor is well supplied with glass windows in order to secure light and ventilation. The arrangements given above enable the building to be ventilated quite well from all directions or to be closed up so as to make it practically air-tight.

The whole building cost about $500, only one-half of which should be charged to the potato-storage room.

HARVESTING AND STORING.

Much of the rot, which is the bane of sweet-potato growers, is caused from bruises incident to the excessive handling of the potatoes and from the damp condition in which they are stored. To avoid the former I secured cantaloupe crates at a cost of 10 cents each. These hold a fraction more than a bushel each. These crates are taken to the field when the potatoes are dug, are carefully filled, and then carried to the storage room on wagons provided with a platform, which takes the place of the ordinary wagon body. On this platform, which can easily be made at home, from 26 to 30 crates are hauled at one time. These crates are at once placed in position in the storage room in tiers resting upon each other five crates deep. These tiers extend from the lateral walls almost to the middle of the building. Three rows of crates are placed together and then a narrow passage extending from the wall to the center aisle is left. This passage is intended for the purpose of securing more even ventilation and to provide readier access to any part of the storage room. The accompanying diagram will better explain this. (Diagram omitted.)

DRYING OUT.

As soon as potatoes are all harvested, an ordinary heater, placed in the middle of the building, is used for drying out the potatoes. The heat is kept at a temperature of approximately 80° night and day for about 10 days, or until the potatoes are sufficiently dried out. This is indicated by the eyes of the potatoes beginning to sprout. During the heating process all vents in the building are kept open, in order to allow the escape of moisture.

RESULTS.

The results were very satisfactory. Not more than 1 per cent of the potatoes were lost by rot. An accurate test showed that potatoes lost 19 per cent in weight from the time they were dug until they were shipped.

The first carload of potatoes was shipped in bulk February 20, and sold at $1 per bushel f. o. b. shipping point. The second car was shipped March 2 in the same manner, and sold for the same price. The third car was shipped March 7 in hampers, the purchaser furnishing the hampers, the price being $1.05 per bushel f. o. b. shipping point.

VARIETY.

The variety used was the Porto Rico yam, which, owing to its culinary and keeping qualities and to its prolificness, is considered by most of our farmers superior to any other variety grown in this section. During the last three or four seasons I have been improving this potato by careful selection, with a view to increasing the yield and deepening the color of the potato.

To secure the first, a beginning was made four seasons ago by selecting a hill which had 14 tubers. This hill selection has been carefully followed every season since that time, with the result that this strain shows a yield of 10 per cent to 20 per cent over ordinary strains of the same variety.

In order to deepen the color of the potato, the end opposite the stem end is broken off when the potatoes are bedded. It may not be generally known, but it can be readily ascertained by examination that the stem end of a sweet potato is of a deeper color than the opposite end. Sprouts coming from the lighter colored part of the potato produce a lighter colored product than those coming from the more highly colored part of the potato.

The last season was not especially favorable to sweet-potato production. The yield per acre from 12 acres which I planted averaged approximately 150 bushels per acre of marketable potatoes.

It is needless to say that I am well pleased with the first season's test of the above method of handling sweet potatoes. The initial cost of the building and the crates in which to store the potatoes was about 25 cents per bushel. The building, however, will be good for at least a dozen seasons, with very little, if any, repairs, while the storage crates will be usable, at least, for several seasons.

Very truly, yours, J. B. WIGHT.

Remarks By Mr. Joseph Leiter, President of the Army League, and Also Resolution By the Board of Education of Cleveland, Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, April 24, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the remarks of Mr. Joseph Leiter, president of the Army League, and also a resolution by the board of education of Cleveland, Ohio, which are as follows:

REMARKS OF MR. JOSEPH LEITER, PRESIDENT OF THE ARMY LEAGUE.

If Congress should adopt any of the proposed volunteer amendments to the administration's Army bill it will create a slacker class during the war. Every young man who is physically qualified and is of military age will be regarded as a slacker if he does not respond to the call for volunteers. As it is proposed to raise only 500,000 volunteers, the millions of young men who do not go out with this force would by the act of Congress be classified as slackers.

By the inauguration of the universal military service policy every citizen will have discharged his duty when he has registered. It would then be the function of the governmental authorities to determine whether he is qualified to serve and whether he is needed. The entire defenses of the country could then be organized upon a scientific basis and in a manner that would least disturb economic conditions.

Any experiment with the volunteer system in the present crisis, except in filling the Regular Army and National Guard, will work a great injustice in both those who volunteer and those who would eventually be called under a universal military service system. Those who volunteer would be discharging the duties of others upon whom equal obligations to serve rest, and those who were called under universal military service would be placed in the attitude of being forced to discharge their duties after they had refused.

The administration's bill is a sincere attempt to equalize the burdens of war. It places military service upon the same basis with taxes. After it has been put into effect there will be no complaint from the patriotic people of the country. Those who object to it will be slackers at heart or expect to secure commissions or some special benefit under the volunteer system.

The only objections to the administration's bill from the standpoint of the advocates of national defense is that it does not give the country a permanent policy. There are no provisions in it by which in the future young men can be trained in peace for war. It is the continuation of the policy of waiting for the declaration of war before any attempt is made to prepare the country to defend itself.

RESOLUTION BY THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT OF THE CITY OF CLEVELAND, OHIO, ADOPTED MARCH 12, 1917.

Resolution No. 6396 (Mr. Williams).—Declaration of the principles of the Cleveland Board of Education in the present national crisis—Plans for disseminating same.

Whereas we believe the following to be true:

The first duty of a people is to protect from assault of every kind, from within or without, its life as a people and the principles and ideals upon which its national existence as a people is founded.

Crime, poverty, riot, oppression of the weak by the strong, disease, shirking of duty, and ignorance are some of the things from within from the results of which society must protect itself.

Unjustified attack by another nation, open or insidious, by armed force or otherwise, denial of our rights, ruthless and willful disregard by one nation of those common rights of humanity which one nation enjoys with its fellows and which it has a common obligation to defend are some of the assaults from without, against which a people must as a nation take action if that people cares to exist as a nation.

By means of its courts, police and fire departments, health boards, quarantine, and many other agencies we protect ourselves from the dangers from within. To secure this protection we limit, and rightly so, the liberty of the individual in so far as it is necessary to insure the welfare of us all.

As to dangers from without we must be prepared to combat not the average but the lowest standard of international morality existing in nations strong enough to cause us trouble.

Until, then, the spirit of aggression is definitely removed from the last strong nation, it is necessary for us to be able to resist any possible aggression on its part. The greater we become in our prosperity under high and noble principles and ideals, the greater will be the necessity of our being prepared to defend them.

A citizenry trained to arms and adequately equipped is the essential of the safe protection of national life from assaults from without. Here, as in the other case, the liberty of the individual must be circumscribed so far as is necessary for the common good.

In a Nation whose Government is "of the people, by the people, and for the people," the prerequisite for both kinds of defense is education.

There must be a mental and moral equipment in each individual that will enable him on the one hand to care for himself to his best advantage, and on the other hand will cause him, even to the ultimate degree of sacrifice, to assume his share in the common defense, whether the assaults are from within or without.

Our State has established free education in order that every child might have the opportunity of growing into a useful man or woman. It has made this education compulsory as the most potent means of causing every child to grow into a useful citizen.

We are now in the United States facing a situation that compels us to a decision that those intrusted with the direction of education must, if true to the obligations of their office, see to it that this now all-important side of education be attended to; that the duty of our country in this hour be made plain, not alone to the child but wherever necessary to the parent who conjointly with the teacher is influencing the child's educational progress.

Voices and influences making for cowardice and national immorality and consequent destruction are abroad in the land which must be combated and killed at whatever cost, if this generation is to hand on to the next the priceless heritage we are all too prone to forget came to us by virtue of the sacrifice and blood of our fathers.

We, ourselves and our children, must be taught and again taught and yet again taught that wrong, injustice, oppression, unjust assault must be fought and must come to know the utter silliness of declining war if war be necessary to overcome evil and hold up high principles and ideals.

No nation can rightfully omit to use its schools for this purpose; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the board of education of the city school district of Cleveland—

That, in view of the existing conditions in our country, there can be no loyalty in silence, and that this board can be no longer silent or neutral.

That we express our faith in the essential loyalty and unity of our citizens in this city of over 700,000, of whom more than 75 per cent are said to be of foreign birth or parentage.

That the president, the superintendent, and one member of the board, to be appointed by the president, are hereby authorized to arrange for a series of meetings in the schools on the general subject of duties of citizenship, considered especially from the national standpoint.

That this board recognize that the country is now in a situation of assault from without.

That in the present war the questions that have arisen between the United States and the allies are questions of property and convenience only, questions that can be settled judicially after the war.

That Germany has wantonly attacked the lives of our citizens; that the lives of many more are endangered unless Germany can be induced or compelled to cease the interference with their lawful rights.

That we must safeguard against or redress the worst wrongs first, and therefore could not take sides against both groups of combatants any more than we could side with both.

That, aside from ourselves, we must stand for the rights of humanity against the lawless and ruthless assaults of a power that seeks no justification other than its own will.

That propaganda of many peace societies and others is undermining national morality and national security and must be combated.

That clear thinking leading to courageous performance of duty individually and as a people is the need of the hour.

That lessons to this end by lectures, talks, or other available means is not only a permissory activity but an imperative duty on those intrusted with our educational affairs.

That accordingly the meetings hereinbefore provided for shall avowedly admit these principles and facts as their motive.

That the selection of speakers be left to the committee named in these resolutions, with instructions that they be chosen with knowledge that their views coincide with the spirit of these resolutions.

That these meetings be arranged at schoolhouses either for the scholars or for their parents or as neighborhood meetings, and either during or after school hours, as the committee may decide best in each case. At such meetings there shall be no debate. And be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions, with the preamble, be forwarded to the board of education of the largest city in each county of the State of Ohio and to the board of education of the largest city of each State in the United States, with a request that they take similar action and invite it from other cities in their State.

Resolutions Adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Massachusetts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include resolutions adopted at the present session by the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts, in general court assembled, requesting Congress to take measures regulating the price of anthracite coal and other commodities.

The resolutions are as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1917.

Resolutions requesting Congress to take measures regulating the price of anthracite coal and other commodities.

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in General Court assembled hereby request the Congress of the United States to take such measures as may be necessary, under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, to regulate the price at which anthracite coal may be sold by mining companies and their agents, in order to prevent the extortion which has been practiced upon the public, and especially upon the retail purchasers of coal, and that a maximum price be established for wheat, corn, oats, and other cereal products which so largely enter into the high cost of living in our Commonwealth and Nation; and

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth be directed to send copies of these resolutions to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Boston, April 11, 1917.

A true copy of resolutions adopted at the present session by the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in General Court assembled.

Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, April 18, 1917.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, on April 18, when the Webb bill permitting recruiting by our allies was under debate in the House, there was considerable discussion as to whether foreign born who are here would be loyal to us at the present time. Much was said in reference to their patriotism and many an expression carried with it the insinuation that they would be found wanting at this critical hour. Not a single gentleman furnished any proof substantiating his statement, and, what is more, the recruiting records since the war was declared show that there are more enlistments in those States where the foreign born are greater in numbers than in those States where the native born predominate. I could point out several States which might be taken as proof of such fact, but I am opposed, Mr. Speaker, to this constant vituperation of the foreign born or their descendants here. We are all part of this great Republic, regardless of where we first saw the light of day. We must all do our duty to it, according to the best of our ability. When doing it, let us have the satisfaction of knowing that we are serving our country in the most efficient manner that brain and muscle will give us the strength to perform. No matter what our station in life, let us think and speak of loyalty, patriotism, love of country, devotion to America and its institutions, urging all men and women to do likewise. Let us prepare ourselves for the greatest task that has ever faced us, and let us all exert ourselves to see that the flag which has never met defeat is once more the symbol of victory and justice.

Mr. Speaker, about 30 years ago there came to the United States an immigrant whose name is Morris Rosenfeld. He found employment as a sewing-machine operator in the clothing trade, but when the long hours were over he took to writing prose and poetry depicting the life of the worker in the clothing industry in the big cities of the East. Men who had risen high in public life gradually learned of his work, and amongst those who encouraged him were Col. Theodore Roosevelt and the late Gen. Frederick Dent Grant.

That he would rise to the occasion when America needed him was demonstrated a few days ago when he wrote a hymn that has met the approval of President Wilson.

It was published in the Jewish Morning Journal, of New York City, and is entitled

"MY AMERICA."

[Our new hymn, by Morris Rosenfeld.]

I.

Be thou, New World, by heaven blest!
Thy threshold doth on freedom rest.
America! thou hast my love;
And if my valor thou wouldst prove,
And ask my life as sacrifice,
It shall be yielded in a trice.
No wherefore and no why I ask;
I shall obey, whate'er the task.

REFRAIN.

Thy wish is holy, thy command
I deem as writ by God's own hand.
With thee in peace, with thee in strife,
Blest nourisher of freedom's life!
I am with thee, with thee, with thee;
Yea, thou art precious unto me.

II.

Thou sanctuary of the earth!
Thy voice to men has sacred worth,
Like that which did from Sinai sound.
Thy every span is sacred ground.
What scepter and what throne shall dare
With thy bright banner to compare?
No other friend but thine I know;
Thy foe—I hate him—is my foe!

REFRAIN.

Thy wish is holy, thy command
I deem as writ by God's own hand.
With thee in peace, with thee in strife,
Blest nourisher of freedom's life!
I am with thee, with thee, with thee;
Yea, thou art precious unto me.

III.

Amidst thy cannon's crash I hear
The voice of freedom calling clear.
I bless thy hosts on land and sea,
God's chosen home of liberty!
The waves roar hymns to thee, my land,
Thou'rt led by the Creator's hand.
Glad echoes from thy every hill
With praise of thee set worlds athrill.

REFRAIN.

Thy wish is holy, thy command
I deem as writ by God's own hand.
With thee in peace, with thee in strife,
Blest nourisher of freedom's life!
I am with thee, with thee, with thee;
Yea, thou art precious unto me.

That all over the country our poets and music writers are awakening is seen in a large number of songs, poems, and hymns that are being written, breathing the spirit of real American and live patriotism. One of them is entitled "The Call to Arms" and was published by the Washington Star a few days ago. It is as follows:

THE CALL TO ARMS.

[Written by Miss Emma Hamilton Bulloch, a direct descendant of Archibald Bulloch, the president and commander in chief of the colony of Georgia in 1776, and dedicated to President Wilson. It is intended to be sung in various schools of the city as a national patriotic hymn.]

To arms, to arms, beloved country,
With thy starry flag unfurled
And thy shield of honor stainless,
Give this message to the world:
Lofty principles of justice,
Peace, and freedom for mankind
Do not mean a craven spirit,
As conspirators will find.

CHORUS.

Here we pledge to thee, our President,
Our unswerving loyalty;
We will give allegiance only
To our God, our flag, and thee.

To arms, to arms, beloved country,
For the cause of liberty
Hold the torch of justice heavenward
Till it flashes o'er the sea
And proclaims to all the nations
That on this they can depend:
We love peace but not dishonor,
And the right we will defend.

CHORUS.

Here we pledge to thee, our President, etc.

To arms, to arms, beloved country,
With thy armor shining bright
And thy sword unsheathed and ready
To strike boldly for the right.
We love all mankind as brother,
But 'tis best they understand
On the shores of this fair country
Hostile feet must never land.

CHORUS.

Here we pledge to thee, our President, etc.

To arms, to arms, beloved country,
Duty calls, we must obey;
Freedom of the world imperiled
By a despot's iron sway.
We must help to crush forever
Greed and tyranny and hate.
Love and liberty must triumph—
Strike at once before too late.

Another one, Mr. Speaker, and expressing the feeling of all citizens, regardless of political faith, but all standing shoulder to shoulder in the present conflict, is entitled—

TO THE PRESIDENT.

[John Kendrick Bangs, '83, in Columbia Rambler.]

We have fought you, Mr. Wilson, just as hard as e'er we could;
We have lined our pens against you, and we've told you where we stood;
We have criticized your actions, and we've tied a lot of hay
For to trip you and to grip you as you've run along your way;
We've opposed your reelection, and we've jested now and then
On the subject of your doings and the products of your pen;
But we want to tell you now, sir, in this moment full of dole,
We are with you—yes, we're with you—we are with you heart and soul!

And the past, sir, is forgotten, just as though it hadn't been—
Just as 'twere a bit of writing on a slate washed wholly clean.
All the things we deprecated, all the things we didn't like,
They have vanished from our vision like a pacifist on strike;
All remembrance of your "waiting" and its brother "watchfulness"
Has gone tumbling to the discard in this moment of your stress;
And we want to tell you now, sir, when you come to call the roll,
You will find that we are with you—yes, we're with you heart and soul!

There's no Elephant or Donkey on the Yankee pike to-day,
And the Bull Moose stops his bulling on the broad and starry way;
All the animals of party in our overvaried zoo
Are united, Mr. Wilson, and are standing back of you;
From the sands of San Diego to the rocky cliffs of Maine,
From Atlantic to Pacific, out and back and back again.
So here's to you, Prexy Wilson; may God speed you to the goal!
We are with you—yes, we're with you—we are with you heart and soul!

Mr. Speaker, I most sincerely hope that from every part of this great land of ours will come the heartiest response to the Nation's call, but I am quite confident that when the record is written of heroic deeds performed in defense of our country, whether it be on land or sea, that there will be found written thereon the names of numerous men who came here from abroad, but who have learned to cherish and admire our institutions, insatiated with the true spirit of real patriotism, ever ready and willing to sacrifice both life and treasure for their adopted country, and vieing in every manner to emulate the noble and gallant acts of such men as Nathan Hale, James Lawrence, and Admiral Farragut.

May this war be the means of cementing the ties of citizenship of all men, both from the North and from the South, and may it be the means of having our people, regardless of their place of birth or place of residence, commence to realize that the worth of the individual to the Republic is the kind of service that he renders to it in its hour of peril.

Mr. Speaker, we owe it to ourselves and to our posterity to do all in our power to encourage in every manner real love for our flag and institutions, and we can serve our country best by constantly bearing in mind that the way the young acorns grow up so will the oaks in future years be. In other words, unless we exert ourselves to teach the present generation that flag and country come first, before materialism and commercialism, that we may rue the day when the Nation may require the services of its citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believes that the future of the Republic is safe in the hands of those who are now growing up, and that this land of ours will grow greater and grander as the years go by, ever remaining a beacon light, encouraging all suffering people all over the world to know that their day of religious liberty and freedom is bound to come, and that these United States are prepared to help them achieve those inalienable rights which are theirs by birthright.

A Tribute to the Memory of John E. Epolucci, First to Give His Life for His Country in the Present War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. F. H. LaGUARDIA,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the memory of John E. Epolucci, a sailor of the United States Navy, who lost his life April 2, 1917, while on the steamer Aztec. He was one of the armed guard detailed by the Navy Department on board this American steamer. Epolucci is the first man in the service of this Government whose life was sacrificed for his country in the present conflict. I learned at the Navy Department this morning that the death of this man had just been officially confirmed. Epolucci was a boatswain's mate, first class, and in the service since June, 1907. His first enlistment expired January, 1914, and he reenlisted for another term. He was born on May 30, 1888, at Terra Haute, Ind. He had an excellent record in the Navy and gained promotion through his efficiency and faithful service.

Epolucci lost his life in the faithful performance of duty. He was not going abroad for sordid curiosity or in the search of capricious adventure, or even for commercial gain. He went in obedience to orders as a sailor of the United States Navy, ready to go anywhere in the world for the protection of American lives.

The steamer Aztec left an American port bound for France. She was torpedoed in the night of April 1, 1917, 9 miles off the coast of France. Epolucci was in command of one of the lifeboats. This boat was not seen after its launching, and he perished with several of the ship's regular crew in that boat.

This young man was a true, loyal, and brave young American, but, gentlemen, his parents, like my own, like some of yours, were born on the other side of the water. His parents, like mine, were Italian immigrants. He came from that brave race of people who know no fear, who have been always ready to battle and fight for ideals, for principles, and for liberty. That same race, Mr. Speaker, I regret to say, which but a short time ago, during the last session of Congress, on this very floor, was so unjustly slandered, abused, and maligned. I am glad to be able to say that on the roster of the United States Army and Navy there are hundreds of Epoluccis ready to sacrifice their lives for the safety and happiness of this country, and Epolucci will be an inspiration to thousands of American boys with Latin blood in their veins about to rally around the flag and do their share for the continuance of its glory.

Epolucci leaves surviving him his mother, Anna Mariah, a widow, and resident of the city of Washington. She has been waiting for three weeks in the hope of receiving word from abroad that her boy was rescued and still lives, but now that the official sad message has arrived she takes her loss with resignation and fortitude and in a manner worthy of a true descendant of Rome, proud of the noble sacrifice of her boy.

It is my privilege to say that in this crisis and in these hours of danger the citizens of the United States descendants of Italian immigrants and Italians who have acquired citizenship through naturalization will stand loyal to a man for the protection, safety, and honor of our country. They all stand ready to take their part and render useful, necessary, and patriotic duty.

Why I Favor Universal Service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN J. ROGERS,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, in the President's "war message," delivered at the joint session of the two Houses of Congress on April 2 last, he recommended "the immediate addition to the armed forces of the United States already provided for by law in case of war at least 500,000 men, who should be chosen upon the principle of universal liability to service." I heartily favor the President's program and shall attempt to set down very briefly some of the reasons which, it seems to me, make it essential that Congress should immediately put into legislation the principle of universal service.

1. Governments do not request; they require. They require their citizens to pay taxes for their support. They require their citizens to send their children to school. They tell them what they may lawfully do, what they must do, and what they must not do. The principle of compulsion is as old as civilized government. No nation could exist without it. The general welfare demands it in the apparently little as well as in the great things. But universal service may be necessary to save our Nation not merely from inconvenience but from annihilation. If we compel our citizens to do as the Government requires in the lesser things, how can we hesitate to require of our citizens that which may be necessary for the very existence of our Nation?

2. Universal service is democratic. It puts the son of a millionaire and the son of a pauper upon precisely the same footing. It makes no distinction of class. We hear much in these days of "special privileges." Universal service abolishes special privilege. It imposes upon the rich and the poor alike precisely the same burden and precisely the same privilege. The young man whose family came to this country 300 years ago will march in the ranks next to the young man whose father came from southeastern Europe five years ago; the man with 10 talents will have as a tent mate him who has not apparently been given even the 1 talent; the man who has driven the racing automobile will find himself next in line to the chauffeur of a wheelbarrow. Each will learn that the other is after all a good sort of a chap. Class distinctions will be leveled, true democracy will succeed.

3. An army raised on the principle of universal service proceeds upon a principle economically sound. It will in general exempt the married men, the older men, and the men who have already taken their productive place in the work of the world. It will take the young and unmarried man whose age precludes the likelihood that he is as economically important to the country as is his older brother. A man who is married and who goes to the front must necessarily expect the State to keep his wife and children from starvation. The State will unhesitatingly assume this burden when necessary. But the unmarried man entails no such obligation. From the standpoint of war finances, as well as from the point of view of logic and humanity, the unmarried soldier is more of an asset to the Government. From another economic aspect universal service is preferable. Under a volunteer system the Government is obliged to compete in wages with the wages paid by private employers. Many men want to be patriotic, but do not feel that they can afford to give up a $5 a day position to take a 50 cents a day position. A large volunteer army can not be enrolled without large bounties or be maintained without high wages. An army based on universal service will succeed without bounties and whatever the wages. In the Civil War the Nation alone—leaving out of account State and local contribution—paid to the soldiers entering the northern army over $300,000,000 in bounties. Universal service would have saved this sum and made it available for strictly war purposes.

4. A volunteer army would be recruited from the men who possess the highest sense of duty in the community; it would be made up of the flower of our Nation. But it would include very many men who should not go—should not go from either their individual standpoint or from the standpoint of the Nation. It would include many married men whose place is clearly, at the present stage of the war at least, at home; it would include the munition maker, the farmer, the chemist, and the inventor, all of whom could serve the Nation better than by enlisting, but whose sense of duty would require them to enlist. Selective universal service will exempt the men who for any reason should not do the actual fighting. As I have said, a volunteer force is made up of the flower of the Nation, but that very fact makes it too costly. We do not want the flower of our Nation to sacrifice itself and leave the rest behind. We want a fair representation in our Army of all degrees of our citizenship.

5. Universal service eliminates unrest. A man is told exactly what his "bit" is. If he is not called upon for service, he can continue his vocation with the assurance that no stigma or odium attaches to him—that if the Government wants him it will call him, and that so long as it does not call him he is doing the proper thing to stay where he is. The life of the whole community, so far as humanly possible, continues without the upset and the fever which attend a community where each man is wondering exactly what his duty is.

6. The only argument one hears advanced against universal service is that the spirit of a volunteer force is better and that a man ought not to be subjected to the obligation to serve. As I have previously said, it is hardly a valid objection to a system that it recognizes that as between a citizen and his country, as between individuals, it is more blessed to give than to receive, and that there is an obligation upon every patriotic man to serve at the call of his country. But aside from this, no stigma can possibly attach to the idea of universal service when it is the common lot of all. It is only when in past wars universal service has become necessary when volunteering ceased that odium attached to the men compelled to serve. If the obligation rests upon all, or upon all within the stipulated age limits, there is no suggestion or possibility of dishonor involved in the service. Nor will the esprit de corps be impaired by universal service. I need only to cite the example of France in the present war as proof of this. Frankly, I should like to have our entire Army raised on the universal service principle, eliminating even the volunteering fraction for which the President's program provides. I think a mixed force is unfortunate; that the half million volunteer army is illogical and hampers the raising of a universal service force.

7. The volunteer system as applied in England the second year of the war is a misnomer. It amounts to compulsion of the most extreme kind. The slacker is ostracized, shunned by his former friends, deprived of work, and frequently subjected to physical attack. If he enlisted under these circumstances, he can scarcely be called a volunteer in spirit. He is just as truly forced into the army as if a constable took him by the arm. And the worst of this situation is that the fear of these indignities forces men to go who for many reasons should not go—men whose duty lies at home.

8. The example of England has shown that it is vastly more difficult to change from the volunteer system to the universal-service principle after the war is well under way. England has done it because she had to do it, but it was a tremendous fight to bring it about. The United States will accept the principle to-day without very much cavil. Let us not make the mistake of postponing wise decision until a time when difficulties in our path will be much increased.

9. Universal service is the inevitable corollary to universal military training. It is scarcely worth while to train a force of young men in time of peace and then let them go their way in time of war. When the war burst upon Europe the Swiss system of universal training enabled the little Republic to send within 24 hours to their several posts the 200,000 men who were trained to bear arms. If we train and do not require service, we can not stipulate in advance where Private A or Captain B shall go in time of emergency. We can not say that such and such a unit will be called upon to defend such and such a post. When the emergency comes we shall have to start in all over again, forming units of men who have been trained and who volunteer for service. As a matter of advance planning and administration to meet an emergency the universal-service principle is vastly more efficient than the volunteer. Furthermore, a volunteer system in time of war is uncertain. External events will vitally affect its progress. No one can foresee a month or six months ahead what the rate of volunteering will be. Many men may present themselves, or only a few. Those in charge of our military policy can not lay their plans with precision. On the other hand, universal service enables the authorities to forecast with absolute accuracy just what forces they will have at their disposal upon a certain date. Uncertainty is removed and efficiency promoted.

10. Universal service operates equally throughout the sections of the United States. It bears proportionately on Massachusetts and Nevada alike. The volunteer system may lead to much injustice and inequality.

11. The universal service principle will mean no delay. The registration census can be taken and the men selected under the census quite as quickly as our Quartermaster and Ordnance Departments will be ready to clothe and arm them. And when the registration census is once taken it is available for future enrollments. In other words, the universal service plan will furnish the first levy of men as quickly as we can care for them, and, after the first, will be incomparably more speedy and certain than the volunteer plan, as to which no one can ever predict with confidence in advance.

12. Patriotic mothers will welcome universal service. They will want their boy to do his part, but they will be glad to have his duty—whether to go or stay—pointed out to him in unmistakable terms. They will know that the son of their neighbor owes exactly the same duty and is under exactly the same liability to perform that duty. The spirit of fair play is the foundation principle of universal service.

13. I believe that in a country like the United States, made up of men of many races, many creeds, and many countries, universal service is socially more important than in any other country of the earth. The exchange of view will broaden and solidify our population. Universal service will help to make us truly a melting pot.

14. Every great modern war which really tested the resources of a nation has necessitated the recognition of the universal obligation to serve. The Confederate States of America adopted the plan before the Civil War had run a year; the Federal Government shortly after. The volunteer system has failed whenever really tested, both in the great war of to-day and in the wars of the last century.

15. The Commander in Chief of the Army and his adviser, the Secretary of War, the Army War College, and every officer now holding high position in our Army recommend the adoption of universal service. It is the business of these men to know whereof they speak. While their opinion should not be conclusive upon Congress, I think it is fair to say that it should be given very great weight, and in the absence of cogent reasons to the contrary should control.

I confess that there is one reservation which persistently crops up in my mind as to the application of the universal-service principle. I should prefer not to have the force thus raised transformed into an expeditionary force and sent to France without any volition of its own. I should like the overseas force to be a volunteer force. It may be that this feeling is illogical and indefensible. I am inclined to think it is, for oftentimes the best defensive method of warfare is an offensive, and in this case the offensive would probably be the expedition to France. And yet the feeling persistently recurs. Would a program like this be practicable? Let us train our forces, raised on the universal-service principle, for the six months' period or the year period necessary to make them efficient soldiers; then call upon that universal-service army for volunteers to join the expeditionary force to France. I believe that 90 per cent—perhaps 95 per cent—of those who had been trained would eagerly volunteer for the foreign service. We should then have every advantage of the universal-service plan and have the satisfaction of feeling that the men engaged in the hazardous fighting across the Atlantic went there gladly, resolutely, and of their own free will. The analogy of calling for individual volunteers in time of war for extra-hazardous service is interesting. Every soldier may lawfully be ordered and compelled to perform that service. But a wise officer will call for the requisite number of volunteers. If the call is not answered, compulsion may follow. So for extra-hazardous service in France let us call upon the army, when raised and fully trained, for volunteers. If the call is answered—and I have no doubt of its overwhelming success—our purpose will be fully achieved. If the call is not answered, we can then do what is necessary to make available the number of men needed. All this, however, is a matter of administration and not of legislation. It is simply, to my mind, but one more reason why we should adopt universal service.

Mr. Speaker, under the general leave to extend remarks in the RECORD, I append a statement entitled "Objections to the voluntary system," by a Canadian, Mr. Lorne Mulloy, and stated by Commodore Jarvis, who is in charge of the recruiting of the Canadian contingent for the British naval service, to be the best article ever written upon the subject:

OBJECTIONS TO THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM.

The following conclusions have been arrived at after careful study of the experience gained by more than a year's work in recruiting men:

1. THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM IS NEITHER BRITISH NOR FRENCH.

(a) The French method, commonly known as conscription, is better described as democratic compulsion or the subordination of each to the expressed will of all. In other words, it is the same form of compulsion as that which compels us here in Canada to pay our self-imposed taxes and to obey our self-made laws.

(b) The British method of raising men has always been by the employment of the compulsory militia levy, including the militia ballot. Under this system each parish, town, and county was required to furnish its just quota. From the eligibles of a certain class, aggregating many times the number of the quota, exemptions were made in the cases of those men considered to be indispensable to the carrying on of business at home, while from the names of the remainder the necessary number was balloted.

(c) With the exception of two or three companies of royal garrison artillery, volunteer units were unknown in the British Army until the middle of the eighteenth century. Upon the outbreak of the Seven Years' War national unpreparedness was so marked and popular fear of invasion so great that the Government in 1757 was compelled by act of Parliament to recognize and regularize volunteer units and to include volunteer units in the armed forces of the Crown. The volunteer movement, however, by no means displaced the compulsory militia levy, which was used freely throughout the Napoleonic struggle, but took its place alongside as an adjunct.

As it was in the army, so it was in the manning of the British fleet, and the great majority of the men who built up the splendid traditions of the British Navy were men who were sent to sea under compulsion. In fact, excluding punitive expeditions and the South African War, which was in the main guerilla warfare, the only war in British history in which the compulsory levy was not used to raise the required number of men was the Crimean War, in which, though the militia act was suspended, it remained a convincing instrument; ready to be put into effect at an hour's notice.

2. THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM IS NOT RELIABLE.

History, ancient or modern, of all nations and all peoples does not record a single instance in which the voluntary system stood the test of a real war. Whenever the struggle was of such proportions as to require approximately the whole effort of a nation, some form of compulsion was found necessary. This is so because the volunteer system is haphazard in its methods, uncertain in its results, and incapable of supplying the steady, uniform stream of recruits necessary to create and fight an army.

3. THE VOLUNTEER SYSTEM IS A CONTRADICTION OF THE NECESSARILY FUNDAMENTAL RELATIONSHIP EXISTING BETWEEN THE CITIZEN AND THE STATE.

(a) The State is an organized society of human beings, associated presumably for their own welfare, the members of which possess a community of race, language, or ideals. Whether in its inception—the family, in the family enlarged, the tribe, or in the tribe expanded into the nation—its citizens possess rights paralleled by responsibilities, and in the constitution of all States which have existed from the twilight of ancient civilization until to-day the primary responsibility upon which all citizens' rights are in common founded is the obligation to defend the State when at war. When the constitution is written this obligation is incorporated; when the constitution is unwritten, it is basic, underlying and understood—in time of war the eligible male citizen must fight.

(b) Since the basis of voluntary offering is the right to refuse, it follows that when the government of a country at war calls for volunteers to fight it is tantamount to stating openly that each eligible male citizen is at liberty to adopt whatever attitude he pleases toward the struggle, and no moral obloquy can be attached to the man who decides that the adventure is no concern of his. In other words, a call for volunteers not only gives a legal justification to the man who will not go, but it is a confession to the world that the nation is not wholeheartedly committed to the struggle, for the world knows that this method can not call forth one-half of the nation's whole effort.

4. THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM IS A VIOLATION OF THE PRINCIPLES OF DEMOCRACY.

The fundamental principle of democracy is the equality of all citizens before the law or from the standpoint of the State, and any burden imposed by the State must be evenly and equitably distributed over the whole citizen body. A tax of 25 mills is not laid upon one man and 10 mills upon his neighbor, and the customs duty is strictly impartial, affecting rich and poor alike.

The voluntary system, however, discriminates drastically and flagrantly against the unselfish and patriotic citizen and in favor of the selfish man, the unpatriotic, the lover of his own ease, and of him who desires to remain at home and get gain. If it is a true democratic principle that in the raising of taxes—a mere matter of dollars and cents—the burden should be evenly and equitably distributed upon the whole body of citizens, is it not truer democracy to observe the same equity and equality when the toll to be exacted is hardship, suffering, and death?

5. THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM CREATES THE MAXIMUM OF INDUSTRIAL DERANGEMENT.

It is axiomatic that in war the maintenance by a State of an effective army in the field depends upon the husbanding of the economic resources at home and the conservation of the Nation's industrial or wealth-producing power. In other words, only a small percentage—say 10 per cent—of the people can actually go to war. The ultimate base of the National Army, whether it fights on the frontier or 10,000 miles distant, must be the economic resources of the homeland and the wealth-producing power of the 90 per cent who can not go.

This power of wealth production, therefore, must be as jealously guarded as the strength and composition of the combatant force, and on no account should we take from the former men who are indispensable from the industrial standpoint.

The captain of industry, the skilled mechanic, and the rising artisan are men of trained and disciplined minds. They know the meaning of self-discipline, regularity of habits, long hours, night study, and concentration of purpose. While these are precisely the benefits which military training holds out to the undisciplined mind, it is beyond controversy that a nation's appeal for men to fight goes straight home to the mind of the disciplined man, while it slips lightly off the man to whom military training would be a boon. This explains the universal complaint of manufacturers that the appeals of recruiting officers constantly and invariably take from them the men who are indispensable to the proper conduct of their business, while for each one taken there are five unskilled men left whose places, were they to go, could be easily filled.

The voluntary system, while discriminating between men by drawing largely from the more efficient and those the country can least afford to spare, is nondiscriminating as between industries, drawing alike from the munition plant and from the distillery, and frequently hitting more heavily those industries most indispensable to the Nation's economic welfare.

6. THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM IS PRODIGALLY WASTEFUL AND RIOTOUSLY EXTRAVAGANT.

(a) Throughout central Canada the time taken to raise local battalions has been found to be between four and seven months, and this is probably true of the whole of Canada. As against a compulsory system, which would raise a regiment in two weeks, there is, therefore, loss in time of at least five months in bringing each battalion up to the stage of mobilization at which point the real training only begins. Moreover, since the authorized full complement of officers and noncommissioned officers is on pay practically from the beginning, and since the heaviest enlistment occurs in the first two months, it is a conservative estimate that the loss in money—that is, the avoidable expenditure incurred—can not be less than the pay and upkeep of the full battalion for a period of from three to four months. As this equals $75,000 per month, it is evident that with the exception of the first 100,000, men who came forward eagerly, every thousand men raised by the voluntary method has cost the Canadian taxpayer $250,000 of unnecessary expense. In other words, the 260,000 men thus raised have—as contrasted with any sane system of levying troops—cost the Canadian taxpayer $65,000,000, for which his only return has been the privilege of being five months late in turning out each battalion as a full unit ready to commence its training.

(b) Another cause of unnecessary expense is the large number of married men enlisting, 90 per cent of whom would be refused by any system of selection which calls the unmarried man first to the colors. The reason for the large proportion of married men enlisting lies in the fact that the married man is older, more thoughtful, by reason of his greater responsibilities, and has undoubtedly a greater stake in the war. The proportion in some battalions is as low as 30 per cent and in many others reaches 50 and even 75 per cent. Taking the low average of 425 married men per 1,000 enlisted, we are paying in separation allowances alone $3,000,000 per month, or $36,000,000 per annum, as long as the men remain under arms.

(c) In connection with the enlistment of married men there are also to be considered patriotic funds, pensions to the widows, and the financial obligation of the State in reference to the children of such men who may be killed in action or totally disabled. These children must be reared to the age of 18, and we are therefore obligating ourselves for the future expenditure of many millions, reaching forward over a period of from 1 to 18 years.

(d) In addition to this there is the not inconsiderable expense of so-called whirlwind recruiting campaigns being conducted spasmodically in every part of the Dominion of Canada. Speakers, bands, and escorts must be transported; press, bills, and bunting must be used in abundance; clerical work, halls, motor cars, liveries, speakers' hotel expenses—returned soldiers are frequently on salary—must all be provided for; and the people pay. In fact, it is a safe estimate that the man power and the money now used in the undignified attempt to raise men would, if properly controlled, raise, equip, and maintain another division on the firing line.

7. THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM PRODUCES THE MAXIMUM OF INEFFECTIVES.

Since youth is an idealist and maturity is thoughtful, appeals from the platform and the press are being daily responded to by boys of 16 and 17 and men between 50 and 60 years of age, both classes, in their desire to serve, adjusting their ages to meet the requirements of enlistment.

Commanding officers of many local battalions inform me that these classes aggregate as high as 10 per cent of the total enlistment, and by some they are placed at 20 per cent. The inevitable result of this will be the weeding out later of thousands of men and boys who will prove physically incapable of standing the strain of thorough camp training, but who, nevertheless, have been in the pay of the country for from 5 to 10 months.

RECAPITULATING.

The so-called volunteer system—it is the precise antithesis of system—is neither British nor French; it is not reliable; it is a denial of the basic responsibilities of citizenship; it is undemocratic; it creates the maximum of industrial derangement; it is wasteful and extravagant; it results in the minimum of effectives and the maximum waste of valuable time. These things being so—and these things ought not so to be—it seems to me that to continue on these lines is an evidence of moral weakness and insincerity on our part, and it is little short of sheer hypocrisy on the part of our press and our public men to proclaim to the world that we are in this struggle to the last man and the last dollar when the world knows, and we ourselves know, that the first step in a sincere attempt to put even half our strength into the struggle would be a classification of our industries and registration of our man power. Some form of authoritative selection is necessary not for the purpose of dragnetting the country for men to fight, but for the purpose of conserving our wealth-producing powers and putting into the field in the most expeditious manner the most effective force compatible with this main object.

Petition of the Senior Class of the Case School of Applied Sciences.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD under the general consent given by inserting a petition sent me by the senior class of the Case School of Applied Sciences of Cleveland, Ohio, urging conscription. All of the signers would be subject to conscription. The petition is as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 23, 1917.

Hon. HENRY EMERSON,
House Post Office, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As citizens liable to conscription, we, the undersigned, heartily indorse the bill providing for universal military service throughout the United States. We are not in favor of a volunteer system which allows men to shirk their duty.

Signed by the following seniors of Case School of Applied Science: G. W. Norrick, K. A. Barren, E. H Lindeman, B. E. Skeel, J. A. Graves, W. T. Van Onnon, G. E. Hart, D. H. Dozer, O. T. Park, J. E. Memorial of the Presbytery at Philadelphia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. J. HAMPTON MOORE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under the general leave granted to extend remarks on the Military Establishment bill, I submit the following memorial from the Presbytery of Philadelphia expressive of its views on the war situation:

THE PRESBYTERY OF PHILADELPHIA.

To our churches and people.

GREETINGS: This is a solemn time in our Nation's history. For more than two years our Government was able to keep us as a people out of the great world war, but the time came when war was forced upon us, and it became evident that we, too, must needs take our part in bringing to an end the terrible conflict. Therefore when our President, in the noblest public national utterance since Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, challenged us to our task, we as a people, through our Congress, accepted our burdens.

And now that our Government has formally and officially acted and we are confronted not with an academic question but with a fact, not with a theory but a state of war, it behooves us as a united people and as individuals to do all within our power to bring to a successful termination this war, which for two and a half years has shaken the world to its very foundations.

Our Presbyterian and Reformed Churches from the days of John Calvin, and very notably during the American Revolution, have been in the forefront in patriotism, liberty, and evangelism. Deeply conscious of our obligations to God and country, we, your brethren in the Lord, the Presbytery of Philadelphia, have deemed it our duty and privilege to send you this letter, with the request that if the way be clear it be read from the pulpit on Sabbath next, 22d instant, or as soon thereafter as possible.

That the great ends for which our Government was created and for which it exists may not fail, our people are solemnly urged to manifest their support of the Government in thought, word, and deed. In particular we make the following specific requests:

1. That our Presbyterian people continue instant in prayer, so that our spiritual channels may be kept deep and unobstructed; that public and private prayer be offered in our churches and homes for our President and all the officers of State, and for our Army and Navy, which stand in our stead on the line of battle.

2. That the American flag, the emblem of our national aspiration and freedom, be displayed on, or in, or both on and in our church and parish buildings.

3. That at least one patriotic hymn be sung in our churches and one in our Sunday schools each Sabbath day.

4. That patriotic services be held frequently, at which prayers should be fervent and humble.

5. That our societies of men, women, and young people be requested to align themselves with the Red Cross and other organizations and agencies looking to the comfort and convenience of our soldiers and sailors.

6. That our people practice every possible economy, thus helping to conserve the Nation's resources against the possible day of dire need. We must gird up our strength as one who would run a race.

7. That our able-bodied men offer themselves to their country for whatever services they are best suited to perform; that our pastors set their flock a worthy example in this respect as in others, volunteering not only as chaplains but to serve the Nation in whatever way their gifts may best fit them.

8. That while emphatically discountenancing any word or act of disloyalty, we carefully refrain from harsh criticism and bitter words to and concerning those in our midst who are of alien birth and are therefore under great stress of soul, loyal as most of them are to the country of their adoption, but sympathetic, in some measure at least, as they are to the land of their birth.

9. That we remember we have entered this war with no selfish motives, and solely for the sake of humanity; that oppression may be brought to an end; that our children may continue to possess that liberty which our forefathers bought for us with their blood and treasure; and that the door of hope may be left open for the downtrodden and oppressed of all lands.

10. That we pray Almighty God, if it be His divine will, to give victory to our forces and to those with them in this mighty struggle, and that the outcome of this victory shall be not the glory of any man or nation, but rather a deepened spiritual faith throughout the world.

11. That we exercise the Christian graces of patience and fortitude, looking and believing that in His own good time God will give the victory to democracy over imperialism; that in the noble language of Lincoln, "government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth," and that the establishment of a permanent and world-wide peace so eloquently urged by the President shall be not a dream of idealists but a fact known and enjoyed by all mankind.

In addition to the above recommendations to our people, it is the sense and will of the presbytery in session this the 19th day of April, A. D. 1917, in the Chambers-Wylie Memorial Church, that a copy of this letter be sent to each and every church and pastor within our bounds, and a copy to each of the following:

The President of the United States of America.

The Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America.

The governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The mayor of the city of Philadelphia.

The general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

And that a copy be furnished to each of the daily newspapers of our city.

For the Presbytery of Philadelphia,

ROBERT HUGH MORRIS, Moderator.
ROBERT HUNTER, Stated Clerk.

What Kind of an Army?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. BORLAND,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, the bill under discussion contains a provision recommended by the War Department for raising an army of a million men by selective conscription. Under this plan only so many men will be mustered into the service of the Government as are needed, and they will be equally distributed throughout the various States of the Union in proportion to population. Provision is also made for certain exempted classes and for the exemption of certain men from military duty where their work is more urgently needed in the agricultural and industrial activities of the country. In other words, it is a scientific system designed to make the highest possible use of our man power without confusion or injustice.

The bill also contains a provision, inserted by the committee, against the advice of the administration, for an optional enlistment of a volunteer force. I shall be constrained to vote to strike out this optional volunteer force from the bill, first, because I do not believe it is necessary; second, because I do not believe it will be successful; and third, I am sure that it would demoralize the plans for a draft and bring about inequalities and injustice. I can not see that it would benefit anyone except the comparatively few men in each State who desire to make a bid for political prominence by organizing these volunteer forces.

The best which has been said by the advocates of the volunteer system in favor of the committee provision is that it has been safeguarded in such a way as to be as near like uniform conscription as possible. In other words, it contains the same exemptions and limitations as contained in the War Department proposal, but this is quite different from the original plan of volunteer forces. We must not forget that there is ample opportunity now for the man who wants to enlist and serve as a private to volunteer either in the Regular Army or Marine Corps or the National Guard. The service in all of these branches has been made for the period of the war, so that there is no difference in the period of enlistment in any branch in which a man serves.

The Regular Army must be recruited up to 287,000 men. The Marine Corps has room for a large number, and the various States of the Union have full power under the recent decision of the Judge Advocate General to create additional units of the National Guard up to a total force of 625,000. If this does not give ample opportunity for any man who really wants to enlist and to volunteer his services as a private, I am at a loss to understand how the creation of a new organization, to be known as a volunteer army, could possibly afford him any better opportunities.

I believe that the volunteer system is wrong in theory and vicious in practice. Under the stimulus of enthusiasm it sends a great many men to the front who ought to be left at home, and it leaves a great many men at home who ought to be serving their country at the front. It contains an element of injustice and inequality which can not be eliminated. Why should we start with such a system which we know we must early abandon simply for the purpose of giving a few men a chance to play politics with this war?

Democracy demands that where there is an equality of right and opportunity there is also equality of duty and responsibility. It is the duty of Congress to see that this equality is enforced by effective legislation.
